George Smitherman has led the charge on this. He brought people from all over Ontario. On three occasions, George Smitherman asked this government to do what we're doing tonight, and they refused; they absolutely refused. This is a government caving in on its own budget bill. This is a whole part of the bill, part XXV. There are 12 sections of the budget bill. What the government is saying is that it doesn't even have confidence in its own ability to deliver a budget that's fair to working people in this province.

George Smitherman said this a month ago, and I will repeat it. He asked this House to go into committee of the whole on three occasions—three occasions—to remove these sections of the bill. What did the government say? They said no.

The Minister of Finance stood in her place in response to my colleague George Smitherman and told him that he was all wet. What are we doing now? Precisely what he said we should do.

The leader of the opposition, Dalton McGuinty, stood in this House two short weeks ago and demanded this of the Premier, demanded this of the Minister of Finance. Did they do it then? No. No, they didn't. But now they heed the warning.

There must be an election coming. They must have been getting more e-mails and letters than we were, from all over the province—from London, from Peterborough, from their own ridings—because you cannot attack pensioners and working people the way this government attempted to. It was unfair, wrong. George Smitherman and Dalton McGuinty pointed that out to you, and now you are withdrawing it.

Do you know what else is sad about this whole process? They time-allocated this bill on November 21. What does that mean? It means they stopped debate, they wouldn't allow committee hearings, they wouldn't allow third reading debate: the normal parliamentary processes that would have allowed the Legislature to deal with this appropriately and might have prevented the government from having some of the egg they have on their face tonight.

This is a flip-flop of almost unprecedented proportion. They are backing off from a fundamental part of their own budget. What an irony: the very day the Minister of Finance is giving an economic update, which updates us on her projections in the budget, we are faced with withdrawing the major portion of the government's budget bill—non-confidence in itself.

This means we should have an election sooner rather than later. There is no leadership. There is no direction. There is no understanding of the issues that working people in this province live with day in and day out. It was Dalton McGuinty and George Smitherman who led the charge on this, because they recognize the importance of this to working people.

So we supported this process, coming into committee of the whole tonight, to allow the government to essentially undo, remove, take out the major portion of its own budget bill. The government is acknowledging and paying witness to the fact that they don't even have confidence in their own ability to deliver a budget. On the very day of their economic statement, they withdraw the major section of the bill.

This is a victory for working people. This is a victory for people who stood up for their pension rights so that no large employer could go in and take out the surpluses unilaterally.

Make no mistake: this is a huge defeat for Ernie Eves and the rest of the crew on the Titanic, because this government is withdrawing a key component of its budget bill. It is rudderless, it is leaderless, and there is an alternative. There is an alternative that has put forward progressive, forward policies on education. It's Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party. There is an alternative that will give fair and good government to this province, that will balance all of our interests, and that's Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party.

It's time for an election when a government withdraws its own bill. Let's go to the people. I am confident they will choose Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals in the next provincial election.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I've got five minutes to run through a litany of government errors in judgment here. But before I get into the government errors in judgment, I want to take people back to events that actually happened 20 years ago.

People in the labour movement will know about this. People in the labour movement will know when Conrad Black purchased Dominion stores, not because he knew how to run a supermarket chain—the guy didn't even know how to run a fruit stand. He wasn't interested in running Dominion stores; he wanted to get his hands on Dominion stores and shut the operation down, because he realized there was a pension surplus. He literally bought the store chain to get at the pension surplus. He literally bought the store chain because he recognized he could pick up an awful lot of money by shutting down the pension plan, winding it down and taking the surplus.

As a result of Mr Conrad Black's nefarious activity, there were a number of court decisions in the 1980s pointing out that pension funds should not be open to raiding by employers; that employers shouldn't simply be able to close down the operation and then take the pension surplus that might result. Legislation was actually introduced and regulations were passed to that effect.

There has been a body of judicial decisions over the last 20 years that points more and more in the direction that workers, the people who have contributed to the pension plan, should have greater control over the pension plan and certainly should have greater control should there be a windup of the pension plan and a surplus result, or if there should be a surplus from time to time. After all, it's their money. It's their deferred wages.

But along comes the Conservative government this fall, and in this legislation not only would they have permitted the Conrad Black scenario again—where another nefarious employer could come in, take over an operation, shut it down and make off with the pension surplus—they actually wanted to take the law back even further than that. They wanted to give employers the capacity to look at a pension fund and, if there was an apparent surplus from time to time, reach in and take the apparent surplus, no matter what it might do to the pension fund in the longer term.

Let's call this what it would have been, or what the government tried to do: it would be pension robbery. It would be literally taking money away from those hard-working people who have contributed to their own pension and their retirement fund. It would be stealing money from people who are retired and who also have an interest in a surplus that might result in the pension fund.

This government was asked time and time again to sever this from the legislation, to sever these amendments and get rid of them. Their first excuse was that they couldn't sever. Well, what are we doing here today? We're severing it; something the government initially said they couldn't do.

I want to pay particular tribute here to those working men and women who have forced this government to back off, forced this government to do what it said it couldn't do. In particular, I want to pay tribute to Gilles Bisson, the member for Timmins-James Bay, who on November 5, along with my colleague Peter Kormos, raised this issue. I want to pay particular attention to the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, Wayne Samuelson, who on November 8 came here to the Legislature and held a press conference with my colleague to let the whole world know what kind of pension theft was taking place. I want to pay tribute to a couple of the Liberals who got on the bandwagon a couple of weeks later, after we made it an issue; Liberals who got on the bandwagon two weeks late, after they had discovered that someone had made it an issue.

This is a victory for the labour community, this is a victory for the trade union community, a victory for the OFL, a victory for those hard-working women and men across this province who let this government know that they would not put up with it. As a result, we see the government backing down, we see the government forced to do the right thing.

Interjections.

The First Deputy Chair: Order. Further debate.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): It's a pleasure for me to rise and make a few comments with regard to Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government.

I must point out that there seems to be an awful lot of confusion on the other side of the House. First of all, the Liberals get up and take credit for the government removing the thing. Then I hear that the NDP are the ones who should be commended for eliminating part XXV. If I were to observe from this side, I probably would have to side with the NDP, because I think they were the first ones to bring this issue to the House. I think the Liberals were asleep at the wheel.

One thing I would like to point out is that when the bill was introduced—this bill has quite a few sections, I must admit; there are many issues that we deal with, but—

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Flip-flop.

Mr Beaubien: —we're always accused of flip-flopping.

The First Deputy Chair: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr Beaubien: Who is calling the kettle black here? I think they should look in the mirror on the other side of the House.

We did consult with people prior to introducing the bill. People had some concerns once the bill was introduced, and we listened to the people. Consequently, we're reacting. If you want to call this a flip-flop, go right ahead. I think this is responsible government that we are showing today. We're not afraid to face you people at any time, anywhere.

With regard to the bill, let's look at some of the other issues we are dealing with. We're dealing with tax incentive zones. You people on the other side of the House today were asking questions about the economic activity in Ontario. We're trying to do something in order to encourage economic development in some areas that are somewhat economically challenged. I'm sure the member for Sault Ste Marie would support this type of motion. I know the member for Kingston and the Islands has a lot of difficulty supporting anything because all the good ideas come from that particular corner of the House.

With regard to the leader of the third party, he mentioned consultation. At least we have the guts to react when we listen to our constituents. I would ask you, when you introduced the social contract a few years ago, did you really listen to the people of Ontario? I don't think so. Maybe one or two individuals on that side, but there were not too many people.

So with this in mind, there is no doubt that we talked about not proclaiming part XXV of the bill, and consequently, if we're not going to proclaim it, I don't see anything wrong with taking it out of the bill. If you on the other side of the House consider that a major flip-flop, I don't think the electorate of the province will consider that a major flip-flop, because it is not. It is a concern they expressed to us—not only to me. I've had the opportunity to meet with labour leaders, with individual corporations in my riding, and some people had some concerns. There's no doubt that when there is concern, as a responsible government you should respond to the concerns of the people out there.

The First Deputy Chair: Order. Shall part XXV of the bill carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. The motion is declared lost.

Shall parts XXVI through XXX of the bill carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Shall schedule A of the bill carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Shall schedule B of the bill carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Shall the title carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Shall the bill, as amended, carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Shall I report the bill to the House? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Mr Chair, I move that we rise and report.

The First Deputy Chair: Shall the motion carry? All in favour will say "aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Mr Speaker, The committee of the whole begs to report one bill with certain amendments and asks leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Shall the report be received and adopted? All in favour will say

"aye." All opposed will say "nay." In my opinion the ayes have it.

TIME ALLOCATION (continued)

The Acting Speaker: According to the unanimous consent that we had agreed to, we will now divide the time—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, I think I can get consent that whatever time is remaining will be used first by the third party, then whatever is left will be used by us and at 5:50 the normal vote proceedings take place.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed? Agreed.

The member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I have a whole three minutes. I want to say that now that I have an opportunity to speak I want to talk about pension—no, I want to talk about funeral legislation.

I first of all want to bemoan the fact that yet again we find ourselves in a situation—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I need to be able to hear the member for Timmins-James Bay, and I really need your assistance so that we can conduct the remaining part of this afternoon with some degree of civility. The member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: I'll try that again. I was just saying that I yet again want to bemoan the fact that we have another time allocation in the House. Everything the government does, there's hardly a bill—I think there's not a bill in the House that has come before us that hasn't been time-allocated. At committee, we have the same thing. We have a process that we go through. For example, my good friend Marilyn Churley and I sat on two different committees today by way of time allocation. Here we are trying to deal with important bills, one on water privatization, mine having to do with consumer protection and a second bill on water privatization, and the government says, "We're going to do this by time allocation." So when my good friend Marilyn Churley tries to put forward some decent amendments to strengthen the bill, what have we got? We have a government that doesn't even give them the chance—not even a chance—to introduce the amendments. Why? Because the government time-allocates the bill. When I was in committee this morning trying to introduce amendments in regard to what was happening with consumer protection, we were again constrained by a time allocation motion. I've got to say—

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): It's a joke.

Mr Bisson: —not only is it a joke, it's really a disservice to the public. We're supposed to come to this House as honourable members from the government and opposition sides and try to strengthen legislation and to make proper decisions for the constituents we represent. But here's a government that by way of decree, of time allocation motion, says, "You're going to have basically three days of second reading of a bill. On the fourth day of the bill, we're going to have a time allocation debate," as we're having today, and if the government is really good, they'll time-allocate a little bit of committee time. They'll certainly time-allocate the time at clause-by-clause to be able to amend the bill.

I say there's no opportunity to deal with the committee when it comes to these bills. For example, on this particular bill having to do with funeral directors, there's no committee time. I have in my hand here about five letters from different organizations, everything from my good friends at the Federation of Independent Business to people from the Ontario Provincial Synod and other people: the chambers of commerce of the communities of, I think this is—it's not Timmins. I thought it was one of mine; I grabbed somebody else's. The opportunity is not there for those progressive organizations like the Federation of Independent Business to present their amendments to the House. So friends of ours didn't get a chance to speak, and I want to, for once, defend the independent business federation and say, "You didn't get a chance because this government time-allocated yet another bill."

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I think an important part of the debate is actually making a decision. That's why I'm pleased that this motion for time allocation will allow us to move forward to an important part of the political process, which is actually to vote and to make a decision and to find out where people stand. I know having to come to a decision and take a stand is frightening to many members of the opposition. It's not hard for the New Democrats, because they know where they stand. When we vote on things, it's interesting to know where the Liberals stand. They may have changed their mind; I don't know.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: Particularly the member from Hamilton will have to decide where he stands.

I think there are a whole lot of people around Ontario who are supporting this legislation. I know John Cole from my constituency, who operates a funeral services establishment, has written to Minister Hudak. Let me read the letter, if I could. Oh, this is actually from Laurie Cole, who is the president of Cole Funeral Services.

"As the president of a family-owned funeral home, I am writing to thank and congratulate you on the introduction of Bill 209...."

"As you know the industry has been seeking changes to existing legislation for some time now and speaking for my own company [we support] your efforts entirely...."

"In closing, I am looking forward to implementing these new changes, thus enabling us to offer the families we serve more choices for funeral, burial and cremation services."

It's signed by Laurie Cole, the president of Cole Funeral Services.

John Cole, whom I mentioned, who is an outstanding business person in Ottawa and someone who has made a tremendous contribution to our community with Pinecrest Remembrance Services, writes to Minister Hudak that he is also in support of this legislation.

There are still others from eastern Ontario, such as Brent Irvine of Irvine Funeral Home and Chapel in Brockville, Ontario. That's good news, and he certainly supports this important piece of legislation.

There are very many more: from the Simple Alternative Funeral Centres in Toronto, Ontario. There's Eileen Fitzpatrick, the president of Canadian Memorial Services, and they are supporting this important legislation.

This motion allows us to move from debate into decision mode. That's something that's welcomed not just by Minister Hudak but by Jon Clancy, who has been working very hard on this piece of legislation, who wants some information; and Paula Day, who has been working very hard today at the House to ensure—

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): And big Al MacDermid.

Hon Mr Baird: Big Al MacDermid, the minister from Niagara says.

So I look forward to finding out where people stand on this issue. Let's get on with the debate. Let's pass this bill at second reading and move on to other important initiatives for the people of Ontario, like the hydro bill, which we hope to call this evening, where we can cap hydro prices for consumers in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: That completes the time allocated for debate.

Mr Hudak has moved government notice of motion number 80. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1750 to 1800.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please stand one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (EMERGENCY VEHICLE SAFETY), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (SÉCURITÉ DES VÉHICULES DE SECOURS)

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 20, 2002 on the motion for second reading of Bill 191, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle / Projet de loi 191, Loi modifiant le Code de la route afin de garantir la sécurité des véhicules de secours arrêtés sur une voie publique et celle des personnes qui se trouvent à l'extérieur de tels véhicules.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Pursuant to the order of the House dated November 25, I am now required to put the question.

On October 24, Mr Stockwell moved second reading of Bill 191. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

"Pursuant to standing order 28(h), I'd like to request that the vote on Bill 191, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle, be deferred until December 5, 2002." So be it.

KEEPING THE PROMISE FOR A STRONG ECONOMY ACT (BUDGET MEASURES), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE RESPECT DE L'ENGAGEMENT D'ASSURER UNE ÉCONOMIE SAINTE (MESURES BUDGÉTAIRES)

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 19, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government / Projet de loi 198, Loi mettant en oeuvre certaines mesures budgétaires et d'autres initiatives du gouvernement.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Pursuant to the order of the House dated November 21, 2002, I am now required to put the question.

On November 7, Mrs Ecker moved second reading of Bill 198. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

"Pursuant to standing order 28(h), I'd like to request that the vote on Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government, be deferred until December 5, 2002," signed the Honourable Doug Galt, MPP, chief government whip. So be it.

ELECTRICITY PRICING, CONSERVATION AND SUPPLY ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'ÉTABLISSEMENT DU PRIX DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ, LA CONSERVATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ ET L'APPROVISIONNEMENT EN ÉLECTRICITÉ

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 2, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity / Projet de loi 210, Loi modifiant diverses lois en ce qui concerne l'établissement du prix de l'électricité, la conservation de l'électricité et l'approvisionnement en électricité et traitant d'autres questions liées à l'électricité.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Maybe we'd like to take a few minutes and anybody that wants to yell back and forth, just go ahead and do that, and then we'll get on with the business.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: OK, now you've had that. I'd like your attention voluntarily in here, or somewhere else, otherwise.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated December 3, 2002, I'm now required to put the question.

On November 27, Mr Baird moved second reading of Bill 210. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: No, I'm sorry. That time has passed. We're on to something else now. There's no yelling back and forth.

"Pursuant to standing order 28(h), I'd like to request that the vote on Bill 210, An Act to amend various acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity, be deferred until December 5, 2002," signed the Honourable Doug Galt, MPP, chief government whip. So be it.

The Chair recognizes the minister from Nepean-Carleton.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I am so impressed that every New Democrat is here in the House tonight that I'm prepared to stay until 9:30 and debate. Otherwise, if there's not agreement to do that, I'd ask for unanimous consent to call Bill 210 for third reading debate.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Baird: Oh, sorry. I can't do that.

I move adjournment of the House, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Baird has moved adjournment of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. The motion is carried.

That being the business of the House for tonight, this House stands adjourned until 10 am tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 1852.

RENT FREEZE AND RENT CONTROL ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE GEL ET LE CONTRÔLE DES LOYERS

Mr Prue moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 215, An Act to amend the Tenant Protection Act, 1997 / Projet de loi 215, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la protection des locataires.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): According to the standing orders, the member has 10 minutes to make his presentation, and then we'll go in rotation.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): This bill does two things: first of all, it implements a two-year rent freeze for the tenants of the province of Ontario; second, it stops the practice of vacancy decontrol whereby when a person leaves an apartment or tenancy and it becomes vacant, the landlord can charge whatever the market will bear.

The policies of this government have been a total disaster when it comes to housing since the Tenant Protection Act and indeed even before that, since 1995. In this province since 1995 there has been virtually no affordable housing built in any of Ontario's major cities, since the coming to power of this government. People with modest incomes are finding it increasingly difficult to find a place to live.

In 1997, the Tenant Protection Act was proclaimed. Part of the hallmark of that act was to allow for vacancy decontrol, which, as I have described, would allow the market to dictate how much an apartment rent could be increased whenever a tenant moves out of a unit and allows it to become vacant. As a result of that, rents have skyrocketed throughout Ontario's major cities, and apartments which at one stage were formerly affordable to the vast majority of Ontarians have now become increasingly unaffordable.

Added to this, the Tenant Protection Act allowed for above-guideline increases, which in many, many cases for people who reside in Ontario have forced rents above the rate set by statute each year at which rents would normally be allowed to rise. Rents have gone up across the board in major cities like Toronto by an enormous amount. Since 1997 in the city of Toronto, or the case management area of Toronto, rents have increased by $226 on average. This is an unconscionable amount of money for people on fixed or moderate incomes to be forced to pay. It is similar in other major cities. The cities of Ottawa, London, Peterborough, all the area around the greater Toronto area, have seen increases very similar to those being experienced in Toronto.

Just so people understand what above-guidelines increases are, the guideline is set yearly by the province of Ontario and is no secret. It usually includes the cost of inflation for the year before plus 2%. So if inflation is at 2%, you can expect a guideline of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 4%. But I would suggest that setting a guideline of 4%—or 5% for next year because inflation is starting to creep up a little—is not going to solve the issue.

People cannot and can no longer afford the kind of rents being charged in this province. In fact, if you look at what the average rents are—and I've got some of the average rents. This includes all units: one-, two- and three-bedroom all mixed together. If you look, in Toronto central the average rent is now $1,075, in Etobicoke it's $1,055, in Scarborough it's $1,018, in the northeast portion of North York it's $1,155, in Mississauga it's $1,046, in the northeast section of Mississauga it's $1,050, in Brampton it's $1,070, and in Oakville it's $1,001. That's just to give a few examples of what average rents have become in and around the Toronto area.

There is also the problem of above-guideline increases. Tenants all over this province a few years ago were forced to pay money because landlords did not protect themselves during the energy spikes. When natural gas prices went up, tenants were required to pay for those. When natural gas prices, however, went back down, tenants were not reimbursed, because the Tenant Protection Act does not allow for costs no longer borne. The tenants continue to pay.

This government is attempting to allow the continuance of the problem of above-guideline increases. Quite recently, the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs met with housing advocates in Ontario to talk about capping above-guideline increases—not doing away with them but capping them at 1%; a hard cap, as she calls it. Quite frankly, this is not fair, because there is no provision in the law to take out those costs which are no longer borne. You cannot cap above-guideline increases at 1% and instruct people to continue to pay that year in and year out even when those costs are no longer borne.

Much has recently been made by the government and the landlords' lobby that costs are going to start coming down because vacancy rates are increasing. This, I would suggest to all members of this House, is not a logical argument. Vacancy rates are starting to go up in some of Ontario's major cities, but, with the greatest of respect, this does not address the issue. The issue is that the vacancy rates are going up on those apartments above $1,200 to $1,500 to $1,700 in rent. People who can afford to pay $1,700 in rent are finding that home ownership is not an onerous task. If they can afford $1,700 per month to rent a one- or two-bedroom apartment, then they can afford $1,700 a month to carry a mortgage.

But this does not hold true for those people who are renting in the $700 to $800 to $1,000 range. They cannot afford the mortgage, and their rents are not coming down. They are continuing to be hurt by above-guideline increases. They are continuing to be hurt by the $226 that they have been paying over and above what they paid five years ago, and their rents will continue to climb, because the vacancy rate at the level below $1,000 in the case management area of Toronto is and continues to be around 1.5%, which is not enough to affect those rents. Therefore, the people who are least able to afford the rents are going to see their rents continue to increase at amounts above the inflation rate. Those who are able to pay any increase like that are taking the option of buying into luxury condominiums or homes and the urban sprawl that comes with them.

The policy is simply bad. What we need in Ontario is a cooling-off period, particularly for those people of low to modest income. Those people are the ones who require our protection. Those are the people who require an opportunity to get their lives back in order, to get their finances back in order, and it is to them particularly that we owe a cooling-off period. If landlords are now saying that they are able to reduce the increases, then surely it will not be a problem for the landlords if we impose this rent freeze at this time. Equally, it should not be a problem for landlords with vacancy decontrol. If the numbers of apartments are becoming more and more available due to the building boom of high-end condominiums and homes, then surely landlords would not be seeking the increases in any event.

We are finding that so, so many of the people of modest income are being forced into paying rents they can no longer afford. Recently, a woman in her 80s came into my constituency office with tears in her eyes. She was being stuck with another increase, another increase which to her was astronomical. It was only at the guideline, but this followed years of 4%, 5% and 8% increases, and she no longer had the money to stay in her apartment. She did not know what to do. This government has not done anything to help her. She wanted to know how to fight. I told her to watch today how members of all three parties are going to deal with a problem that is now singularly beyond her control.

I would invite all members to think of your constituents. I would invite you particularly to think of the poorest ones, who cannot afford the rent and who cannot afford for the landlord to increase their rent in the coming years, and vote for this bill.

Hon Tina R. Molinari (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): It's my pleasure to speak on Bill 215 today. I'm going to be speaking against the bill and I'll explain why.

The Tenant Protection Act is very important legislation in Ontario. It establishes an annual rent increase guideline to protect tenants against rent increases, and it allows landlords to set rents at market value when the unit becomes vacant. In other words, it's fair to the tenants and it's fair to the landlords. What Bill 215 would do is undermine that balance. In fact, Bill 215 would take us back to the days when new rental housing was scarce and existing housing stock was falling apart, requiring billions of dollars in repair. That's not the direction this government wants to go.

Let me remind the House why our government passed the Tenant Protection Act. Rent controls discouraged new private rental construction in Ontario for more than two decades. They created a massive bureaucracy, which meant it took months to resolve basic disputes between tenants and property owners, and they led to the neglect of the rental housing stock.

Let's remember that under the former Rent Control Act, some rental buildings had hundreds of outstanding work orders against them. It was our job as a government to change that environment, so we set out to design legislation that would protect tenants from unfair rent increases and arbitrary evictions, help create a climate in which people would invest in rental housing, streamline administration and dispute resolution and improve building maintenance.

Since its implementation four years ago, the Tenant Protection Act has made headway in each of these three goals. We are now seeing the healthy vacancy rates in many communities, meaning tenants in these areas have better housing options, and rent increases are in check. More than $283 million has been invested in capital repairs, upgrades and maintenance in the repair of rental units across this province. Rental starts have increased substantially. In fact, between 1995 and 2001 the number of rental units under construction jumped by almost 500%, to 2,717 from 550, and there were more than 3,100 rental starts between January and October 2002. We don't want to reverse these trends. We don't want to return to the days of no private new construction and the billion-dollar boondoggles of the previous two governments. The honourable member from Beaches-East York says he has introduced this bill in the interests of tenants, but tenants are not protected when rental housing starts are at a standstill.

I have talked about the primary benefits of the act, how it limits arbitrary rent increases, encourages new rental starts and improves maintenance, but there are other benefits worth mentioning here at this time. The act also preserves tenure protection for tenants. It includes strong anti-harassment provisions that protect both tenants and landlords. It allows tenants to apply for relief from the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal, and for abatement in rent in cases where there has been harassment.

In addition, the Tenant Protection Act provides for automatic rent reductions where municipal property taxes have been decreased. It increases the powers of municipalities to enforce property standards bylaws, and with the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal, it gives tenants and landlords an efficient venue for resolving their disputes through mediation and adjudication.

The Tenant Protection Act ensures that tenants are protected and that landlords can protect their investments and effectively maintain their properties. Bill 215 is a step backwards. It asks us to undo the good work that's been done with the Tenant Protection Act and all the improvements that are now happening with all our buildings.

Mr Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this bill today, and I would encourage the members of the House to seriously consider how they vote on this issue. We don't want to go back to the days of rent increases and rent control. When they talk about rent control, they are out of control.

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): I'm certainly pleased to speak to this legislation this morning. I've looked at it and thought I would go through and take a look at the Web site of the party of the member who brought this forward, and I have to be honest with you: I'm a little confused right now. This morning I downloaded the NDP policy on rent control from their Web site, and it says, "Lower rents for Ontario tenants? The NDP says, 'Roll back rents and bring in rent control.'" Then I downloaded another one from the NDP, and it says, "The NDP says, 'Freeze rents and bring in rent control.'"

So I'm a little bit confused as to where the party actually stands on this. The member this morning brings in a resolution that says to freeze rents. I think he ran on the commitment to roll back rents in the by-election. And as of this morning, his Web site still says that the NDP is going to roll back rents. I really don't know which part of it to believe. Maybe my colleague can clarify later if their position today is to roll back rents or freeze rents. Frankly, this is cute political grandstanding. We understand that. The reality is that you need a plan that's going to be workable; you need a plan that is going to actually help tenants in Ontario.

Let's just make it clear that during the time period the NDP was in power, rents went up by about 23% for tenants. So if tenants are looking to the NDP for protection, they certainly had their chance in their time in government to do that. Did we see rent freezes under the NDP government? I don't remember that, no. Did we see rollbacks under the NDP government? No, I don't remember that. So clearly, it becomes a question of credibility. When you have the luxury of knowing you're not going to have the opportunity or the possibility of governing, you can say anything you want; you can run on anything you want.

What I ask tenants across Ontario is, do you really think in your heart of hearts, regardless of what they promise you, that Howard Hampton and this bunch over here are going to form the next government of Ontario? They can answer that question in their own minds. They don't have to answer it to me or anyone else. Are they going to realistically implement what would be a disastrous plan?

Like this government here, the Tories—we have two extreme positions that do not meet the needs of tenants. You've got an unrealistic, unworkable plan on this side from the NDP and then, of course, you've got a government that for seven years has been in the back pocket of developers. They brought in a plan that shafted tenants across Ontario. They brought in this vacancy decontrol, as they call it. They went to their friends, the landlords, the developers, and said, "How can we best help you?" and they drafted a plan and the Tories introduced it. So now tenants in Ontario, under the Eves-Harris government, when you leave your apartment unit, when you move to a new unit, have absolutely no protection at all. The only protection you have is the generosity of the developer and the landlord. That is what they have done.

This has been the worst case. This has been a gift for their friends by the government at the expense of tenants. Tenants have felt trapped in their apartments under the Tory government plan, because if they dared move, their new unit would be under absolutely no control whatsoever and only at the whim of the landlord or the developer. So they've stayed in substandard conditions and often they've been pushed out by unscrupulous landlords, forced out so they can rent that same unit for a much higher rent. That's the legacy of the Tory government. Developers and landlords never had it so good in this province as they did under the Harris-Eves government.

Both of those positions are not workable. I want to spend a couple of minutes talking about what a real plan is for dealing with this problem in Ontario, and that is the plan unveiled by my leader Dalton McGuinty, when it comes to fixing housing. We understand there's a balance necessary. We understand that you need a balance, that in order to deal with the affordable housing crisis there has to be a balanced plan in place, a plan that would have real rent controls, that would ensure that the unfair and illegal increases faced under the Tory government will not happen. A Dalton McGuinty government, within a year, will bring in legislation that will be fair, rent controls that will be fair, and we will protect tenants.

That's only one part of this puzzle. This government signed what is really a sham, a hoax of a deal, with the federal government to bring new money in. The federal government came to the table and said, "We will put in $245 million of new money." This government signed this phony deal. However, understand this: in the way they signed this agreement and the way they're implementing it, not one new cent of provincial money will go into housing in Ontario with the federal deal that the Tories signed, because they're asking the municipalities to put in their portion of it. There's no new money. Under a McGuinty government, we have committed to matching the funds the federal government puts in—new money and land—in order to ensure that we take full advantage, and we will ensure there are 20,000 new units on the market as a result of our co-operation with the federal government and the municipalities.

This plan that the NDP has will not bring anything new on the market, and we know clearly what this government has done since 1995. They've walked away from any involvement in non-profit housing. Clearly, we are going to ensure that within the first mandate, 20,000 new units come on the market. We're also going to do what the Tories promised in 1995—another promise made, promise kept in the Mickey Mouse revolution. They said that they were going to bring in a shelter allowance.

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Whatever happened to that?

Mr Agostino: What happened to that promise? They said they were going to bring in a shelter allowance to help tenants, working people who are at the lower end of the economic scale, who were having a tough time paying their rent. They haven't done it. We're going to do it. We have committed; Dalton McGuinty has committed. We're going to bring in a shelter allowance for 35,000 low-wage earners in Ontario to help them. We're going to ensure that these folks can use that allowance and find a place to live. We're going to build more housing. We're going to have rent controls. It is part of a package; it is not in isolation.

We also understand that people sometimes struggle to pay their rent from month to month, and under the Eves government, Tory government rules, evictions are very common for $500, $600 or $700 in rent that you haven't been able to pay because you've been sick, you've lost your job or other situations have come up. We're going to establish a rent loan bank in Ontario. We're going to put $10 million into this so that people can apply and come forward and say, "I'm struggling, I can't pay. Here's the reason why." We're going to help you.

Interjection: They did it in the city of Toronto.

Mr Agostino: It has worked to some degree. As we look at this package—

Interjection.

Mr Agostino: Yes, I understand that my colleagues across the floor have a problem with helping people not get evicted. I understand that. Because if you evict them, then your landlord and developer friends can simply turn around and hike the rents. I understand that's what you want. That's not what we want.

My time on this issue is limited. I am sharing with my colleague Mr Caplan, so he's going to go on more. But let me tell you that clearly the NDP plan is unrealistic and unworkable. They ain't going to govern. I'm telling tenants, don't listen to what they have to say. You've seen what the Tories have done to you. There's only one plan, and it's Dalton McGuinty's plan for housing, to fix this problem in Ontario.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I would say, with all due respect to the member for Hamilton East, that's what they said in 1990, too, before the election, that the NDP didn't have a chance of winning government, and we certainly did. I would say to all members that, first of all—

Mr Agostino: They won't make that mistake again.

Ms Churley: He's getting scared over there, as they go down in the polls and we go up.

Laughter.

Ms Churley: The reality is, though, as you laugh at that, I would say to all of the tenants out there, Mr Agostino was not in this House when we took over government after the Liberals had reigned and rents were going up 30% to 50%. There was a crisis in our housing market out there, and the NDP came in with a real rent control plan—not a balanced plan, as the Liberals like to talk about. They didn't support it because it wasn't balanced enough. In some issues, you've got to pick sides. Let me tell you, the NDP, while in government, picked sides. We picked the side of the tenants and we brought in real rent control, tough rent control, the toughest rent control in North America, which the Liberals and the Tories did not support.

They're saying the same thing today: they will bring in a balanced piece of legislation. Let me tell you what "a balanced piece of legislation" from the Liberals means. I would say to tenants, be very wary of Liberal promises on rent control, because as I already said, when they were in government, rents went up from 30% to 50%. And not only that, but the Liberals' new plan, which they're going to be bringing in to the election—are you ready for this?—has received the endorsement of ResREIT CEO Dino Chiesa. Do you know what that is? It's Toronto's largest private sector landlord. The former head of Ontario's landlord lobby acts as McGuinty's chief of staff. And you want to know why their so-called tenant protection legislation is balanced? Listen closely. Be wary, because the Liberals promise no rent controls if vacancy rates rise to a reasonable level. Doesn't that sound just like the Tory plan? That means tenants in many Ontario communities will be worse off than even under the Conservatives. Analyze this plan. You will see it.

The Liberals also seem to be under the illusion, just like the government, that the private sector will build affordable housing in low-vacancy, high-rent communities like Toronto and Ottawa. We were laughing hysterically when a Tory member was speaking about that very issue, because the experience under the Tory legislation of the past four years would surely put that notion to rest.

These Liberals get up and laugh at the NDP, when they're the ones, along with the Tories, who voted against the NDP real rent control. Now they sit there laughing and saying, "We've got a plan for the tenants in Ontario." With the plan they have—just like the Tories—they're going right into the pockets of the developers. The reason they get up and laugh today is because they know it, and they should be ashamed of themselves. You are not going to fool the tenants of this province with your crummy piece of legislation to try to deal with a really serious problem in this province.

You come to my riding and you talk to the seniors in my riding.

Mr Agostino: Don't lecture me. I've got more tenants—

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Hamilton East, come to order.

Ms Churley: They need real rent control. They need a freeze on rents and they need it now. You should stop laughing today—

Mr Agostino: Come to my riding.

The Deputy Speaker: I will not warn the member for Hamilton East again.

Ms Churley: —and agree with the NDP and support this freeze.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I'm naming the member for Hamilton East, Mr Agostino.

Mr Agostino was escorted from the chamber.

Ms Churley: I'm done.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford):

It's certainly my pleasure to speak on this proposed bill, Bill 215. In essence, the bill proposes to amend the Tenant Protection Act, 1997, to establish a two-year rent freeze and to eliminate vacancy decontrol. The rent freeze they're looking for is from December 1, 2002, to November 30, 2004. This is a very difficult issue. We've heard from the Liberal side and the NDP side. It's a balancing issue in terms of landlords and tenants. That's been going on for many, many years.

In our view, the Tenant Protection Act is fair for both tenants and landlords. It provides strong tenant protection and allows landlords to operate and adequately maintain their properties. We do have a rent control system in this province in terms of fairness to the tenants and also to landlords in terms of the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal, in terms of very clear rules and regulations, in terms of how rents are increased, and how tenants can seek protection and how landlords can seek to increase safety and improve the buildings in line with these guidelines.

So we have a regulatory system with respect to rent control and it's been in place for many years. Because there was a vacancy problem with respect to rental units, we made some subtle changes with respect to ensuring that there would be an increase in construction with respect to rental units, and in fact, that's what is happening. It has been positive with respect to increasing the inventory which is needed out there. We don't need any more controls with respect to the rental industry because, quite frankly, some people could tell you that it's more than adequately controlled.

I was listening to the member from Hamilton East outlining the Liberal plan. I don't know how much money this is going to cost the province, but I certainly can see that based on the Peterson's government approach to the rental industry, it's going to increase taxes and it's certainly going to cost a lot of money with respect to what they're talking about.

They've got a number of areas they're talking about. They're going to bring in rent controls. There are already rental controls out there in terms of the rent control system. What are they talking about?

The second thing is they're going to bring in around 20,000 new units with respect to that. We don't know how they're going to do that, but I think they'll be talking to their developer friends in terms of how that's going to be done. They've probably already figured out how that's going to be done with respect to how they're going to bring those on. Certainly any developer that was closely aligned with the Peterson government benefited by some of the nonsense that went on with respect to making sure that units out there were adequately paid for. They also have this shelter allowance program that they're going to come up with for 35,000 individuals. Then we also have this rental fund, which is going to be $10 million in terms of a part of their program.

What we're talking about here is, who is going to benefit from that? Obviously that money is going to go into the pockets of developers. That's where it always ends up going. What we're here to do is make sure that there is an adequate supply of rental housing out there to make sure that there are fair prices and let the market work.

The market is working. The number of new rental units being built has also increased as landlords have incentive to develop new housing stock. This creates a balanced market with fair rental prices. This is again a positive situation for tenants.

In my area of Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, we have affordable housing and the rental vacancy rates have increased significantly. That's because of the policies that are in place in terms of fair housing.

In Toronto, the condo boom—I understand that in July of this year there were building permits sent out for over 60,000 new condo units in Toronto—has resulted in people leaving their rented units to go into these condo units, which they can afford to pay for, resulting in a very significant vacancy rate out there. When you have a significant vacancy rate, landlords have to adapt to the market out there in terms of making sure their rents are fair. Toronto has benefited by a condo boom since 1996 and it continues.

Landlords are now reinvesting in their buildings. The Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal reports that up to $80 million annually is being invested by landlords in their rental housing properties. Only $2.5 million was spent by landlords in the final year that the previous legislation was in effect. It doesn't take a lot of imagination to see how low spending on maintenance would lead to deteriorating housing units.

I want to close because I want to let my friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka speak. But the bottom line is that the market forces are in play and they're ensuring there are rental vacancies out there. We do not need to make any of these changes, because we do have a very regulated rental housing industry and it seems to be coming around with respect to having landlords invest in new properties.

Mr Caplan: I appreciate the chance to speak to Bill 215. I want to cast my mind back to a couple of months ago. I was out campaigning with Bob Hunter, the Liberal candidate in the Beaches-East York by-election. I remember that Michael Prue, the candidate for the New Democrats, was talking about rent rollbacks. What happened? Why has he changed his mind about rent rollbacks? It's now a two-year rent freeze, and then, God knows what happens after that. Was it the fact that a rent rollback was one of the most impractical suggestions that the NDP has ever made? I think that may be it: a move that would kill any hope for development of rental housing in Ontario, probably, although it still remains an option in the policy document posted on their Web site. Here you have a case of the NDP saying one thing in one place and saying something different in another place. I don't think they have a real policy when it comes to protecting tenants, when it comes to having a well-thought-out plan.

It's also interesting that my colleague is talking tough about rent controls. It was only a few short months ago that the leader of his party was speaking at the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. He said that there would be flexibility in the rent control system imposed by the NDP. In fact, I have right here his remarks from AMO on August 20, where he said, we will "implement a two-year rent freeze and re-establish rent control with some exceptions if the vacancy rate was higher than 3%." Certainly a different story than what we're hearing today, what we heard back in the Beaches-East York by-election and what we just heard from the member for Toronto-Danforth. It's interesting that the members aren't going to talk about that part of their plan today.

As an aside, it's now interesting that Michael Prue, the member for Beaches-East York, thinks that rents are at an acceptable level. He wants to freeze them at today's level. If he didn't, he wouldn't have changed his position on a rent rollback and introduced a bill to freeze rents at today's level.

It's nice to see the NDP is following our lead on some of the real reforms needed to the Tenant Protection Act. Members will recall several bills that I have proposed in this House. First there was Bill 36, which would have made some real and needed changes to the operation of the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal, matters involving security of tenancy, evictions, arrears and damages. Notice of hearings would have been sent directly to tenants by the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal instead of depending on delivery by landlords. Credit records of tenants would have been updated when payments were made in arrears or eviction orders withdrawn, contrary to the practice now. Eviction orders not executed would expire after six months. In addition, maximum rent would be eliminated entirely.

1040

Next I introduced a bill called the Affordable Housing Incentives Act. It was because members of the Liberal caucus realized that what we really need here is reasonable and strong tenant protection and a workable strategy for the development of new rental housing. That is ultimately one of the best protections tenants can have: to have some consumer choice and ability to get into some new low-cost, affordable housing. I introduced this bill to allow municipalities to offer incentives for the creation of affordable rental housing. I want to give credit where credit is due: I was pleased that the government did adopt this measure by regulation through the Municipal Act, and I do want to put that on the record.

But I wasn't finished there. I introduced Bill 134 and we debated it in this House. Bill 134 would bring back costs-no-longer-borne provisions, in fact a real rent reduction for tenants in the areas of above-guideline rent increases. It is a measure that would have given tenants some real relief. I'm surprised that my colleague from Beaches-East York didn't introduce it in his bill today. It was relief based on decreasing costs for landlords, not an arbitrary decision to freeze rents for a time, really based on nothing except the fact that those are the rents in place today.

Nowhere in Bill 215 is the issue of these permanent, above-guideline rent increases that tenants are facing and are really struggling with. If the member for Beaches-East York wanted to be constructive in the policy about-face he's doing today, maybe he should have thought of reintroducing the suggestions around costs no longer borne. Even the government is rumoured to be contemplating my changes, the provisions I put in Bill 134—which they already defeated, by the way. Maybe the member for Beaches-East York should be thinking about that when he talks about the need for tenants to get some real rent relief.

I want to take a couple of moments, because I don't have very long, to remind the House that there is a well-thought-out, doable, workable plan here in the province of Ontario, a plan that will bring balance to the rental market and will actually build some housing, and that is the Ontario Liberal Growing Strong Communities plan. It is a good plan, it is a smart plan, it is a bold plan, it is an ambitious plan, and I'm proud to stand behind it and talk a bit about it here today.

We're committed to increasing the investment in affordable housing by partnering with the federal government to provide affordable housing for 20,000 families—$250 million, matching the federal contribution. We're also committed to making government-owned land available for affordable housing, providing a housing allowance for 35,000 low-income families, ensuring real rent control protection for tenants, establishing a provincial rent bank, and establishing the Ontario mortgage and housing partnership.

These measures are reasonable and doable. Let's talk about what some of them would mean for tenants. We will repeal the Harris-Eves government Tenant Protection Act. We will bring back real rent control. We will get rid of vacancy decontrol; it will be gone. We will always protect tenants. Where there are low vacancy levels, tenants will be protected by real rent controls, and when there are high vacancy levels, tenants will be protected by having choice, by having a market that suppresses rent increases below those permitted by rent control. Our new tenant protection law will protect tenants, in situations of high vacancy levels, against unscrupulous landlords who attempt economic eviction by way of selective and excessive rent increases. Rent controls will remain in place whenever vacancy rates are below the threshold at which tenants have real choice.

It is a comprehensive plan. It's a smart plan, an ambitious and doable one.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I really was looking forward to participating in this debate because, as my colleague knows, I used to be the housing critic and was a member of the NDP government that brought in real rent control.

Let's just put this debate into perspective. What the member for Beaches-East York is trying to do is institute a two-year rent freeze because of what's happening in the market. We've got rents going through the roof. People who can't afford to keep their apartments are moving out to cheaper accommodations because they can't afford the increases on top of everything else that's going on in their lives, like hydro and gas increases.

The second thing the member wants to do is put an end to what the Conservatives have developed, which is vacancy decontrols; that is to say, there's no rent control on a unit once the tenant moves away. So let's say the rent is $700 a month for an apartment in downtown Timmins. There's rent control on it—a form of rent control that is pretty weak, mind you—as long as a person lives in it. But if the person moves away, the landlord can jack it up to $1,200 a month and there's absolutely nothing wrong with that, according to what the Tories have done. We're opposed to that, and that's why my good friend the member for Beaches-East York, who is our municipal affairs and housing critic, has put forward this idea of saying, "Let's scrap vacancy decontrol."

How did we get into this mess in the first place? Let's start from the beginning. Through the 1970s, and especially into the 1980s, rents were skyrocketing. They were doing basically what they're doing now. There was a hue and cry from the public, from cities and communities across Ontario, that said, "We call on the provincial government to do something, because people can't afford to pay their rent." You were having 10%, 15% and 25% increases in one year, and as high as 50% in some cases, because there was a shortage of apartments available and landlords were taking advantage of what was a short market. As a result, our party, the New Democratic Party of Ontario, led first by Stephen Lewis and then by Bob Rae, put a lot of pressure on the Conservative governments to put in place a form of rent control. Rent control was instituted in this province. It was weak at the time, but nonetheless it was a form of rent control put in by the Davis Tories.

When we became the government in 1990, we instituted a real form of rent control that said there was an absolute cap on how much people were able to raise rents, and the only time people were allowed to go above the cap was if serious repairs had to be done to the building, and then they were only temporary. So the situation was that you had an absolute cap on how much people's rents were allowed to go up under NDP rent control. The only time the landlord was allowed to go over that was, let's say, if the roof needed repairs. They would cost how much a roof was and put that into the rent for a period of three, four or five years in order to recoup it, but then that charge came off your rent. So you had real rent control.

Who voted against that? The Liberals. At the time, the leader of the Liberal Party was Mrs McLeod, the member for Thunder Bay. The Liberals stood up and opposed real rent control along with the Tories. They fought us tooth and nail. They were saying this was bad, this was terrible, we were doing a disservice to the public of Ontario. But the reality is that the only time we had real rent control in this province was the five years when the Bob Rae NDP government was in place. Who fought against that every step of the way? It was the Liberal caucus along with the Tories.

So the Tories came to power, scrapped our rent control legislation and put in vacancy decontrol. And now we've got the Liberals, who basically have moved over to where the Tories are on the issue. At one time they at least purported to be somewhat progressive on rent control, but now when we look at the Liberal plan on rent control, what are they calling for? They're saying, first of all, that if the market is such that there's a reasonable availability of rental units on the market, they would remove rent control altogether. They're advocating that there need not be any rent control system in a market such as Toronto.

Under the legislation they would like to bring forward, if there's vacancy in the units available in the city like Toronto or anywhere else, they argue, "Take rent controls out." The Liberals are standing here saying, "Look at what the NDP is proposing on rent control." We have a plan that speaks to tenants. We're clear about what side of the debate we fall on. We're not trying to be on both sides of the same issue at the same time. The Liberals go into one room with their landlord-developer buddies, where they get the big cheques for their campaign, and say, "Don't worry, we're going to be good to you landlords." Then they run off to the rent control meetings and say, "Don't worry, we're with you, because we believe in tenants and we want to do everything right for tenants." They've got a policy that speaks to both sides, to both groups at the same time. I say that's duplicitous. At least I know what the Tories are saying.

The Tories have clearly chosen which side of this debate they come down on. They have a philosophical belief that there shouldn't be rent controls in many instances, and they're clear about that. I disagree, but at least I understand where the Tories are coming from. But the Liberals want to snuggle up to the developers, so they've got a line in their policy that says, "Don't worry, if vacancy rates rise there won't be rent control. By the way, can you send me that big $10,000 cheque for my campaign?" And all those developers, of which the Liberals are good friends, write those cheques and send them off to the Liberal caucus. There's not a snowball's chance that we're going to get a cheque from the landlord component of it, because we're clearly on the side of the tenants.

What we're saying by way of this legislation this morning is that a larger debate has to happen when it comes to re-instituting a rent control system. But we don't believe we could have done that by way of this motion this morning, because we know the government is philosophically opposed to rent control. So we're calling for the same two things—it's very simple—that the city of Toronto has called for; the ones who are in the middle of this crisis of rental units took the same position as our caucus. Initially, the Toronto city council said, "Let's have a rent rollback." We agreed with that, because we thought that if the city of Toronto thinks it's not a bad idea and it's workable in Toronto, it's something we're prepared to look at. On further view of the thing, the city of Toronto said, "We'd like to be able to do the rent rollback, but that may be difficult, so we believe there should be a rent freeze," and that's the position we're taking.

So my good friend Mr Prue, who is the former mayor of East York, brings forward this thing to say, "Let's have a two-year rent freeze, so we can at least freeze the situation today so that when an election happens sometime between now and the next 14 or 16 months, we're able to put in place legislation as a New Democratic government, or it there's a minority Parliament here we'll have the influence to institute real rent control." The second portion is to at least get rid of vacancy decontrol so we don't have skyrocketing rents in this province.

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I'm very pleased to join the debate today on private member's Bill 215, put forward by the member from Beaches-East York. A couple of the key features, as pointed out by the member from Timmins-James Bay, are that he's talking about a two-year rent freeze and also that the lawful rent for a rental unit is not affected by the rental unit becoming vacant or becoming occupied by any tenant. Those are a couple of the key points.

I think back to the days when I was at Ryerson and my economics professor talked a lot about rent controls. My economics professor was Harry Pope, who, I'd like to point out to the third party, was a former NDP candidate, and an excellent professor I might add. His lesson was that rent controls create shortages, and I remember that very clearly. If you have rent controls, the result is that you have fewer apartments being built and you end up with shortages.

I think what we're seeing currently is that we actually have a pretty good vacancy rate. I'm looking at today's Toronto Star and articles in the last few days showing that 25 of every 1,000 apartments in the Toronto area are vacant at this time. That's the highest vacancy rate since 1972. I think this is a good thing that's happened under the current system, and the current system does have some balance in it.

I'll quote from today's article about the vacancy rate and just how hard it is to get people to rent apartments right now: "'You do whatever it takes to try to get these apartments rented,' says Robert Herman of Pace Properties, which owns and manages about 1,000 units in the Greater Toronto Area. Besides lowering rents by up to $100, there's been an emphasis on things such as changing kitchen cupboards, providing microwaves, installing ceiling fans at its properties, which run the gamut from low- to high-end rentals. 'The biggest incentive is lowering the rent and then the next step is doing whatever you can to entice people.' ... 'The market is the loosest we've seen in modern history. Not since the early 1970s have we seen rates like this and landlords competing for tenants,' says Vince Brescia, president of the Fair Rental Policy Organization.... In some cases the phenomenon is prompting landlords to drop rents by up to $200 a month, in addition to providing a slew of perks.... 'I've been managing buildings in Toronto for 20 years, and we've never had to put the effort into renting apartments that we do today,' says Herman."

The legislation being proposed is to freeze rents, but we're seeing rents drop, so it would be against the interest of tenants to see this legislation passed.

I would like, in the little time I have left, to talk a bit about the Tenant Protection Act, which does hope to achieve a balance. Bill 215 would strip away the progress we've made under the Tenant Protection Act. I'd like to remind members of the four fundamental principles of the Tenant Protection Act: protecting tenants from unfair rent increases and arbitrary evictions; helping to create a climate in which people are encouraged to invest in rental housing; streamlining administration and cutting red tape so the system works faster and more fairly; and improving provisions for maintenance so landlords will take care of their rental housing.

The Tenant Protection Act has been an unqualified success since it came into effect in June 1998. It has met all those goals. Tenants are protected by the law. They're protected from harassment and from illegal eviction. They are also protected by an annual rent increase guideline for as long as they live in that apartment.

I think it would be a move backward if we passed this private member's bill today and would not help the interests of tenants or landlords.

Mr Prue: I thank my colleagues, especially my colleagues from the New Democratic Party who left some of their time for me as well.

I'd just like to speak about, first of all, some of the points that have been made here today. The minister said the plan that the government has come forward with is a good plan, but with the greatest of respect, it is presaged on the idea that the rents are affordable. The rents are not affordable. The rents are geared to average rent, which, as we have seen in Ontario in most of the large cities, is now in excess of $1,000 a month. So if you can afford $1,000 in rent, I guess her plan would work, but the reality is that most of the people who are tenants in Ontario are not well enough off to afford that. The reality is that the median income per household of tenants in Ontario is $23,215. Half of all tenants have less than that, half of all tenants have more than that, but the median, which is a good figure, is $23,215 per household, not per individual.

If you earn that much, and if you use the figures of CMHC and other groups that suggest tenants should realistically be spending about 30% of their salary on rent or on housing, that would be an apartment rent of about $580 that they can afford. The reality is that the average rent in all of Ontario is $883. In the big cities—Ottawa, Hamilton, Oshawa, Toronto, Peterborough and in the GTA—the rents are in excess of $1,000. People who earn $23,000 simply cannot afford them. It is illogical that the government would stand there and say that this is what they are attempting to do.

I also look at the silliness, with the greatest of respect, of the Liberal position. One has to laugh. They are challenging developers to build what they cannot rent to drive down the prices of that which they already own. That, in a nutshell, is their policy, and I can't say it any better than that. It is simply not going to happen. It is illogical to the nth degree.

We in the New Democratic Party, and in this bill in particular, believe we have to come to the rescue of those who are having a terrible time. The wages of people in apartments are very, very low. The rents that are going up continue to go up, and they have a singular inability to pay them. The rental housing stock in moderate homes is actually declining. The number of apartment units in Ontario is less today than it was in 1997, because more apartments are being taken down, more buildings are being sold out to condos, than are actually being constructed. It is at the bottom end that we have to worry, not at the top end.

I would ask the members to bear that in mind when they are voting for this bill and to please give a reprieve to the million or so tenants in this province who desperately need the prices to be frozen for two years and that vacancy decontrol be discontinued.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Beaches-East York has almost two minutes to add if he so wishes.

Mr Prue: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I thought that was all rolled together, so I welcome an additional two minutes. There were other things I wanted to say.

Tomorrow, Mr Hodgson, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, will be in Waterloo. He's going to be announcing some new rent plan or some new housing plan. We're not quite sure what it is. But if I could look inside a crystal ball, I think I know what it's going to be. He's going to talk again about rent supplements, which this government has promised for three years and has done almost nothing about.

He is going to be talking about the provincial funding, on the grand scheme of what the province is going to do with the federal monies. We remember that a little over a year ago the federal government came forward with some $245 million for the province of Ontario to build affordable housing. The province has earmarked only $20 million as their share, but beautifully ingenious in a way that one could only describe as Machiavellian, they are counting on an additional $180 million from municipalities and housing advocates and monies that will not be spent for PST and other things to make up the balance. I am sure that is what is going to be said again tomorrow.

The reality is that in the year since this plan was announced, Quebec has come forward and started building homes in a big way. Nunavut has done it, British Columbia has done it, all the other provinces have done something, and in Ontario we have built four units—four units—under this plan. I don't know what's going to be announced tomorrow, but this bill will do a whole lot more for tenants than anything that's going to be announced tomorrow.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT (PROHIBITING USE OF PESTICIDES), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES MUNICIPALITÉS (INTERDICTION D'UTILISER DES PESTICIDES)

Mr Patten moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 208, An Act to amend the Municipal Act, 2001 to permit municipalities to prohibit activities or the use of substances to protect the health, safety and well-being of inhabitants of the municipality / Projet de loi 208, Loi modifiant la Loi de 2001 sur les municipalités pour permettre aux municipalités d'interdire des activités ou l'utilisation de substances afin de protéger la santé, la sécurité et le bien-être des habitants de la municipalité.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): The Chair recognizes the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I'm delighted to address the Legislature today on Bill 208, the Municipal Amendment Act, prohibiting the use of pesticides. If this bill passes, it will effectively enable municipalities that wish to pass bylaws to prohibit the non-essential or cosmetic use of pesticides on a precautionary basis—and I underline precautionary basis—if the municipality is of the opinion that there is a threat to the health, safety and well-being of its citizens.

According to Dr Richard van der Jagt, chair of the Canadian Leukemia Studies Group, an associate professor of medicine, haematology, at the University of Ottawa and Ottawa Hospital, “There is now strong evidence linking pesticide exposure to acute leukemia in children (the most common cancer in children), to breast cancer (the most common cancer in women), and to prostate cancer (the most common cancer in men). There is also clear evidence linking pesticide exposure to neurotoxic effects, to birth defects, to non-Hodgkins lymphoma, to Parkinson’s disease, to bladder cancer. This also harkens back to the days when evidence was emerging on the risks of tobacco smoking. I do not think it appropriate,” he says, “for politicians to be debating and weighing ... medical evidence” when in fact this evidence is medical science.

He goes on to talk about, “... as precaution must be the overriding principle. In any case such as this, where there are serious implications to human health and the environment, the precautionary principle must apply. Logic and reasonableness cannot argue otherwise. Note that the Environmental Protection Agency” in the United States of America “has chosen to adopt a zero tolerance policy to any additional health risk posed by pesticides.”

In my speech today I want to concentrate on evidence that pesticide use is not safe to human health and the environment, who is most at risk, and children and other vulnerable groups. I say “touch on,” because in 10 minutes I can only begin to scratch the surface. There’s so much material on this particular topic and so many studies associating pesticide use, exposure and acute and chronic health effects.

Where is the evidence that pesticide use is not safe to human health and the environment? For the skeptics who say, “Show me the research,” I have here in my hand over 50 pages of abstracts of peer review studies on pesticides that I would be prepared to share with anyone who says there’s no evidence of links to cancer and chemical pesticides.

A 2002 city of Toronto public health report, Lawn and Garden Pesticides: A Review of Human Exposure and Health Effects Research, fully reviewed all the subjects and highlighted three types of health problems linked to pesticides: (1) some cancers such as leukemia and lymphomas, (2) reproductive effects, ie, fertility problems, adverse pregnancy outcomes, and (3) neurological effects, such as Parkinson’s disease. The report states that all the potential risks posed by pesticides, particularly hormonal changes and effects on the immune system, cannot be fully appreciated or predicted by the current ways in which measuring is being done. The health effects and potential risks from exposure to pesticides will never be completely understood, they say, and therefore, “A precautionary approach concerning residential-use pesticides is prudent and advisable.”

To those in the public health field, the precautionary principle builds upon the concept of prudent avoidance, which has traditionally intended to ensure that “preventive action is taken in advance of scientific proof in situations where further delay could prove costly to society or nature and/or unfair to future generations.”

In particular, I bring your attention to some recent studies. Two Swedish studies of non-Hodgkin’s lymphoma and exposure to pesticides concluded that exposure to herbicides during the decade before non-Hodgkin’s lymphoma diagnosis resulted in increased risk. A recent Canadian study on women living on farms in the Windsor area concluded that women involved in farming have nine times the risk of developing breast cancer as non-farm women. A 1998 study in northwestern Mexico determined that children living in an agricultural valley who were routinely exposed to the residue from pesticide spraying had poorer motor skills, poorer memory and poorer drawing abilities on balance than children living in better-protected foothills. There was a show on this on CBC at some point, I believe, an exposé.

Exposure to agricultural pesticides is a well-known contributing factor to a number of chronic ailments, including some I’ve just mentioned, and damage to the central nervous system, organs and possibly the endocrine system as well.

The London-based organization Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine warns that cancer-causing chemicals are now the number one killer of Europeans between the ages of 35 and 65. Experts agree that 80% to 90% of these cancers are caused by carcinogenic chemicals in the environment in which we live.

I have many, many more studies. I haven’t got the time to share them all here, but I am prepared to share them with anybody who has the interest.

In a nutshell, it boils down to this:

“Children are not simply small adults. They are more vulnerable to environmental threats because of their unique physiological developmental and behavioural characteristics from conception to adolescence; children face a variety of exposures to environmental contaminants, from a wide range of sources, over which they have very little control.

“Kilogram for kilogram, children drink more water, eat more food, and breathe more air than adults. This means that children have a disproportionately higher exposure to environmental contaminants in water, food, air and soil. Children can also be exposed to contaminants in the womb, through breast milk, and certain consumer products such as toys. Their natural exploratory behaviour also places them at greater risk of exposure. Children put things in their mouth and they play on or close to the ground where contaminants tend to concentrate.

“In addition to a greater exposure, children have important biological differences. Their organs and tissue are still developing and so their ability to metabolize, detoxify and excrete many toxicants is different from that of adults. Therefore, their mature organs may be less effective at protecting them from toxic exposures and effects. Infant kidneys, for example, cannot excrete certain foreign compounds as quickly as adult kidneys.

"Today's children are just beginning a lifetime of exposure to cumulative environmental hazards, the likes of which no other generation has experienced. They have more future years ahead of them in which they can develop chronic diseases that may be triggered by early exposures."

Over the past 20 years, there has been a fourfold increase in childhood asthma cases, with 12% of Canadian children now experiencing asthma and 29,000 children hospitalized per year. It is responsible for 25% of all school absences.

Neurotoxins like lead, mercury and other toxic chemicals, even at low levels, can disrupt the brain's wiring, causing permanent cognitive, learning and behavioural problems.

Known hazards and potential health effects of toxins: children exposed in utero or following birth to pesticides, PCBs, heavy metals and other chemicals may face disruption of their endocrine system, stunted growth, mental disability and other neuro-behavioural and developmental effects.

The majority of pesticides in commercial use today were evaluated based on a hypothetical healthy, 70-kilogram adult male—that's the test—and not the seven-kilogram child or the less-than-14-gram embryo. That is highly, highly significant. We and the companies do not test for children and their sensitivity to this. And there are many other vulnerable groups—the elderly, pregnant women, farm workers, agricultural workers etc—who are very sensitive to what goes on here.

"I wish I could make you understand," say Linda and Alison Leeming, who have both been diagnosed with severe chemical sensitivity, "what a severe health issue this is for thousands of people like us who are trying to live in this city. Pesticides are known to inhibit a variety of enzymes that are crucial to the function of the immune system." I could go on and on.

In conclusion, I want to remind the Legislature that Bill 208 is enabling legislation. The current Ontario Municipal Act, section 102, provides municipalities with the power to enact bylaws that regulate the health and safety, morality and welfare of their inhabitants. If passed, my bill would make it clear through the new section 130, the successor section to 102, that the power to prohibit the spreading or use of pesticides on a precautionary basis, regardless of whether the scientific evidence is conclusive and available or not, exists in the new Municipal Act which comes into effect January 1, 2003. Some municipalities have already sought legal opinion on bylaws. My bill will help to reduce the need for costly legal challenges.

Managers in the pesticides section of the standards section themselves say that the act doesn't explicitly provide for a municipal role in regulating pesticides. Mr Bill Armstrong, who is here today, is a councillor with the London city council. They passed a resolution supporting moving on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Welcome, Mr Armstrong. I would like to thank him on behalf of all of us for all the work he has done on this issue and for his commitment to getting this bill passed today. He called me some time ago and we had a discussion about this very issue, and I make the point today.

First of all, I support the bill, and I'm very pleased that Mr Patten has brought this very important issue before the Legislature again. Back in 1995, when the NDP was in government, under Ruth Grier the NDP did a study on the primary prevention of cancer. That was published in 1995. It is a really good blueprint for the things we can be doing, should be doing, that government should be promoting, to prevent cancers. There is a whole section in this report—unfortunately, it has been shelved and no action has been taken by the government on it—on the use of pesticides on food, with a number of recommendations, which indeed I tried to get all-party support for back in 1996, I believe. When I raised the issue and had a resolution before the House, I particularly took the piece on the environment, including pesticide reduction, and did get support in the House to move forward on some of the recommendations, but the government chose not to follow up with me on that.

That's why I so welcome this resolution before us today, because it is really important, as the evidence grows, as Mr Patten knows better than most of us here, being a victim of cancer himself, and I'm very glad to see that he has now taken up the preventive cause. I hope everybody will support the resolution today.

There is another really important report that I would recommend people read, and that is called Stop Cancer Before it Starts: The Campaign on How to Win the Losing War against Cancer, a report by the Cancer Prevention Coalition in the US. When you start reading these reports and studying the overwhelming evidence there is today, pesticides and all kinds of other chemicals in our environment are absolutely without a doubt causing some forms of cancer. We know that childhood cancers remain the number one killer these days, except for accidents, of course. That in itself is a stunning piece of information. For those of us with young children, or grandchildren in my case, we look at these little kids and, being aware of the rise in testicular cancer, of breast cancer in women and of all kinds of other cancers, as the cancer levels rise, are they going to become victims? It makes us feel, as legislators here, that we have a responsibility to them.

There is the opportunity today for the Legislature to pass this very simple bill or resolution before us. It amends the Municipal Act to allow municipalities to pass bylaws prohibiting the "use of pesticides in non-essential situations if the prohibition is related to the health, safety and well-being of the inhabitants of the municipality." It also provides, and I think this is very important, that they may do this "on a precautionary basis regardless of whether the scientific evidence is conclusive."

I think Mr Patten and Mr Armstrong are aware of a concern I have. At one point last year, or maybe two years ago, I was in the process of preparing a similar kind of bill and talked to some of the environmental groups about the best approach. They told me what their concerns are. If the bill passes today, I don't have those concerns. I'll wait to hear what the Tories say about this.

The concern is this: according to them and legal opinions, in the Hudson case, the Supreme Court in regard to Hudson, Quebec, made a ruling that the Hudson municipality was allowed under the law to pass such a bylaw, which they did. It was a groundbreaking case. The concern is that we know municipalities have that right now, but it appears as though many municipalities are using as an excuse that they can't pass such a bylaw, that legally they're not allowed to do it. The concern is that if this bill doesn't pass today, it will be a further excuse for some municipalities that don't want the responsibility because of the lobby by some of the big pesticide and chemical companies, that they will use this as another excuse not to move forward: "There was a bill but it didn't pass, so we can't move forward until it does."

I don't want that to happen because it is my view, and the legal opinions and the view of the environmental groups involved in this, that municipalities do have the jurisdiction and the right to do this now. So although I support the resolution before us today, I very much hope that the Conservative members will vote for it so that we make a very clear statement today, on top of the Hudson decision, that makes it absolutely clear to any municipality that they undoubtedly have the right to pass such a resolution.

I read in Stop Cancer Before it Starts a very interesting quote. There's lots of interesting information in these reports, including the report by Ruth Grier and others. What they say is:

"Whether against cancer or terrorism, war is best fought by pre-emptive strategies based on prevention, rather than based reactively on damage control. As importantly, the war against cancer needs to be waged by leadership accountable to the public interest and not to special agenda interests of the cancer establishment and ... if not criminal, powerful corporations."

This is a very strong statement by a group of people who are trying to get governments to take responsibility, to deal with the fact that there's now an estimation that cancer is going to increase by 50%, I believe double, over the next several years. This is something we can no longer take lightly. This is an opportunity for us, as responsible legislators today from all three parties, to support this resolution before us and give a very clear statement to municipalities that we support their efforts, that we support the efforts by people like Mr Armstrong, who is here today, and community activists and other councillors who want to take action and help their communities protect their children, their pets, all of the people in their communities.

I want to point out before I sit down and leave some time for my colleagues a very interesting resolution that was just passed, and we applaud them for that. The Ontario town of Cobalt, with little fanfare—we haven't heard much about this, but Mr Patten is aware of it—has become the first place in the province to ban pesticide use on public property. It has been done; it can be done. Yes, they said there was quite a lobby from a lawn care company, but beyond that there was very little opposition to this. They have done it already.

This has now moved beyond what was at one time, when I first got involved in this issue, seen as something that only those on the fringes of the environmental movement supported. It's moved way beyond that. It has now become pretty mainstream. There's a whole list of mainstream organizations that have the facts and the information and know that we have to move, that we have to remove the use of many of those pesticides, and are calling for governments to act.

In closing, I congratulate Mr Patten and also Mr Armstrong for their fight to move forward in helping municipalities take the ball here and run with it and do the right thing for the citizens of Ontario. By a long shot, it's only one piece. There's no time today to get into all the other chemicals that are out there in the water we drink and in the food we eat and in the air we breathe, but this is one very important piece of it today. I hope very much that all members of the Legislature will vote for this very important resolution today.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I'm very pleased to join in the debate with respect to the member's Bill 208, An Act to amend the Municipal Act, 2001 to permit municipalities to prohibit activities or the use of substances to protect the health, safety and well-being of inhabitants of the municipality.

As has already been mentioned by the members across, over the past few years there has been a growing awareness about the use of pesticides in our communities. In my own community, the city of Barrie, certainly I've heard of that in terms of concerns with respect to their use, for example, around nursing homes, which is an area of significant concern because the people who are there are obviously not in 100% health. We don't want to make them any more vulnerable than they already are in terms of this type of activity.

With it, there has been a growing concern about the potential environmental and human health effects of pesticides. That also goes with respect to the use of pesticides on school grounds, just to name another example with respect to where that would be used in terms of pitches on school grounds. City parks are another area. It also applies with respect to individual homeowners and what they do with their properties.

We all know there are appropriate uses for pesticides. If managed carefully, in many circumstances these chemicals can help contain infestation that would otherwise threaten our environment, our health, our food supply and our local economies.

A case in point is the West Nile virus in Manitoba, and in Winnipeg in particular, in terms of the actions that had to be taken by the municipality to deal with that particular situation, which is not over; it is ongoing. That could face us here in this province in terms of the same level that it has faced out in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

We also cannot deny that some pesticides may pose a threat to our health if they are used excessively or indiscriminately. Because of this, there is a movement across the country to restrict the non-essential use of pesticides. We support various initiatives to reduce the reliance on the use of pesticides. This government also respects municipalities' decisions to consult with stakeholders and develop pesticide strategies that are tailored to local concerns, circumstances and desires.

I want to remind all the members of the House, and especially the member for Ottawa Centre, that Health Canada has the lead role in evaluating human health and environmental effects of pesticides and makes decisions whether or not to register them for use in this country. Health Canada's Pest Management Regulatory Agency is also responsible for ensuring that pesticides can be safely used when label directions are followed. They are the gatekeeper in terms of dealing with pesticides in this country.

Our government is encouraged that earlier this year the federal government committed to reintroduce pesticide legislation to strengthen and modernize its Pest Control Products Act to protect the health of all Canadians. We agree with the Pest Control Safety Council of Canada that we need to provide more information to the public about the safe and responsible use of pest control products and support integrated pest management principles to reduce reliance on pesticides.

We feel it is important to respect which level of government is best suited to deal with certain issues. Ontario does have a role to play in pesticide management, and we already have a comprehensive program in place. Our province, through the Pesticides Act, continues to regulate the sale, use, transportation, storage and disposal of federally registered pesticides through requirements for education, licensing and permits.

The Ministry of the Environment is also participating in the joint federal-provincial Healthy Lawns Strategy to reduce reliance on pesticide use on lawns. And Ontario is participating in the initiative with the federal government and the other provinces and territories to harmonize pesticide classification across this country, eliminate duplication, improve and streamline the regulatory system, and place strict controls on consumer access to higher-risk domestic pesticides. This way, Ontario's pesticide regulations are consistent with other jurisdictions and our communities have clear guidelines on pesticide use. Working in partnership with the federal government on this issue benefits everyone. Trying to interfere in issues that are clearly the jurisdiction of other levels of government would have the opposite effect.

I would say this: this government has already acted responsibly. The member across has already mentioned section 102 of the Municipal Act, which will take effect in the year 2003. I think what he's looking for here—and he's been very honest and upfront about it—is to make sure there are no legal issues here. There is provision in section 102 with respect to enabling other municipalities to deal with the situations I am speaking about. What he is suggesting is that there may be legal challenges. There always are legal challenges, perhaps, when you move into an area where companies feel they are being impacted and want to test the law with respect to how they can deal with that. That would apply also with respect to the proposed amendments my friend is putting forth, because it does provide the municipalities with discretionary power to deal with prohibiting the spreading or use of pesticides in non-essential situations. Obviously, that would be something that would be subject to interpretation itself.

A municipality also would be given the discretion to prohibit the spreading or use of pesticides on a precautionary basis, regardless of whether the scientific evidence is conclusive or not, if the municipality is of the opinion that there is a threat to the health, safety and well-being of the inhabitants of the municipality.

What the member is trying to accomplish here, and I recognize that, is he's trying to put forth, in a situation that could be construed not to be strong enough—it may be strong enough, subject to judicial interpretation, but that's not the point the member is trying to make. He's trying to make the point that it has to be explicit enough so there won't be any vagueness with respect to what the municipality is trying to accomplish in terms of what they're doing.

Mr Tascona: This is debate, member for Kingston. I've got a right to speak here and I intend to. I don't need to be heckled by the member for Kingston. I'm trying to deal with the debate here from the member because it's well thoughtout, and I support the principles that he's putting forth with respect to this issue.

I believe we have a strong framework of environmental and health protection in place. I would say on behalf of my colleagues that certainly this debate is worthwhile; it's timely. I think the member for Toronto-Danforth put it bluntly in terms of, there has to be action taken by municipalities to ensure that this issue is dealt with. That's why they had the Hudson decision that, I believe, went all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to giving the municipalities that clear right. That's what all this debate is about: to ensure that this issue is dealt with fairly, responsibly, and is not going to be judicially overturned.

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): I'm pleased to rise and join in this debate. It's a serious issue. I want to provide, at least in passing, an affirmation for my good friend Richard Patten. I've known Richard for over 30 years. We grew up together in the YMCA movement. As younger men we fought valiant fights together many times to try to make a real difference. I'm pleased to be here in this place with my friend in support of his consistent desire to stand for what is good, proper, progressive and right.

One of the members opposite had made a number of passing references to the legal issue. I think one of the things that municipalities want more than anything else—and as a former mayor of that wonderful municipality the town of Flamborough, I can attest to this—is the sense that the provincial government, particularly when they have their spokespersons refer to being in support of the principles behind a particular piece of legislation, are prepared to go the next step and to assist and clarify something in the face of a legal challenge, which clearly I think would come given the complexity and confusion around the Hudson case, notwithstanding the Canadian Environmental Law Association brief suggesting that in their review they felt the municipalities do have this option.

We've got a situation—my colleague for Kingston may have more to say about this—the infamous contradiction tests, conflicting goods, conflicting laws. What's going to happen, I suspect, with certain municipalities that decide, believing a wink is like a nod in racing to a blind horse, believing that the province is winking through section 102 of Bill 111 to move forward, you're going to get into this argument about competing goods. I agree with the member opposite that we do need strong laws in place. I don't think the laws are strong enough. We have an opportunity today to really help with that.

By way of background, pesticides are clearly toxic. They kill organisms that we deem undesirable. There appears to be growing evidence that they also have the potential to kill organisms we love, organisms like wives, kids and pets and what have you. Given the international recognition in law of the precautionary principle, I think we can take some solace and advice from George Bush to the south when he says, "Let's make sure we never mis-estimate the potential for problems here." I think there's good evidence that we're at risk. We shouldn't have to wait for the science to prove that conclusively before we act.

All across Ontario throughout municipalities you have a groundswell of concern and a strong desire in a number of areas to do something about it. Municipalities are struggling with the tools they've got. They're trying naturalization projects, better plant management projects, and some are even into the use of biopesticides, although that's a developing field.

I guess I see this as a bit like the second-hand smoke debate. We know for a certainty now that second-hand smoke is hazardous to a person's health and is killing numerous people across the country. The province has failed to move in a generic, comprehensive way recognizing that it's both a health and business issue. Municipalities have had to pick that up and there have been some court challenges to that. I would plead with this government—you're good at downloading—this is one responsibility that ought to be downloaded, and quickly.

I want to suggest that in the absence of clear authority and your moving to support this bill, there may well be plausible evidence quoted in a subsequent court of law that this Legislative Assembly actually intended to preclude municipal regulation with respect to pesticide use. I think if that were to happen, that would indeed be an extremely unfortunate day for the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I rise today in support of this bill and I would ask all members of the House to seriously consider supporting it.

We need, as a society, to embrace the very basic concept that is being put forward here, and that is to minimize the use of pesticides wherever and whenever we can do so. One of the ways we can do it is to ban the cosmetic use of pesticides. This serves not to protect our food source against unwanted predators or pests but is only to make sure that we don't have the inconvenience of a few dandelions or things in our lawns that we don't otherwise want to have.

In East York, when I was the mayor, we took what was then considered to be a very bold step, in all of our municipal lands and in the school board lands, to ban the use of pesticides on public property. We were one of the first municipalities in Ontario to do so. There were people who came forward and argued with us that this was going to create havoc in our municipality. In fact, some homeowners who lived adjacent to those municipal properties talked about blowing dandelion seeds, that we would have dandelions on our lawn that in the prevailing wind would blow over on to their lawn, and they urged us not to discontinue the spraying.

But we thought the better of it and, to this day, I'm glad that we did so because in reality the amount of spraying went immediately down in all of the neighbourhood properties as well when they saw that we didn't get infested. We used other lawn management tools to make sure the lawns stayed green and healthy. Spraying, if it ever did occur with major infestations, might take place once every five years as opposed to five times a year, as had been the common practice before that.

In the court decision of Hudson in Quebec that went all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada, it has been ruled that municipalities have the right to pass this legislation, and certainly many municipalities have had an opportunity to look at it. My own time at the amalgamated city of Toronto, and on the board of health of the city of Toronto, showed that this is a difficult proposition. When the board of health came forward with a proposition to do exactly what the city of Hudson in Quebec had done, we were met with a great many people who came forward in opposition. Almost all of them were the owners or the employees of lawn care facilities who came forward to argue about their livelihood and to make what I considered the specious argument that these pesticides would do no one any harm, that they lived and worked with them and it wasn't going to cause them any harm.

I remember raising their ire when I talked about Rachel Carson's book Silent Spring, that I had read some 30 years before, when she first raised the alarm bells. The alarm bells are going off with even greater frequency today. When one exposes oneself to potential carcinogens, the damage is done not at the moment, but sometimes many years later.

The lobby of the pesticide companies notwithstanding, it is a good idea wherever possible to reduce the use of pesticides, as this bill intends. It is our belief that municipalities already have the right and that this bill may not confer something they do not already have. However, having said that, if it helps to assuage the fears of the municipal governments to pass the bill, if they can see there is provincial legislation that will obviate the necessity of their going to court, if they feel they are less likely to be sued by the pesticide companies if they enact it, then it is my belief that they will enact what is proper for their communities and for all the residents of this province.

For that reason I commend the bill and Mr Patten for bringing it forward. I would ask that all members of the House consider the safety of themselves, their children, their neighbours and their friends and relatives and take the long-term view that it's better to have a few dandelions than to suffer cancer.

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I appreciate the opportunity to address Bill 208, Municipal Amendment Act (Prohibiting Use of Pesticides), 2002. I would like to address this proposed legislation in the context of what communities are already doing, and we've heard some mention of that in the debate today.

A number of communities across Ontario have taken measures to manage any potential health and environmental risks associated with the use of pesticides, including herbicides and insecticides. I do want to inform the members of the House that I'm not in support of this approach in Bill 208.

Fairly simply, this represents what I consider another piece of red tape to add to the myriad constellation of rules and regulations that we have in our society. I don't feel that it really solves anything; it solves little and proposes ideas that many municipalities across the province are already contemplating.

Given the progress that has already been made on pesticide management, Bill 208 is about as relevant as a proposal to send the first man to the moon. This has already been done. I had an opportunity to speak with Buzz Aldrin a number of years ago. He has been there and back. So have Scott Carpenter and Neil Armstrong. They've been there, they've done that, and I suggest that many municipalities have also taken these measures. It's been done; it's on the way.

People are telling us to remove red tape and avoid duplication. If we push forward with legislation like this, we're ignoring these pleas and adding yet another needless set of hoops for people in Ontario to jump through. Many Ontario communities, including Toronto, Ottawa, as the member from Ottawa Centre would know, London, Waterloo and Caledon, are considering the issue of the use of herbicide, insecticide and other pesticides and are taking action. Really, those municipalities don't need a piece of legislation to tell them what they already know and what they're already considering doing or are doing.

Ontario municipalities are acting in the best interests of their people and their communities. They're doing so without relying on an amendment to the Municipal Act. I commend them for their hard work to this point and I'm loath to support a bill that essentially would pull the rug from under their feet. I question this call for a prohibition on the use of pesticides. I support a science-based approach. I will make mention of section 2(2), and I quote, "A municipality may prohibit the spreading or use of pesticides on a precautionary basis regardless of whether the scientific evidence is conclusive or not." I question that. I feel there is a role for science. I feel there is a strong role for education and information in dealing with this issue. I have a farm. I use herbicides to grow food. I also have a lawn. I have never used chemicals on my lawn. I don't water my lawn. I have priorities. I have this approach because of brochures and information and educational programs that I have picked up over the years.

I mentioned that much work has already been done by municipalities. For example, Toronto released this report on its strategy to reduce the use of outdoor pesticides just this past November. Since then, the board of health has directed the city's medical officer of health to develop a pesticide bylaw for their consideration. What value would this bill have for the city of Toronto under our existing legislation? Toronto is already developing what I consider an effective strategy. It works for Toronto and protects the environment and human health at the same time.

It was the same story in Ottawa earlier this year. The city of Ottawa, as the member for Ottawa Centre will know, released its report on pesticide reduction strategies for private properties. The city will establish pesticide reduction targets in early 2003 and will, again, consider the need for a bylaw within three years if these targets are not met. The city of Ottawa does not require an amendment to Ontario's existing legislation to establish these reduction targets.

Many other communities—Mississauga, Hamilton—joined with park associations to develop a consistent municipal approach with respect to the issue of pesticide management. Really, why should we commend, tap them on the shoulder, tell them, "Thanks for the effort, but we feel we know better what's right" for their communities?

The new Municipal Act comes into effect January 1. It's a significant, far-reaching deal, a new deal, for our municipalities. The new Municipal Act was reviewed through countless consultations with municipal leaders. But now, before it can even come into effect, we're proposing, today, to amend it. Community leaders must be wondering why we would go down this road. Our cities and towns aren't asking for amendments to an act that they, along with us, fought long and hard to create.

Again, in my view, prohibition is not the road to take. Education, information and persuasion I feel can be a much more fruitful approach to this issue.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I can't understand what's happening here this morning. All this bill does is to clarify the section in the proposed Municipal Act that's going to take effect on January 1 to make sure that municipalities have the ability to pass bylaws. Let me just read the section that we're talking about. It clearly states that "a municipality may prohibit the spreading or use of pesticides" in non-essential situations if the prohibition is related to "health, safety and well-being of the inhabitants of the municipality." It is just to make sure that section 120 of the new act includes the provision that it could pass bylaws in this area as well—not that it will, but that it could.

I'm still of the belief that the local municipal politicians who deal with the down-to-earth, day-to-day problems in municipalities, who are just as legitimately elected as we are at this level, have a much better handle on individual situations when they deal with issues like this than we have at the provincial level or at the federal level.

I noticed that the last member who spoke, and he quoted section (2) of the amendment, didn't quote the entire section. Again, the section states: "A municipality may prohibit the spreading or use of pesticides on a precautionary basis regardless of whether the scientific evidence is conclusive or not," but he didn't continue on and quote the last section; "if the municipality is of the opinion that there's a threat to the health, safety and well-being of the inhabitants of the municipality."

All this section is doing is taking the ambiguity out of the whole new section 120 of the Municipal Act and allowing municipalities if, in their wisdom, after the due consultation that municipal councils usually get involved in, they feel they want to pass bylaws dealing with the prohibition of pesticides.

I firmly believe that many, many areas are much better dealt with at the local level than at the provincial or the federal level, because I don't think the way we sometimes get involved in passing laws, etc, has the grassroots effect or the grassroots issues that can be addressed at the local level. The evidence is surely clear, from all the various medical reports and medical studies that have been done, that the long-term use of pesticides creates reproductive effects in newborns, neurological effects in individuals, and all sorts of problems that can be related to the long-term use of pesticides. If a municipal council feels it is in the best interests of their citizens to do something about it, they should have the right to do something about it by banning the use of pesticides. Obviously, this has to be done on an individual basis and a case-by-case basis, the way the leaders of that municipality see the issue from time to time.

Some of the other gobbledegook I've heard here this morning about, "Well, this will have to be tested in the courts, and then we can have some adjudication of it"—what this proposed amendment is trying to do is take it out of the area of ambiguity so there will not be any challenges in court. Surely to goodness there are enough members on all sides of the House who agree with the member from Ottawa Centre, who has proposed this private member's bill, that it is the local people in the local municipalities who can best adjudicate this. Again, it is simply giving them the right to do so. It doesn't mean that every municipality is going to do this; it's simply giving them the right to do something they probably should have had the power to do for a long period of time. That's what this is about, and I urge all members to support this bill.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I want to thank our member from Ottawa Centre, Richard Patten, for having the dedication to bring this forward. I think that sometimes a verification of the reason we're here as lawmakers is to propose good laws. This is a good piece of legislation, a good amendment that makes eminent sense, because it affects people in a real way in terms of their health and the health of their children and families. I want to thank councillor Bill Armstrong, who came here all the way from London, who is also typical of a lot of councillors throughout Ontario who want to do something that benefits their constituents.

In many ways, this is really a no-brainer. Who, except the one member from across the way, stands up and defends the use of pesticides? In an urban setting, it has to be controlled, because properties are so adjacent to each other. Even if you don't use pesticides on your lawn, your next-door neighbour on either side or your neighbours in behind you could be using pesticides, because the lots are so small. That's why you need a municipal government that can enact protective laws so you don't have the free and unlimited use of pesticides.

In Ontario right now, as you know, you can walk into any Home Depot or Home Hardware and get all the chemicals, all the pesticides, you want; there's no limit on it. So if you've got some hare-brained neighbour next door who wants to make his lawn the greenest lawn this side of Ireland, he'll do it with every pesticide he can buy at a discount price at the local hardware store. That's why you have to have some power in the hands of municipalities to control that type of use—and it's rampant. All over this province there are people, especially in cities, who spend all their time pouring chemicals on to their front lawns or back lawns. That chemical, that pesticide, goes beyond that person's property. It goes into water tables, it goes into aquifers. It runs into the storm sewer runoffs and goes into our water supply, into the lakes and rivers that supply us with water. We drink the pesticides because there are some irresponsible people or people who don't understand the impact of that pesticide use. So we have to have some protections for citizens on this unlimited use.

That's why municipalities are saying very clearly, "There's ambiguity out there right now. We want to know what our rights are and that we won't be spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in court trying to defend our right to protect our citizens." That's what is hampering municipalities right now, and this government's got to do something about it. They've got to enable municipalities to be immune from these multi million-dollar court cases that they are going to be confronted with if they confront the DuPont Chemicals of this world.

The member for Ottawa Centre is listening to people all across this province who want the government of Ontario to give municipalities the power—if the provincial government won't do it, they're saying, "Let the municipalities protect us from this rampant use of cosmetic pesticides especially." You can understand in some cases where you've got a need to control some kind of outbreak of mosquito, West Nile virus, but we're not talking about that. We're talking about the cosmetic use of pesticides on properties in every city across this province, and in essence there are no controls on doing that.

Sadly, sometimes the parents don't understand the impact they are having on their children and on themselves, and that these pesticides they use are permanent. They are permanently in the lawn; they are permanently dragged into the house on your feet, on to your carpets; they are in our drinking water. Who in his right mind would not want some kind of protection? It's a little bit of protection that the member for Ottawa Centre is asking for, and I think we, as lawmakers, have a duty to listen to this call for some kind of action on our part. It's a little step we can use to ensure that municipalities will be able to do their job, to stop this rampant use of cosmetic pesticides all across this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre has two minutes.

Mr Patten: Thank you very much to everyone participating in this debate today. I appreciate the points that were made.

I would like to address one, if I may, to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant, who said this is going to increase red tape. The point is, it does the exact opposite, in clarifying the position. This isn't taken lightly. I didn't just think about this sitting in my office and say, "You know, I think I'm going to do this." I sought legal advice. I talked to the people in the pesticide control area, or my staff did, rather. Do you know what the managers in the pesticides section, standards development branch, of the Ministry of the Environment said? They indicated that currently the Ontario Pesticides Act and Municipal Act don't explicitly provide for a municipal role in regulating pesticides. So the confusion is there.

This is to enable municipalities that want to take action and reduce legal costs, so it in effect would reduce red tape for a lot of municipalities. A number of municipalities have said to me that they have been deterred by the worry over the legal costs from pursuing something that they think is important for the health of the constituents in their particular town or city.

So I would urge the members—Mr Armstrong from London city council is here today. London city council just voted 18 to 1 in favour of supporting this particular bill because they believe this will help them have a very clear backdrop on which they would be able to proceed if they choose to regulate, mitigate, or in any way try to reduce some of the toxicity in their municipality that has grave health effects for a lot of people.

I want to thank the members who spoke very articulately and added to the debate today.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS*HIGHWAY 11/17

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): I think it's fair to say that the expenses released earlier this week for former northern development minister Tim Hudak detailing trips to China, Korea, Rio de Janeiro and Las Vegas all in the same year bring into question the priorities of the then minister for the north. Certainly, it's clear from the perspective of a member from northwestern Ontario that much-needed highway improvements were not part of the discussions in those exotic locales.

All of this seems somehow more galling when one notes the tap dance recently exhibited by senior Ministry of Transportation officials related to the need for four-laning the Trans-Canada Highway between Thunder Bay and Nipigon. First we are told that traffic volumes do not justify the four-laning, but then we are told that traffic volumes are not the only factor in the decision to four-lane. In fact, the regional director for the ministry told Thunder Bay television yesterday that a stretch of highway east of Sault Ste Marie that is being four-laned is being done to address safety concerns unique to that area. So in other words, mitigating factors can override the volume issue.

If I may, let me suggest some vital mitigating factors relating to the stretch of Highway 11/17 between Thunder Bay and Nipigon. One, there is no alternate route available to drivers. Close the highway here and the Trans-Canada is shut down. Two, the section between Thunder Bay and Pass Lake frequently exceeds the volumes required by the ministry, certainly during the summer months. Why not move to at least four-lane that section of the highway? Thirdly, the province 12 years ago determined that four-laning that stretch between Thunder Bay and Nipigon should go forward.

There are more large transports on the highways. That's got to be a consideration. This is a project that is more than justified and, in fact, a vital necessity to ensure the safety of northern drivers. We will not give up until we see it become a reality.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I would first like to take time to acknowledge the grade 5 class, the students and their teacher, Donna Paquette, who are sitting in the public gallery today. They hail from St Joseph's French Immersion Centre in Bowmanville and are here to observe the political process in action.

I also rise in the House to congratulate St Francis of Assisi Catholic Elementary School on the official opening and blessing of this new school in the village of Newcastle. I had the opportunity to attend the school's official opening on October 4, 2002, a wonderful program of music and greetings celebrating the event, with Barb Malone, trustee, as the emcee. The entertainment was provided by the St Francis student and staff choirs and the St Francis recorder club and the St Stephen's Secondary School concert band. The celebration honoured those persons whose strength and commitment have been critical to the development of this new school site.

The new structure, which has a capacity of 558 students, has 19 regular classrooms, a library resource centre, a health room, a special education room, three kindergarten classes, a new resource room, a wonderful gymnasium and an administrative centre. This new school will be under the administrative guidance of Violet Neheli as principal and Katherine Derhak as vice-principal.

I'm very excited to announce the completion of the new St Francis of Assisi school in Durham riding. I'm confident this new building will be a centre for children and their educational achievements and a focal point of the Newcastle community.

I'd ask the members to recognize the grade 5 class with Donna Paquette here today.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Intense lobbying by Perth-based OMYA Canada Inc appears to have left the company poised to increase its industrial water consumption by 500% and to eclipse the limits set by a recent environmental tribunal. If it gets the green light from the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and Minister Chris Stockwell, OMYA will soon be allowed to pump 4,500 cubic metres of water a day from the Tay River. The proposed intake amount is equal to that used by all 6,000 residents, businesses and civic facilities in Perth.

Today Lanark county citizens called on the Ontario Minister of the Environment to uphold the recommendations of the Walkerton inquiry report when he makes his decision on a controversial water-taking appeal involving the Tay River near Perth. After a two-year struggle in February 2002, permanent and seasonal residents in the Tay River watershed won an Environmental Review Tribunal decision to restrict the volume of water-taking from the Tay River by the company. The tribunal decision restricted the company to taking 1.5 million litres of water a day from the Tay River, one third of the original volume sought by the company. OMYA appealed this decision to the Minister of the Environment, Chris Stockwell, asking him to triple the water-taking to 4.5 million litres per day.

The Tay River Defence appellants were shocked to learn in late November that the Ministry of the Environment, which had initially agreed to the tribunal's decision to restrict the water-taking, had reversed its position and is urging Minister Stockwell to accept the company demands.

It sounds like political pressure to me, and that political pressure should be resisted.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): It is my pleasure to announce that today is International Volunteer Day. This day, designated by the United Nations in 1985, is an excellent opportunity for each of us to publicly celebrate the contribution that volunteers make to the strength of this province. In Ontario more than 2.3 million men, women and youth volunteer time equivalent to 205,000 full-time jobs. That time, given freely for community service, has been estimated at a value of more than $6 billion annually.

Our government recognizes and celebrates the contributions of our volunteers. Since 1995, our government has invested more than $37 million to support volunteerism, including the International Year of Volunteers celebrations last year. Our government, through the Ministry of Citizenship, supports volunteer initiatives such as Volunteer @ction On-line, the Ontario Screening Initiative, Ontario Voluntary Forum, Making IT Work for Volunteers, and Good Neighbours.

This year, more than 7,000 volunteers were honoured with volunteer service awards and outstanding achievement awards at 28 local ceremonies, including a ceremony held recently in Parry Sound that I was able to attend.

Mr Speaker and honourable members, please take time today to recognize the immense contributions that volunteers can make.

FIREFIGHTERS

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to speak about an important issue that has sparked intense debate within and outside this House, Bill 30. Some unknown facts that do not seem to get out there are that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association offered a proposal to the Minister of Public Safety and Security to hold an independent task force to resolve the double-hatter issue by engaging all the stakeholders in this process. To date this offer has been turned down by the government.

In committee, my own amendment was turned down that asked for the very same thing to happen: that negotiations take place before any type of bill is rammed down their throats. Quite frankly, the fire marshal indicated that he only had one meeting with the stakeholders and decided that the negotiations were over. I think it's important for us to make that understood.

Secondly, the OPFFA would reinstate a moratorium on charges against double-hatters if the government would take time to have this task force struck. It seems to me that this resolves the problem in a conciliatory way between all those involved and does not create the chaos that is now happening. I'm consistently perplexed by the way this government continues to alienate entire groups with poorly written and poorly implemented legislation. The OPFFA has made a commitment to work together with all stakeholders to find an equitable solution to all the things that are involved in this issue. I would urge each member of this House not to vote for Bill 30 and to allow these groups to find that task force, to find that negotiation and to come to an equitable solution to this problem.

WATER EXTRACTION

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): A multinational corporation, OMYA, applied to have their water-taking increase from 1.5 million litres per day to a whopping 4.5 million litres per day. The ministry issued an order to allow the expanded water-taking, but the citizens who live near the Tay River, some of whom are here today, were concerned that this amount of water taken from the river would threaten its viability, so they appealed the decision to the Environmental Review Tribunal. The tribunal, on recommendation from the minister's staff, agreed with the citizens that they should not be allowed to take that amount of water per day. The tribunal ordered that the company's water-taking be restricted to 1.5 million litres per day. It also laid out conditions that it should have an independent auditor make sure the water-taking didn't exceed the permit. But OMYA wanted more and they've appealed to both the minister and the courts to overturn the decision and give them the water they asked for. The CEO of OMYA wrote a threatening letter to the government saying that if it didn't give in to their demands, they might have to re-assess their "investment and production plans" in Ontario.

The Environmental Review Tribunal stated that before there was an increase in water taken from the Tay, there should be a water budget done so the impact could be assessed. That has not been done. Justice O'Connor recommended the same thing. This government has not done anything on source protection. I appeal to the minister to not give in to the corporation's demand here and to do the right thing.

SISTERS OF THE ASSUMPTION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Today I rise before the House to talk about a recent event that I attended in my riding of Nipissing.

Last Friday, I had the opportunity to celebrate the good work that the Sisters of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin have done over the years. This event was held at the École Publique Héritage. Once a year, the school recognizes individuals who have contributed to the quality of life in the community. French education has really benefited from the work that the sisters have done over the years to ensure that students get the education they deserve. Had it not been for them, I am certain there would be a smaller percentage of French-speaking high school and university graduates in North Bay.

As one former student said, the sisters didn't just teach about things found in textbooks, they also taught about life lessons, morals and values. This is indeed something that is taught and not just understood at a very young age. Without a doubt, they have been wonderful role models for students to look up to.

Established in North Bay since 1920, the Sisters of the Assumption founded the first French-language Catholic secondary school in the region. I'd like to thank the sisters for all their dedicated service over the years. I know it is their hope that many more young women show an interest in pursuing sisterhood.

Bonne chance et merci beaucoup. J'espère que vous aurez beaucoup de bonheur dans votre vie.

FINNISH COMMUNITY

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): Today, my colleague Michael Gravelle and I have the privilege to introduce to you and the House representatives of the government of Finland and of the Canadian Finnish community. They're here to celebrate—

Applause.

Mr Ruprecht: Oh, by golly. This is too early, Mr Speaker.

Interjection: Give him some more time.

Mr Ruprecht: They're here to celebrate the independence of Finland on December 6, 1917. They are Consul General Partanen, Dr Veli Ylänkö, Mrs Viola and Eric Lindala, Mr Kauko Leppälä, Mrs Meeri Apunen, Mr Veikko Kallio and some others as well. We welcome you to this Legislature.

Mr Speaker, with your permission, tomorrow at 12:30 the Finnish community of Canada is going to raise the white and blue flag right in front of the Legislature to celebrate this very important event. All of us are invited to participate.

What these colours remind us of are the great sacrifices Finns have made for their independence. Many people, in fact, hundreds died until Finland had their independence in 1917. What these colours also represent for us is the great contribution Finnish Canadians have made, not only in northern Ontario from Thunder Bay to Sudbury, but also to Toronto, with the Welland Canal, the new City Hall, structural engineering, and even music.

Finally, let me simply say this: these colours will also remind us of the greatest struggle for freedom in the history of modern times, namely, the independence of Finland when the Soviet forces outnumbered the Finns by 10 to one. They fought them to a standstill and great sacrifices were made. In fact, the Finnish population lost half of their men in uniform between the ages of 18 and 25, so it is this generation of Canadians and Finns who know about the struggle for independence, freedom and democracy. They carry on with the torch for freedom into the future. They're the ones who are showing us what to do. They're the ones who deserve an independent Finland for the future. Canada and Finland will be together to have this fight continue.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member. We welcome our honoured guests.

CHRISTKINDL MARKET

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): About 700 years ago, around the year 1310, Germans in Munich participated in an annual opportunity for farmers to go to town to do some shopping and offer their wares for sale. It was called the Nikolausdult Market. To this day, the festival continues in Munich. However, as times change, so do customs and traditions. The festival is now called Christkindl Market, or Christ Child Market.

Along with the new name, this popular festival has adopted new traditions. As the custom of giving gifts became popular around this time of year, the market adopted the custom. The markets became a popular venue for crafts, gift items and foods, and of course a place for the sale of toys for children. They became world renowned for their ceremonies, festivities, entertainment and outstanding gifts and food.

I am proud to say that Kitchener city hall is hosting Canada's own original Christkindl Market. They started yesterday evening and will continue through Sunday, December 8, 2002. Over 25,000 people from across North America come to experience this event. Dozens of volunteers contribute their time and efforts to the success of this event. I will be volunteering my time at the German-Canadian Business and Professional Association booth on Sunday, December 8.

My personal thanks go to Mr Tony Bergmeier and the German community of Kitchener, who organize the event, for their hard work. I invite everyone to come to Kitchener city hall throughout the next three days to experience Ontario's and Kitchener's own Christkindl Market.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent of this House to reschedule the late show for this evening. Minister Coburn is unable to attend as a result of scheduling, and our offices have come to a mutual agreement to reschedule the late show for Tuesday, December 10.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed. I thank the member for that.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on general government and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water /
Projet de loi 195, Loi ayant trait à la salubrité de l'eau potable.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated November 6, 2002, the bill is ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on finance and economic affairs and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 180, An Act to enact, amend or revise various Acts related to consumer protection /
Projet de loi 180, Loi édictant, modifiant ou révisant diverses lois portant sur la protection du consommateur.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated Tuesday, November 19, 2002, the bill is ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I beg leave to present a report on the integrated justice project from the standing committee on public accounts and move the adoption of its recommendations.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mr Gerretsen: There are 10 recommendations contained in this report. I'll briefly mention three of them. The ministry should take the necessary steps to ensure the integrated justice project will be completed and fully implemented. The Management Board Secretariat should assess the provincial common purpose procurement model and address any shortcomings, taking into account the experience of the integrated justice project. Finally, the third recommendation I want to draw attention to states that the ministry should ensure that consulting and related services can be demonstrated to have been acquired competitively and managed in compliance with government policies and procedures, and that payments are made in accordance with contractual terms and conditions.

I move adjournment of the debate at this point.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on finance and economic affairs and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 151, An Act respecting the Toronto Waterfront Revitalization Corporation / Projet de loi 151, Loi concernant la Société de revitalisation du secteur riverain de Toronto.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated Wednesday, October 16, 2002, the bill is ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on general government and move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill 175, An Act respecting the cost of water and waste water services / Projet de loi 175, Loi concernant le coût des services d'approvisionnement en eau et des services relatifs aux eaux usées.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated November 4, 2002, the bill is ordered for third reading.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

EVES TOLL ROAD ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA ROUTE À PÉAGE EVES

Mr Phillips moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 221, An Act to name Highway 407 / Projet de loi 221, Loi visant à nommer l'autoroute 407.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I've always felt for some time that Premier Eves has not received the recognition he deserves for 407. This bill will name the 407 the Eves Toll Road. I think it will be relatively inexpensive because, as I think most people know, it's called the ETR currently, so the signs will not have to be changed in order to do that.

DEFERRED VOTES

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (SÉCURITÉ DES VÉHICULES DE SECOURS)

Deferred vote on the motion for second reading of Bill 191, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle / Projet de loi 191, Loi modifiant le Code de la route afin de garantir la sécurité des véhicules de secours arrêtés sur une voie publique et celle des personnes qui se trouvent à l'extérieur de tels véhicules.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1353 to 1358.

The Speaker: All those in favour, please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

I also believe we have unanimous consent to wear pins and red roses, the symbol of the national action day of remembrance.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Hon Mrs Cunningham: December 6 is Canada's national Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. The rose button is produced to commemorate this day and to remember the 14 young women killed in Montreal on December 6, 1989, and all women affected by violence, and of course to send our best wishes, personal regards and sympathies, as always, to the victims' families and friends. Violence against women is a societal issue that affects women, men and children. We can all contribute to making our society a healthy one by supporting anti-violence work in our communities.

We all have this bookmark today to remind us. This is a production of the YWCA of Canada's proud sponsorship of the distribution of the rose button. With member associations right across this great country, the YWCA of Canada provides community-based programs and services across the country in areas of anti-violence, housing, child care, employment, training, health, wellness and fitness in a caring, supportive environment. We want to thank them and the hundreds of sponsors who try to keep this day as one for all of us to remember, and to move forward.

Right here in Ontario our government is committed to assisting women and their children to live free from violence. We continue to take a comprehensive approach, across nine ministries, to domestic violence which focuses on protection and prosecution, support for victims and prevention and education. All levels of government and all members of society must work to stop the violence. It's that simple: stop this violence.

Our government, through our Ontario Women's Directorate, is committed to promote both stopping the violence in any way we can across all ministries and to promote women's economic independence. Funding for programs to combat violence against women has increased 70% since 1995. For example, on September 5, 2002, the government announced our most recent commitment of $21.4 million in new funding and measures to further address this serious issue. At the top of the list are shelters and services for women.

Just this morning, the Ontario Women's Health Council, a council of our government, announced a $3-million research program to identify the most effective screening tool for women abuse, and the list goes on; we keep trying in every way we can, together. To be used in a variety of settings, this tool in the health care system will help health care professionals identify abuse earlier and will get women and their children the support they need sooner.

While we've made good progress, I believe, we know that there's always more to do. Just two days ago, the federal-provincial-territorial ministers responsible for the status of women released a statistical profile on violence against women which shows that women continue to be

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before we begin, we have a former colleague in the members' gallery west, Mr Michael Cassidy, the member for Ottawa Centre in the 32nd Parliament. We welcome our colleague.

MEMBER'S BIRTHDAY

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): On a very brief point of order, Mr Speaker: Last week we did recognize the celebration of a 45th wedding anniversary in this House. There is a member who is celebrating her birthday in this place today and I would like to wish her a very happy birthday. That's the Honourable Dianne Cunningham.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Happy birthday, Minister.

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): Thank you very much, everyone.

DAY OF REMEMBRANCE AND ACTION ON VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): I believe we have unanimous consent for all parties to make a five-minute statement to commemorate the national Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women.

more likely victims than men, and victims of the most severe and ongoing forms of spousal assault. I represented our government on that provincial territorial council for six of the seven years that we've been in government. The two focuses of that council right across the country that represents women's issues are, first of all, "Stop the violence," and second, women's economic independence.

Each one of us can make a difference by supporting women's rights to choose their own paths and achieve their goals. Today all of us in this House, in a very non-partisan way, urge everyone to take this message to their communities, to their own homes and to members of their families, and just think about those 14 women who were murdered in Montreal, and remember the many others who have become victims of violence since that day. Their memory motivates and guides us, and we have to remember that it's up to each one of us to make a difference.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): I too rise in memory of the 14 women, the engineering students, who were massacred 13 years ago, and of the hundreds and thousands of women who have died alone in their homes, for whom there is no national day of mourning.

Today in Canada we mark the national Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. The massacre was a tragedy, as well as a significant loss to society. We still struggle for equal female representation in our science-based programs and professions. Programs like engineering still have the challenge of many fewer females than males. At the time of the Montreal massacre, only 13% of engineering students in the country were female. Today it sits at 20%. The 14 women who lost their lives were, therefore, exceptional. They fought against the mould, had fought the stigma and the stereotypes aligned against them.

Let us reflect for one moment on what the years have meant since this most horrific act 13 years ago. The Montreal massacre was the work of someone who blamed those innocent women for his own failure to succeed. He blamed women for preventing him from obtaining what he thought was rightly his. It is this ignorance, this belief, that enables violence against women to continue. By failing to understand that all people are equal, some individuals are able to project their anger, their dissatisfaction with life upon the women in their lives. This is wrong.

Violence against women is not normal, is not OK and can never, ever be rationalized. We must fight the roots of this violence: poverty, ignorance and discrimination of any kind. We must start with good supports for families and sound educational programs. We must, as parents, teach our own children to take responsibility for their own actions.

Despite our efforts in this country to address the tragedy of wife assault, the number of men accused of killing their partners or former partners rose by 33%, with most of the increase occurring in our province. We know what we need to do. The recommendations of the Hadley inquest are clear and need to be implemented. Tragically, women continue to be killed by their partners.

I want to speak once again about the important role that second-stage housing plays in preventing such tragedies. Shelters can only house women and children for up to six to eight weeks. They turn women away because they are full. This is where second-stage housing kicks in and gives secure housing for up to a year, along with consistent counselling for children and women who have been abused and who have observed abuse. It's very important to have this consistency. Before 1995, Ontario funded these programs. They cut the funding the minute they came to power. I'm proud to say that under a Dalton McGuinty government we would reinstate funding for second-stage housing.

A few weeks ago, I brought women from second-stage housing from Hamilton. Yesterday, women came from a rural area to educate all of us on additional barriers to rural women fleeing domestic violence. They came from Norfolk county. They came to ask me to ask the minister responsible for second-stage housing to answer their question. With all due respect to the minister who answered the question, it was not what the people came here to hear. They came to hear from the minister for women's issues.

When I went back to my office, I received an e-mail from a young University of Toronto student I don't know. "I am studying here at the University of Toronto, and my friend Patrick and I sometimes stop by to listen in on question period. We were here today and witnessed the horrible reception given to the petitioners that" came "down to Toronto. Dianne Cunningham's 'response' to your questions on second-stage housing was unbelievable, and I was disgusted and ashamed to be a citizen of a province that would abandon these women with such cold-hearted cruelty—not even to look them in the face and answer a simple question is appalling."

Some of the barriers they brought in do have to do with the area of the minister for community and social services, who responded. Jennifer, for example, lost her children voluntarily because she didn't have shelter. Paige, 32 years old, with three children aged 10, six and four, exposed the difficulties with Ontario Works when you're fleeing abuse. The police told her, and quite rightly so, to get to a shelter. She had to leave a job to get to the shelter. When she asked for help, she had to go through all the details of her abuse so that she could convince the authorities she had to leave her job. These are just some of the many stories I heard yesterday.

Thirteen years ago, 14 women were sacrificed. Since then, hundreds have suffered the loss of their lives at the hands of their partners or former partners. Let's finally work to address this tragedy and not let them have died in vain.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Once again, I rise in this House on behalf of the New Democratic Party to send our condolences, even 13 years later, to the families, friends and loved ones of the 14 young women who died in Montreal. Once again, all these years later, we mourn and we remember.

I don't know about others in this Legislature and those who may be watching, but tomorrow is December 6, and I will once again be at a ceremony at Women's College Hospital holding in my hand a red rose to symbolize the life of one of those young women who was gunned down that horrible day, 13 years ago.

Having done that every year for a number of years, perhaps it keeps it fresher in my mind, because I sit there with the other women and we hold those red roses, each symbolizing the name of a young woman who used to live, who was bursting with life, full of promise, and who was gunned down. At the end of that ceremony, we all walk to the front of the room and we each put our rose in that vase, and at the end of the ceremony you can't help but look at those red roses sitting in the vase and try to imagine the faces of these vibrant young women who were gunned down that day.

Today, I have some other names to read out in this Legislature. These are the names of women and children, family and friends, murdered in Ontario in the year 2002. They've been killed and we must not forget them either. They have been killed at the hands of spouses or ex-spouses: Karen Grubb, 33, a mother of three children; Wadha Albadri, 29, mother of three children; Glenda LaSalle, 36; Linda Mariani, mother of one; Alexis Currie; Marisa Pasqualino, 36, mother of four children; Shirley Snow, 44; Jessica Nethery, 21; Maria Fitzulak, 26, mother of two children; Mary Ellen Filer, 48, mother of two children; Shannon Cruse, 23, her daughter, Shaniya, 6, and her parents, Mary and Donald Cruse; Libuse Vesely, 77; Patrycja Skibinska, 17; Karen Drinkwalter, mother of two; Kelly Glover, 36, mother of two; Cheryl Lynn Topping, 19; Robert Lawrence Mends, two; Gail Bonita Blunt, 39, mother of two; Ling Wang, 32; Patricia Loyal, 48, and her daughter, Marissa, 13; Tracy Lynn Sweet, 32; and Betty Card, 15.

These are the names of women and children who in most cases have been killed by their spouses or ex-spouses in the past year. As we speak about this today, we have to understand that right now Ontario stands alone as the one province in Canada in which violence against women has spiralled tragically out of control. Across Canada, abuse is declining while in Ontario killings of women by their spouses or ex-spouses jumped by 25% in one year. The number jumped to 69 from 52 with virtually all the increase in Ontario from 2000 and 2001.

This year, the number has increased yet again. A survey of media stories provides us with a grim picture: 19 women have been killed by their spouses or ex-spouses in 2002. So I would say this today: it is time for the government to implement the recommendations of the May-Iles and Hadley inquiries. You must act on the emergency measures proposed by the coalition of 165 women's groups. You must solve the crises. The auditor found in last year's report women and children being turned away from overcrowded women's shelters in eight out of Ontario's nine regions. You must fund or re-fund second-stage housing again.

Once again, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I send out my condolences and thoughts to the families and loved ones of the 14 women murdered in Montreal and to all the families of all the women and children murdered by their spouses or ex-spouses in this province.

The Speaker: Would all the members and our friends in the gallery kindly rise for a moment of silence.

The House observed a moment's silence.

The Speaker: I thank all members.

VISITORS

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Sarah Donaldson has been a page from Perth-Middlesex. She comes from the Middlesex part of the riding. Today she would want me to introduce her mom and dad, who are in the members' west gallery, her two sisters who came with her and her paternal and maternal grandmothers.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member and welcome our guests.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On a point of order, Speaker: I want this chamber to join me in welcoming Carolyn Walker to this Assembly and, in addition, wishing her a happy birthday this coming weekend.

The Speaker: Happy birthday.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ACADEMIC TESTING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I have a question for the Minister of Education. I want to ask you about the report card that came out on your government's handling of education today. It came in the form of the education quality office's test results for grade 3 and grade 6. For the last five years, half of the kids in this province in those grades have been struggling to meet the provincial standard for reading and writing, and 40% have been struggling to meet the provincial standard for mathematics. It's almost unchanged. There is no improvement. Worse than that, this year there are still 38,000 kids in grade 9 taking applied math who did not reach the provincial standard in applied mathematics. I want to ask you, are you satisfied with those results for students in Ontario?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): Yes, the results did become public today. I think it's important to keep in mind that our government was actually the very first one in the history of this province to identify and set about the means to measure literacy and numeracy skills so we could use that knowledge to support and provide the resources to the students in the classroom. That also means we're going to have to make sure the resources reach the teachers so we can give them the support they need.

I would simply say to you that we are making progress, but there is more work to be done. That's why we've set up the early numeracy and early literacy programs.

Mr Kennedy: Minister, there are 38,000 kids who are not getting their credits, who are not passing the test in grade 9, and you're sitting there, satisfied. Their results would have been better, and the grade 3 and grade 6 results would have been better, if not for your negligence.

When you brought in this historic test you referred to, the very agency you set up said to you, "Set a target. Be serious about how well students do. Take responsibility for how well they do in school. Then also provide the resources." I would submit that you've failed to do either.

We have set a target in our plan. We believe that 75% of Ontario's children should reach the provincial standard within four years.

Minister, I want to ask you, on behalf of those 38,000 children in grade 9 who are waiting for you to respond, on behalf of all the kids who had to go through this testing that you spent $50 million on, will you adopt our target and start taking responsibility for helping kids do better in our schools?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I might just remind the member opposite that it was our government that first decided to even undertake this. I don't remember your government ever deciding to do this. I'm glad, finally, even though you haven't supported it in the past, that you now recognize that there is some value to identifying how well our students are doing and then providing the necessary resources.

Let me tell you what we've done. As a result of what we know, we now have remediation supports, which are being targeted to help the students in need. In fact, there is $25 million for students annually in grades 7 to 10. There's $70 million in ongoing funding to help improve reading. We have, as I said before, introduced early reading and math strategies. As you know, we have extended those from JK to grade 6.

We have support for students at risk. In fact, today I have a committee of people from across the province of Ontario who are helping us to make sure that we have the plan, we have the strategies and we have the resources to support those students who need extra help. We've invested $370 million to help our teachers.

Mr Kennedy: This is seven years of turmoil and neglect. To see the minister rise in the House content with how badly students are faring—80% of the students taking applied math failed this test, Minister, and you stand in this House happy with that result. I'll give you an example of what your intervention looks like. This year you've cut the spending on early reading by two thirds. Minister, more than that, you spent $3 million on television ads—expensive, slick television ads—to talk about early reading. Instead, what do we find out today? We find out that for achievement in grade 3 there has been no improvement; 50% of grade 3s still can't meet the provincial standard—the same as five years ago.

Minister, will you today take responsibility, set a target and commit the resources to have kids in this province do better, or will you continue to squander $50 million of our education money on tests that go nowhere under your administration?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I just heard the finance minister say that this is Liberal math that the member opposite is using. However, I would say to you that the information that we have is that if we take a look at how our students are doing internationally—and I think this is important—I can tell you that our tough new curriculum, with the support of our hard-working, dedicated teachers, is demonstrating that Ontario students are doing well. In English, Ontario's ranking in Canada improved from 15th to 14th—this was in the English math program. Internationally, in reading for 15-year-old students among 32 countries, only Finland did better than Ontario. In science for grade 8 French students it's 30 points higher—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Minister of Public Safety and Security. Your reaction over the past two days to the Provincial Auditor's report goes against the rules and traditions of this place. Following the auditor's report you said—and this is a direct quote from a recording, "I'm implying that it's certainly, with many respects, inaccurate and misleading." When confronted yesterday, you said that you—and again I'm quoting—"never said such things." When confronted by the media yesterday you denied saying these things. Minister, the Provincial Auditor is an officer of this Legislature. You attempted to undermine his reputation for competence and impartiality. Do you believe this is appropriate conduct for a minister of the crown?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I don't think I did what the member opposite is suggesting. In fact, I'm a former chairman of the standing committee on public accounts. I worked with Mr Peters and his predecessor, Doug Archer. I have enormous respect for the officeholders, the office and the role they play.

I'm also the minister responsible for public safety and security. When this office releases a report that indicates there are 3,000 serious offenders wandering the streets of Ontario unmonitored, I think I have a responsibility as minister to respond to that. When facts are placed before me by officials within my ministry which are dramatically contradictory to what was released by the Provincial Auditor, again, I believe, as the minister responsible for this portfolio, I have a responsibility to make those facts public.

Mr Duncan: Minister, the auditor said today that you challenged the credibility of his office. He confirmed and demonstrated that there are 10,000 outstanding arrest warrants in Ontario, some dating back 10 years. During committee today, the auditor made a very compelling case that the numbers you cited are in fact incorrect. Instead of fixing the problem, you have attempted, and even today are attempting, to discredit the auditor. We believe this behaviour does not become a minister of the crown.

Will you now acknowledge that the facts put forward by the Provincial Auditor are the correct facts, and that what you said and did in this House was not an appropriate response to such a significant issue?

Hon Mr Runciman: My deputy is certainly prepared to sit down with Mr Peters and discuss this issue with him. He has indicated that to me today.

I want to say that with respect to this whole issue of the numbers, when we're talking about the relevance and accuracy of the numbers, when you publish a figure of 3,000 serious offenders in our community being unmonitored, it's a serious suggestion, accusation or allegation. I have a responsibility to pursue that.

The auditor has indicated that his numbers were an estimate. I think in committee he said "a best guess-timate." Our numbers are based on CPIC. I don't want to get into a stone-throwing contest with the auditor. That's the least of my concerns. My concern is allaying any public safety concerns that were raised as a result of the publication of those numbers. The numbers I've been provided with by the ministry officials based on CPIC analysis are the ones I will stand by.

Mr Duncan: Minister, referring to the auditor's report, you said, "I'm implying that it's certainly, with many respects, inaccurate and misleading." Three times you repeated the word "inaccurate." Twice you repeated "misleading." You even questioned his fairness, saying, "Maybe that's not his role." This is an unprecedented attack by a minister of the crown on the Provincial Auditor. As bad as that was, you made it worse when you came into this House and denied making the statement you had clearly made.

This is not about the integrity of the auditor, whose report is clear. The auditor gave your deputy minister and your officials many opportunities to reply to the numbers, and they never did. The first time we had it was yesterday. The auditor puts a compelling case that in fact his numbers are accurate and yours aren't. Why don't you do the right thing and acknowledge that the auditor's numbers are right and that you as minister have not done enough to deal with the serious issues he's raised in this House and in this Legislature?

Hon Mr Runciman: This is certainly not about the integrity of Mr Peters. I have enormous respect for him and the job he does. He raised, I think, some serious and relevant issues. I'm not happy with 178 serious offenders not being monitored. I wouldn't be happy with one. But I think I have a responsibility when the auditor puts a figure out, an estimate suggesting to the public of Ontario that there are 3,000 serious offenders on the streets of this province, to check that out. I have a responsibility to put the real facts on the table. What the opposition is suggesting is that I should not respond in a truthful way to this situation. That's not a role I'm prepared to play simply to be politically correct.

HYDRO GENERATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Energy. The independent market operator tells us that this week several electricity generating stations are out of commission; they're not producing electricity. He also tells us that Ontario is close to brownouts and blackouts because of that situation. Yet, because you don't want the people of Ontario to know about the nasty part of hydro deregulation and privatization, which generating stations are shut down is kept secret from the public. You've imposed an information blackout on the consumers of Ontario. Minister, which electricity generating stations are down and why are you trying to hide this information from the hydro consumers who deserve to know it and need to know it?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): To listen to the question of the member opposite, you would think that he would suggest that we're trying to keep brownouts from the people of the province of Ontario. There haven't been any, and they're certainly not anything we would want to keep from the public.

I do think it's important that in a competitive market environment we respect the obvious challenge that full disclosure would pose. If people knew that one plant was down, that could help a competing firm, whether it was Ontario Power Generation or another market participant. I don't think that would be in the best interests of consumers. I don't think it would be in the best interests of competitive and low prices for working families in the province.

Mr Hampton: Minister, you can get this information on a Web site in California, and you can get it on a Web site in Alberta. They don't seem to share your concern. In fact, what's really going on here is that by keeping all this information secret, you're really saying you are more in favour of corporate secrecy than you are of protecting the public interest. What it means is that the hydro-electricity system can be manipulated and the price driven through the roof. Minister, don't you think the people of Ontario deserve to know whether or not the lights and the heat will come on when they flick on the switch?

Hon Mr Baird: The people of Ontario just have to flick the switch and they'll know whether the lights come on. It'll happen 365 days a year.

I never thought I would see the leader of the third party stand in his place and say, "Well, they do it in California. They do it in Alberta. Why can't we do it here?" Obviously, there are competitive reasons why you wouldn't want such information disclosed in the current system that we have in Ontario. We did have a number of units off being refitted, making the substantial investments in anti-pollution and pollution abatement materials with our coal plants. There were a few coal plants down because the Ernie Eves government is making substantial investments in anti-pollution and pollution abatement equipment at those coal-fired plants. On occasion, a unit or two will go off in various plants, and that was a concern earlier this week. But I was pleased that the professionals at the independent market operator worked hard and the lights stayed on.

Mr Hampton: Yes, the hydro independent market operator had to import 3,000 megawatts of electricity to save your bacon, Minister. The result of that is that the price of electricity in the deregulated, privatized system rose to 23 cents per kilowatt hour. That's five times what you're trying to tell the public out there the price is. You hope that by imposing hydro rate caps of 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour you can hide that 23 cents per kilowatt hour price from people, but all it means is this: what people aren't paying now before the election, they will pay for even more after the election when their hydro bills go through the roof. That's what's really going on.

Minister, don't you think it's time you simply admitted that hydro privatization and deregulation isn't working in terms of providing stable supplies of power? It certainly isn't working in terms of price when you have to cover up a price that's five times what you say it is. Why don't you just end it now, rather than continuing with this charade?

Hon Mr Baird: In fact, he is correct. The price did reach almost 23 cents on the day. It also reached as low as six cents a kilowatt hour. I know the member opposite would want to put that on the record. Obviously it was a concern with respect to the price of electricity on those days. I think it's important that the IMO went to work on behalf of the people of Ontario.

Every day in the five years the NDP were in power, every single day, we imported electricity. It's not something new in this period after May 1. So the member opposite certainly did not practise what he preaches when he was in government.

We brought forward an action plan to lower hydro rates to 4.3 cents for consumers, for working families, for small business people, for farm operators. I think that's in the best interests of the people of the province. It allows us to work at bringing on new supply where we'll see more than 3,200 megawatts of new electricity available to the people of Ontario next year that we didn't have this summer. That'll be good for consumers, it'll be good to keep the lights on and I believe it'll have a very positive effect on price.

CONTAMINATED SOIL

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): My question is for the Minister of the Environment. The people of Port Colborne risk getting sick from soil contaminated by the Inco nickel smelter, and now they have to live with the knowledge that you don't care. Your government's own health risk assessment, completed in March 2000, shows that the risk of cancer from contaminated soil is 16 times higher than your own government's guidelines, yet you accepted a cleanup order that didn't even consider the cancer risk. When the residents appealed that order, we find out that you, your Environmental Review Tribunal and the Inco lawyers take the position that cancer is not a human health issue. Minister, I ask you, how can you sleep at night knowing that you violated your own guidelines and are exposing Port Colborne residents to 16 times the acceptable cancer risk?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Just to get it on the record off the top, obviously cancer is a medical and health issue, and of course we take it very seriously. To suggest otherwise I think may become a little too partisan, with respect to the question. I don't think anyone here would suggest for a moment that in any situation where cancer is caused, it's not a serious issue we should all be looking at.

I appreciate your question. I understand the concerns of the people in the community. Inco has commissioned a community-based risk assessment for soil remediation in Port Colborne. The CBRA process was approved by city council in 2000 and included establishment of a public liaison committee to ensure the public is represented and consulted throughout the process. The Ministry of the Environment will continue to address soil contamination. The draft reports for ecological and human health risk assessment components and community-based risk assessment are scheduled for technical review by a technical steering committee component, a public liaison committee in June 2003.

To suggest we've ignored this issue I think is profoundly unfair. We've been on top of this. We've been working with Inco. We've been working with the community. I've been working with Mr Hudak, who represents the community and is very cognizant of the issue and cares very deeply for these people.

Ms Churley: Minister, I want a specific answer that you are going to include the cancer risk in the soil cleanup. You can make all the excuses you want, but this is your responsibility. The facts remain: the people of Port Colborne have to endure a greater than acceptable cancer risk. They are fearing for the health of their community. Your own study of two years ago shows that the cancer risk is 16 times higher than the acceptable guidelines, yet you ignored that serious risk in your cleanup order. That is a fact.

Minister, you have a choice to make here. You can stick up for Inco, a big corporation that doesn't want to clean up, to spend the money to clean up this mess, or you can stick up for the health of the people of Port Colborne and order Inco to clean up the contamination and protect their health. Which is it going to be?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm fairly certain that you're not treating this in a partisan, unfair, unreasonable fashion. I know the member to be a very honourable member.

I can say to you that you know that the cancer risk issue will be dealt with in the community-based risk assessment process. I know that you're not suggesting for a moment that anyone in this ministry, anyone in this government would countenance any risk to the health of the people of this province with respect to cancer-causing issues. I know you wouldn't make that allegation. I know, because no honourable member in this House would make it. I know that you know that we've worked with the community. I know that you know we've met with the community and created community-based associations to deal with the risk management. I know that you would never suggest that I would be part of any process that would put the health of constituents in this province at risk of getting cancer. I know you would never say that.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): My question is to the Minister of Public Safety and Security. As a senior member of this Assembly and a senior minister of the crown, and as past Chair of the public accounts committee, I'm positive that you think it's absolutely necessary that the integrity of the offices of this Assembly be maintained, because they report not to you, not to us, but to all of us as representatives of the people of Ontario. He told us in committee on more than one occasion this morning that the numbers were cleared with your ministry and the methodology he used. I'm quoting directly: He states, "The numbers were cleared with the bureaucracy of the ministry." On at least five or six occasions over the last five or six months he met with senior members, including the deputy minister for your ministry, and—again I'm quoting—"No concerns were expressed to us by the ministry. The only thing the ministry was concerned about was that it was police responsibility to enforce the warrants."

Taking all that into account, and taking into account what you said about him, how he was misleading us, do you not think that at this time it is appropriate for you to apologize to him and to us, and through us to the people of Ontario, for what you said about his report the other day?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I'm certainly not about to apologize to the honourable member opposite, but I will say that we have a disagreement here. The deputy has agreed to sit down with Mr Peters and discuss this. I've given the accurate figures as provided by the ministry, off CPIC, and no apology is necessary. Once again I want to indicate that nothing I've said reflects on the integrity of Mr Peters as the Provincial Auditor of this province. I respect him as an individual and very much respect the job he's doing.

Mr Gerretsen: Let me quote something else that you said. These are quotes from the press conference, from the scrum that you gave the other day: "And when you have someone like the Provincial Auditor using an estimate, and he admits it's an estimate, and using a high-end estimate, you know, I'm obviously bothered by that. I'm concerned that it leaves a wrong impression, a misleading impression." That's what you said.

He has met with your deputy and other senior members on at least a half-dozen occasions. He has had all the meetings. They went through the numbers. As a matter of fact, what he said in committee this morning was that he used a lower estimate, because they had actually talked about a higher number than 10,000. By the way, you darn well know that not every municipal police reports to CPIC. The CPIC numbers have nothing to do with the numbers he quoted and the numbers that were agreed to by your ministry when they met with him. They signed off on the facts that he put in his report. Will you not do the right thing now and either resign or apologize for what you said about him?

Hon Mr Runciman: With respect to the discussions that occurred, I think we've agreed to disagree. With regard to CPIC versus best guesses, I'll opt for CPIC every time.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question this afternoon is to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday you provided the members of this House with an update on the province's economic outlook when you delivered the fall statement. I was very pleased to hear that growth for this year will be strong and that forecasts were revised upwards to 3.5% real growth from 3.2% projected at the time of the budget. I noticed, though, that next year's growth is expected to be 3.5%, compared to the previous forecast of 4.3% that you made at the time of the budget. Does this mean that my constituents in the great riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale and people across Ontario should be worried about the economy?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I thank the honourable member for the question. There's no question that private forecasters have a more cautious outlook for the global economy next year. But still with that, in Ontario we are doing better and we are expected to do better than our G7 nation colleagues, if you will, with real growth next year of 3.5%. I think it is very good news that the economy is rebounding from the just over 1% growth that we had last year. But I think what probably proves the point even more is the fact that we have over a million net new jobs in this province. The majority of them are full-time jobs, with job growth in every region of the province: the north, the south, the east, the west and central. These are jobs for Ontario families that help them keep the promise for growth and prosperity.

Mr Gill: Minister, thank you for that answer. While I'm very pleased to hear that we are on track for a fourth consecutive balanced budget, I wonder how the need to invest in priorities and meet economic challenges will affect this noble goal. Will our government have to sell over $2 billion worth of assets in order to balance our books?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I think it's important to recognize that when we came into office in 1995, we inherited a government that was spending $1 million more an hour, going into debt. We turned that debt train around. We stopped it dead in its tracks. We've been paying back the debt, over $4.5 billion. In the June budget we set out a plan. As the budget indicated, through SuperBuild we are going to continue to review assets that the government owns to ensure that taxpayers are getting the value they should be getting out of those assets. We laid the plan for revenues and expenditures in the budget. We are proceeding with that plan to another balanced budget.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): My question is to the Minister of Public Safety and Security. Earlier today, contradicting what you said in scrum and in this House, the Provincial Auditor backed up his numbers with the following. He told the public accounts committee that he ran his numbers past your officials, including your deputy minister, several times and not once had they raised this concern. In your scrum, you implied in fact that he had never spoken to your officials about these issues. Can you tell us, then, Minister, how it is you can say on the one hand that the auditor had not consulted with your officials, and then turn around and say in fact he's wrong, without having ever criticized him? The simple fact is that your version of the numbers is not correct; the auditor's is. The auditor backed his numbers up sufficiently today. Will you tell us how that can happen? If you can't give a better explanation, why won't you resign until this is resolved?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): He should resign for not coming up with original questions. That's three in a row.

I said to the earlier questioner, the member for Kingston and the Islands, that we have agreed to disagree on that with respect to the auditor's position. I have been assured by officials in my ministry that officials did challenge the numbers and did challenge the methodology. The deputy is going to sit down. He's had that discussion with Mr Peters. We're going to pursue that. Obviously we have a misunderstanding somewhere along the line, but certainly the view from my ministry officials is that indeed they did challenge the numbers and the methodology.

Mr Duncan: First of all, nobody agrees to disagree. In fact, the auditor certainly doesn't agree to disagree. The auditor has been very clear: his numbers are accurate. This is the first time we can determine that any minister of the crown has openly challenged an auditor, openly challenged an audit procedure, when in fact, before this was released, your ministry officials, including your deputy minister, had the opportunity on at least five occasions to challenge the numbers and didn't do it.

At what point, then, did your ministry decide to change the numbers? Why did they wait until this was made public? Why weren't those numbers challenged in the meetings? Will you now produce the evidence to say that your story hasn't changed from the time they were discussed internally until the time the report was released publicly the day before yesterday?

Hon Mr Runciman: The member opposite doesn't know whether he's coming or going on this issue; really, he does not. He talks about openly challenging an audit. That's what he just said. Has he ever heard of an audit that uses estimates or best guesstimates? We're talking about public safety issues here. We're talking about serious offenders on the streets of the province.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Runciman: That's right, absolutely right. You're saying, on one hand, you can say a figure here which is perhaps incorrect, but I don't have a responsibility to say what the facts are. That's what he's saying. That's a Liberal's view of responsibility. It's not a Conservative view of responsibility.

INNOVATION INDEX

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): My question is for the Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation. Of course, I'm speaking about the Honourable David Turnbull, the innovative, enterprising, hard-working member for Don Valley West.

Minister, I wanted to take this opportunity to bring to your attention the enterprise of the people of Stratford and the Discovery Centre. I'll get into more of the details with you when I have the specific request for help from your ministry.

I understand that earlier today you received Ontario's first innovation index. Can you take a moment and tell the members of this House and the people of Perth-Middlesex about the index and detail some of the findings from that study?

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): The innovation index, which was released by the Ontario Science and Innovation Council today, tells us where Ontario stands in terms of innovation. I'm pleased to report to the House that Ontario is faring very well overall.

Ontario ranks very high on a number of important indicators. We have a highly skilled workforce. In fact, Ontario has the highest population of bachelors' and masters' degrees in Canada. Household Internet use is up from 33% in 1997 to over 63% in 2001. With respect to the availability of venture capital for innovation, Ontario leads the rest of Canada and is one of the best among the Great Lakes states.

Mr Johnson: One of those other enterprising, opportunistic and innovative projects in my riding is the Canadian Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum in St Marys. They deserve an honourable mention at this time as well.

I know the index provides an excellent complement to the report of the Task Force on Competitiveness, Productivity and Economic Progress that was released last month at the Ontario Innovation Summit, which you of course attended and I did as well. Minister, can you elaborate on the findings of the innovation index and tell the members of the House how they compare with those of the first report of the task force?

Hon Mr Turnbull: In fact, the index report echoes many of the findings of the Martin task force. Outside of the United States, Ontario is now the most productive place on the face of the earth. Ontario has one of the most attractive R&D tax credit systems in the world. The after-tax cost of $100 of R&D in Ontario can be as low as $41. We have already stated that by the year 2006, Ontario will have the lowest combined corporate tax rate in the whole of North America. But there is still work to be done. We must work to close the prosperity gap with the United States and we must continue to promote commercialization.

The Martin report and the innovation index both indicate Ontario's—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a question to the Minister of Health. In Niagara, there are no in-patient hospital mental health services for children. Why did you let the eight youth mental health beds intended for Niagara end up being located in Hamilton?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): In fact, our investments in all aspects of mental health have been a point of pride for this government. The investments since 1995 are certainly in the double digits, in the mid-20% range. The honourable member is also referring to, I believe, some of the investments that we intend to make once we have more of a handle on institutional care and what is appropriate for institutional care, but also what is appropriate for community care. We are certainly working with the implementation task forces to get those recommendations and to make the right decisions.

Mr Kormos: Minister, there is a crisis in mental health care for youth and adolescents in Niagara region. There has been a recent spate of teen suicides in Welland. The eight youth mental health beds in Hamilton are impossible to access. That means that competent, caring psychiatrists like Dr Thoppil Abraham have to put youth, children and adolescents into adult psychiatric wards when they require hospitalization. That's not only counterproductive in terms of treatment, it's downright dangerous. You know it, or you ought to know it.

There are no in-patient hospital mental health services for children in Niagara. Why aren't you creating beds in Niagara to accommodate those children in extreme crisis, their families and the communities?

Hon Mr Clement: The honourable member is talking about a particular situation. I would certainly undertake to review it with him in greater detail. I would say this, however: when you look at the totality of our investments in this area, there has been a $212-million increase in mental health investment since 1995-96. A lot of it, I will certainly concede to the honourable member, is community-based investment. Our investment in community-based mental health services has gone up by 92% because we've been trying to focus our investments in that area. That is the consensus amongst those who know the mental health area the best, that we have to focus in on more community-based mental health care and less so on institutional-based mental health care. We are following those recommendations and, indeed, we have put our money where our mouth is.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I'd like to go back to the Minister of Public Safety and Security. The reason for doing that is because what you stated here earlier this afternoon when you said, "We agree to disagree," just isn't good enough, Minister.

The auditor was very clear, and I quote once again: "The numbers were cleared with the ministry, as well as the methodology used. We are in a very vigorous fact-finding process." He says that none of the numbers he produced were disputed by anyone within your ministry at any of the meetings he had. The last contact he had with your ministry, as a matter of fact, was on November 13, just immediately prior to putting the entire report together so we would have it here earlier this week. He says the number was cleared with bureaucrats of the ministry: "No concerns were expressed to me at all by the ministry." How can you possibly say, "We agree to disagree on the numbers"? He cleared the numbers with the ministry and, if anything, downplayed them.

If you feel the way you do, why don't you resign? Because what you're saying here is in direct contradiction of what he told the public accounts committee this morning.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): As is frequently the case, the member's argument is nonsensical, at best. I indicated earlier that I acknowledge what the member is saying with respect to, I gather, the auditor's testimony at committee. I'm indicating that the officials in my ministry have a different view of the world with respect to how these conversations occurred or did not occur. The deputy has called the Provincial Auditor and had a preliminary discussion. They are going to meet to discuss and review the situation.

Mr Gerretsen: He's now saying that basically he agrees with what the auditor said this morning in committee. You can't have it both ways. He cleared these numbers with your ministry over the last six months. You are publicly disowning those numbers. As a matter of fact, in your scrums you are saying that they are "inaccurate and misleading." Let me quote you again. You said, "I'm obviously bothered by that. I'm concerned that it leaves a wrong impression, a misleading impression" about a report that comes here from an officer of this assembly, on whom we all rely to make sure the taxpayers get value for money. You are disputing that. I think the proper thing for you to do, sir, is to resign until this matter gets resolved.

Hon Mr Runciman: Talk about convoluted logic. I stand by the numbers I was provided with by my ministry. I stand by the position that they take, that consultation did occur. There was a disagreement with respect to the numbers and the methodology used. If anyone should be resigning, perhaps it's the member for Kingston and the Islands for failing to clean up after his dog.

BORDER SECURITY

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): My question is for the great Minister of Public Safety and Security. Earlier this week the Commons committee for foreign affairs and international trade warned Canadians that our national government has failed to recognize the importance of common cross-border trade and security issues with our continental partners. In fact, this Liberal-dominated Commons committee has urged a proactive, strategic agenda to safeguard Canadian interests, including consideration of a continental security perimeter.

Minister, no one, I believe, has been more forceful in advocating for enhanced and effective security built upon the security perimeter concept than you, yourself, Ontario's Minister of Public Safety and Security. I would like to ask you for an update on our efforts to achieve this goal for all Ontarians.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): The threat of terrorism is multifaceted. At its most immediate it includes threats to persons and property, but for Ontario it also includes a threat to our economic security and the unprecedented prosperity and liberty it helps bring about. Ensuring security and confidence on both sides of the 49th parallel is a key component, a key strategy, in protecting and preserving the cross-border trade between our two nations.

Immediately following the terrorist attacks in the United States, Ontario took decisive action: a cross-border round table of industry leaders, a counter-terrorism summit and a Michigan-Ontario summit. I visited New York City to meet with counter-terrorism officials. We've appointed security advisors and created a security council, among other measures. The Eves government supports the concept of a continental security perimeter to ensure the safety and security of our province and to make sure it doesn't come at the price of closed borders, plant shutdowns and economic crisis.

Ms Mushinski: Minister, I want to thank you for what I consider to be a very comprehensive and detailed answer.

It's obvious that Ontario has recognized that leaving public security up to the federal Liberals naturally is a mistake. We're evidently taking the lead in ensuring that Ontarians' safety and security is well in hand. I want to ask the minister if he could provide us with his thoughts on what lies ahead to secure the common continental security perimeter, because obviously we can't trust the federal Liberals to do it.

Hon Mr Runciman: For Ontario we continue to work to ensure integration of effort at home and co-operation of activity across the border. We've advised Ottawa, for example, that living up to the 30-point agreement reached between Governor Ridge and Deputy Prime Minister Manley is an obligation that is in our best interest.

We've told Ottawa that it's time—in fact, long past time—that we get coordinated, integrated security straight at our seaports, our airports, and our border crossings. We need to create common databases with our global partners so that the Mohamed Attas and Ahmed Bassams of the world that would do us harm are never permitted to enter our countries to plot and execute their evil.

We need to work with each other to ensure that persons refused entry or deported from one of our jurisdictions for security reasons do not find refuge in the other. We need to co-operate as never before to shut down those that would raise money to fund terrorist activities here, in the United States and abroad.

In summary, our challenge and our opportunity is to work with our neighbours in common cause to protect and preserve our liberty, our security and our prosperity, and I want to assure Ontarians that the Eves government is working hard to meet that challenge.

MINISTRY OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is to the Minister of Natural Resources and requires just a simple yes or no answer. It appears that the member for Oklahoma has again created another crisis in another ministry. Did your staff tell you that your ministry has no plan to manage species at risk? You shut down the walleye and whitefish industry with no numbers to support it—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Member take his seat. The member will know that there is no member for Oklahoma. I would ask that you not get involved in that. Please withdraw it.

Mr Parsons: I withdraw it, Speaker. Thank you.

You paid $2 million to a call centre that did not answer 65% of its reservation calls. Less than half of the parks have a management plan. You have no inventory of resources to be protected. Have your staff told you that they don't even know what your ministry owns? Minister, did your senior people tell you that 70% of your superintendents say their parks cannot enforce your rules? And, lastly, have your senior staff told you that your senior people have said to the auditor that they do not have sufficient staff or budget to do their jobs?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): I thank the member for the question. He touched on a lot of issues there regarding the auditor's report. I think we can start off by addressing the park plans. Clearly, 95% of the parks within the province of Ontario do have park plans. The ones that do not have park plans are very remote areas or very few individuals would attend those areas. The parks clearly do have a large number of plans. Over 95% of the parks in the province of Ontario do have plans.

Mr Parsons: The auditor noted that most of them are long out of date. It seems that the only animals in this province that are safe are the ones that your ministry doesn't manage.

But it gets worse. The majority of your infrastructure is between 20 and 45 years old. Eighty per cent of your park superintendents say that the funding is inadequate. They rate two thirds of their infrastructure as out of date.

Even more serious than anything I've said, the auditor states that "there is a risk that the ministry will operate provincial parks for the 2003 season with water treatment and distribution systems that do not meet provincial standards." The auditor cannot assure the people of Ontario that they will have safe water in their parks.

Minister, I am asking you, will you guarantee the people of Ontario that the parks will be safe for them this coming summer?

Hon Mr Ouellette: I hope the member realizes that we have over 10 million visitors annually to our provincial parks and are very proud of that figure in itself. The numbers are up over 20% from the mid-1990s to 2002 and, very clearly, our parks will have safe drinking water.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): My question today is for the Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, the strong member from Scarborough Southwest, the Honourable Dan Newman. I'm proud to be part of a government that has demonstrated such a strong commitment over the years to meeting the long-term-care needs of Ontario's seniors. I am very pleased to say that in my riding of Niagara Falls, the new Meadows of Dorchester facility is set to open this week and become home to 128 residents from an older long-term-care facility in the area.

I know how much this move to a brand new home means to many of my constituents and their families. In fact, my 92-year-old grandmother-in-law, Lillian Tozer, will be moving into the new facility.

I would appreciate it if the associate minister could tell my constituents and this House about the province's investment in this tremendous new facility.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): It's always my pleasure to respond to the hard-working member from Niagara Falls.

The new and state-of-the-art $13.7-million Meadows of Dorchester facility in Niagara Falls is one that will make an incredible difference in the lives of residents, their families and loved ones. That's because it will provide a level of care that quite simply is second to none. The facility is located on 9.2 acres of land. It's 76,000 square feet in size. Staff have described it as a dream come true for residents. The new home follows our government's new construction guidelines for new long-term-care facilities and is divided into four neighbourhoods of 30 rooms, allowing residents to develop close relationships with each other and to feel more at home. Residents will also enjoy the benefits of new meeting rooms, a chapel, a salon and courtyards.

The Meadows of Dorchester's administrator has described the facility's new residents as "ready to move and just raring to go." I wish them the very best as they make this facility their new home.

Mr Maves: It is truly a beautiful facility that those residents will be moving into. We in Niagara are always happy to welcome the minister to our area of the world. He usually comes with good tidings and a shovel to do groundbreakings for new facilities.

I'm very pleased to hear that our government's commitment to long-term care is making such a difference in the lives of my constituents and the lives of residents in facilities all across Ontario. In fact, it was my pleasure to join the associate minister last July for the groundbreaking ceremony for yet another brand new long-term-care facility that is being built in the Niagara region.

I would like to ask the associate minister to please update my constituents on the status of our government's long-term-care-bed implementation initiatives in the Niagara service area.

Hon Mr Newman: I'm pleased to say that all operators that have been awarded long-term-care beds in the Niagara region are proceeding with fulfilling their commitments to the area, commitments that total 1,480 new and redeveloped beds in the Niagara service area. The Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care's long-term-care redevelopment project is in regular contact with each awardee to obtain information on the status of the projects.

I'd like to tell the honourable member that in the city of Niagara Falls, 320 new long-term-care beds and 120 redeveloped beds are in the process of being constructed, with 160 of the new beds expected to be completed in the next month. There is no question that these new and redeveloped beds will mean even better long-term-care services to the people in the Niagara region and across Ontario now and in the years to come.

CONSIDERATION OF BILL 213

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the government House leader, the Minister of the Environment. Bill 213 includes long-overdue changes to make the practice of public accounting accessible to all chartered accountants, certified general accountants and certified management accountants who meet the prescribed high standards. Bill 213 has also created a huge lobbying campaign by chartered accountants who want the accounting reforms to die.

New Democrats want Bill 213 to pass. We want these accounting changes passed into law as soon as possible. We believe these accounting reforms are important. Minister, will you give unanimous consent to vote on these important accounting changes, to vote on this bill today?

Interjections: Yes, yes.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I appreciate all the assistance from my friends behind me.

I will say that we introduce legislation in the House all the time, as you know, and we introduced that legislation with the idea of the legislation being passed. Normally, there's a process that we have to work our way through which your House leader and the House leader of the Liberal Party are very cognizant of. "Co-operation" generally isn't the watchword of those meetings.

I will say that from my point of view, if you're asking me if I would speak on behalf of my party and give unanimous consent for second and third readings, my first answer and probably last answer would be, absolutely.

Mr Hampton: Then what I propose is that later on today we pass that unanimous consent so we can expedite the passage of this legislation. Because, as you know, these accounting reforms are long overdue. These accounting reforms are fair. Whether they be a certified management accountant, whether they be a certified general accountant or whether they be a chartered accountant, anyone who can pass the exam and meet the standards would be entitled to practise public accountancy. That's only fair and reasonable.

But you also know, Minister, that the House recesses next week, on Thursday. You also know, I think, that if these reforms are not passed into law by then, there could very easily be an election in the spring. So what I'm asking for I guess is two things: would you be prepared to ask for that unanimous consent this afternoon, and above all else, will you commit that these accounting reforms, that Bill 213 will become law before the House recesses?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm accustomed to this kind of co-operation and collegiality between the third party and the government House leader. He often comes to me with these opportunities for us to flow legislation through in a very timely and quick way. So you've caught me not at any loss. I totally expected this kind of co-operation.

I just directed the House leader's office to draft up a consent motion. We will move that consent motion. I will be happy to move that consent motion right after question period to seek second and third readings of Bill 213—my pleasure.

GOVERNMENT ASSETS

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance. We understand from conversations that the exact same people who negotiated the 407 deal are negotiating the fire sale of the other assets, the $2 billion worth of assets.

The 407, as the minister will know, when you announced the sale of that—and Mr Eves was deeply involved—you said you had controls on tolls, that they could go up very little over the next 15 years. I have an example where when the toll road was sold in 1995 someone was paying $1,400 a year in tolls; now for the exact same trip they're paying $4,000. The people who bought that toll road put in an equity investment of $700 million; 30 months later it was worth $3 billion. They were selling their shares for four times what they paid. In the next 10 years, the poor users of the 407 will pay between $7 billion and $8 billion worth of tolls. It was the worst possible deal negotiated in the history of Canada.

My question is this: why in the world would the people of Ontario have any confidence in your fire sale of assets when the same person, Mr Eves, is in charge, and exactly the same people are doing this negotiation? Why should the people of Ontario have any confidence in this process, having seen what happened with the 407?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): The honourable member says, "Why should the people of Ontario have confidence?" They should have confidence because there was no highway coming into Durham. We now have a highway that was built without the direct cost to the taxpayer. We have a highway. We would like more of that highway in Durham region, quite frankly, and we would love to be able to move forward with that.

Secondly, Provincial Auditor Erik Peters stated that the sale of Highway 407 was really very well handled.

Thirdly, Highway 407 has been set up as a toll road because Highway 401 provides an alternative.

Fourthly, I have a number of other wonderful economic statistics about the sound economic principles this government has put in place: higher family take-home pay because of our tax cuts, more jobs, balanced budgets, debt repayment; very good, positive numbers that show that people in this province can have confidence in the economic management of this province.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The time for question period is over. It is now time for petitions.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: Stop the clock. Oh, I guess we haven't started it. The government House leader on a point of order.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I think I need attention. I just want to make sure everyone knows.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Five minutes? I don't have a point of order; I'm sorry, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: We're willing to be flexible. It is now time for petitions.

PETITIONS

HEALTH CARE FUNDING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas long-term-care facilities in this province are understaffed, underfunded and ignored by the current government;

"Whereas many residents of St Catharines and of other communities in Ontario are unable to find a family doctor as a result of the growing doctor shortage we have experienced during the tenure of the Harris-Eves government;

"Whereas cancer patients in Ontario requiring radiation treatment face unacceptable delays and are often forced to travel to other jurisdictions to receive medical attention;

"Whereas many prescription drugs which would help patients with a variety of medical conditions such as macular degeneration, multiple sclerosis, arthritis, diabetes and heart failure are inadequately covered by OHIP;

"Whereas long waiting lists for diagnostic tests such as MRIs, CT scans and ultrasounds are jeopardizing the health of many individuals already facing serious illness;

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has now spent over $250 million on blatantly partisan government advertising in the form of glossy brochures and television and radio ads;

"We, the undersigned, call upon the Conservative government of Ernie Eves to immediately end their abuse of public office and terminate any further expenditure on political advertising and to invest this money into health and long-term care in the province of Ontario."

I'm in complete agreement, as I suspect you are, Mr Speaker. I affix my signature.

MEDICAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the OHIP schedule of benefits is often unclear about its definitions of good medical practice for many serious medical conditions: general checkups, re-checks, psychotherapy counselling and often major illness care by specialists. The medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons has been aggressively clawing back payments to hard-working, conscientious doctors on the basis of these flawed definitions and skewed statistical analyses.

"We, the undersigned, request the Minister of Health to suspend further reviews by the medical review committee; return the monies with its penalties, pending a negotiated agreement of an unambiguous schedule of benefits with representatives of affected practising physicians."

It's signed by many, and I've affixed my signature as well. Thank you, Garnet.

CT SCANNER

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I have a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, request" the "installation of a CT scanner at the Woodstock General Hospital. It is an essential piece of equipment for the practice of modern medicine. The arrangements to go to London for a CT scan are unsatisfactory, cumbersome and cause unnecessary delay. It is standard equipment for a hospital of this size in North America. All counties in southwestern Ontario have at least one CT scanner, except Oxford county. This situation should be rectified as soon as possible."

It's signed by a great number of my constituents in and around the city of Woodstock.

PROGRAMME D'ALPHABÉTISATION ET D'INTÉGRATION COMMUNAUTAIRE

M<sup>me</sup> Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): « Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient au programme d'alphabetisation et d'intégration communautaire de la Cité collégiale perdent en moyenne 2,5 jours par semaine de services directs et d'appui dans leur communauté dû à la fermeture de ce programme;...

« Attendu que les 44 personnes qui assistaient à ce programme seront maintenant insérées sur la liste d'attente à coordination des services, qui comprend déjà plus d'une trentaine de personnes francophones, et que certaines d'entre elles attendent déjà depuis plus de deux ans;

« Attendu que nous considérons inacceptable de laisser les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle et leurs familles sans ou avec trop peu de soutiens, de programmes ou de services;

reconnaitra le droit à l'éducation pour les personnes ayant une déficience intellectuelle. »

J'y appose avec fierté ma signature.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive" rate "hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

This petition is signed by other 1,000 of my constituents.

GARDE D'ENFANTS

M. Gilles Bisson (Timmins-Baie James): J'ai une pétition ici qui dit :

« Attendu que 70 % des femmes de l'Ontario ayant des enfants de moins de 12 ans sont sur le marché du travail;

« Attendu que, elles et leurs familles ont absolument besoin de services de garde de qualité, sûrs et abordables;

« Attendu que le gouvernement a réduit le financement pour les garderies réglementées plutôt que d'appuyer les familles ontariennes en investissant dans l'apprentissage et les soins offerts aux jeunes enfants;

« Pour ces motifs nous, soussignés, demandons que le gouvernement de l'Ontario adopte le plan du NPD pour des espaces de garderie à 10 $ par jour, et qu'il commence par réduire la totalité des frais de garde pour les enfants de deux ans à cinq ans actuellement inscrits dans des garderies réglementées; que le gouvernement alloue des capitaux permanents pour agrandir les garderies existantes et pour en construire de nouvelles; que le gouvernement finance l'équité salariale pour le personnel, et qu'il crée de nouveaux espaces de garderies à 10 $ par jour dans cette province. »

C'est soussigné par beaucoup de monde dans mon comté.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Ontario government led by the Harris-Eves Tories has severely damaged public education and created turmoil in our schools since they took office...; and

"Whereas the current ... education funding formula is broken when it comes to rural schools; and

"Whereas our community schools in both Springfield and West Lorne are being threatened with closure; and

"Whereas rural schools are the heart and soul of their communities;

"Therefore be it resolved that we ... demand that" the "education minister ... immediately address the funding formula in relation to rural schools and place a moratorium on rural school closures."

I am in full agreement and sign my signature to this petition.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "For the past two years, a group of citizens has opposed the taking of a large amount of water from the Tay River for consumptive industrial use.

"In February 2002, the environmental review tribunal reached a decision that was a compromise between the needs of an expanding industry and the need for caution in matters concerning water. The company, OMYA, now seeks to overturn the tribunal's ruling and has appealed the decision to both the Divisional Court and the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment has agreed to hear the appeal to him first.

"We, the undersigned, urge the Minister of the Environment to uphold the decision of the environmental review tribunal and its precautionary and ecological approach to the management of water. In doing so, the minister upholds the government's commitment to the principles and recommendations of the Walkerton Inquiry report."

I will sign my signature to this petition because I am in full agreement.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): "Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government convene a legislative committee to oversee electricity issues in order to inform and protect the public interest."

I'm in full agreement and have signed my signature to this petition.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This is a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It's the ongoing petition of 28,000 signatures with regard to the four-laning of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I have of course affixed my signature and give it to Brian to bring to the table.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It's concerning the OMYA Canada Inc appeal of the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal in a matter of a permit to take water from the Tay River, Perth, Ontario.

"For the past two years a group of citizens has opposed the taking the large amount of water from the Tay River for a consumptive industrial use. In February 2002 the Environmental Review Tribunal reached a decision that was a compromise between the needs of an expanding industry and the concerns of local citizens for the protection of water.

"The company, OMYA, now seeks to overturn the tribunal's ruling and has appealed the decision to both the Divisional Court and the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment has agreed to hear the appeal to him first.

"We, the undersigned, urge the Minister of the Environment to uphold the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal and its precautionary and ecological approach to the management of water. In doing so, the minister upholds the government's commitment to the principles and recommendations of the Walkerton Inquiry report."

I affix my signature; I am in complete agreement with this petition.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I do have some petitions on adoption disclosure.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 77 passed second reading on June 28, 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, received committee hearings in November 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77 addresses privacy concerns for those who wish to avoid or delay contact; and

"Whereas adoptees are dying from genetic diseases in the absence of their family medical history; and

"Whereas birth mothers were never promised confidentiality;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Immediately call Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, for third reading and final vote."

Can you hear me, Mr Speaker? I will affix my signature to this petition because I fully support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): Too many meetings going on here, members. If you would, please? Thank you.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the funding for school boards is now based on the student-focused funding legislative grants....;

"Whereas the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board is in a period of declining enrolment, a trend that is projected to continue over the next five years;

"Whereas application of the student-focused funding model does not allow sufficient funding to the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board for secretarial support in schools, principals and vice-principals, transportation or school operations;

"Whereas costs in these areas cannot be reduced at the same rate as the enrolment declines;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To reassess the student-focused funding legislative grants for the 2002-03 school year to provide additional funding for those areas where funding is insufficient and to adjust future student-focused funding GLGs to address the situation of declining enrolments faced by the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board and other boards in Ontario."

I affix my signature to this petition because I am in full agreement.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities, by 15% over three years; and

"Whereas the fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years;

"Whereas this increase is above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario;

"Whereas, according to the government's own funded study, Ontario will rank last among comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care....;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions."

I am in full agreement and sign my signature to this petition.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years, or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year, effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years; and

"Whereas this increase is above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario for 2002; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on the government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors, who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I am full agreement.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would seek unanimous consent to immediately put the questions on second and third reading on Bill 213.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): Is there unanimous consent? All in favour? Any opposed? Hearing none, the unanimous consent is granted.

JUSTICE STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT DES LOIS DANS LE DOMAINE DE LA JUSTICE

Mr Stockwell, on behalf of Mr Young, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 213, An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act / Projet de loi 213, Loi visant à améliorer l'accès à la justice en modifiant la Loi sur les procureurs pour autoriser les honoraires conditionnels dans certaines circonstances, à moderniser et à réviser le droit portant sur les délais de prescription en édictant la nouvelle Loi sur la prescription des actions et en apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois, et à modifier les règles qui régissent la profession de comptable public en modifiant la Loi sur la comptabilité publique.

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EXPENSES ACT

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'OBLIGATION
DE RENDRE COMPTE DES DÉPENSES (MINISTRES ET CHEFS D'UN PARTI DE L'OPPOSITION)

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 3, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons / Projet de loi 216, Loi concernant l'accès à l'information ainsi que l'examen des dépenses et l'obligation de rendre compte des ministres, des chefs d'un parti de l'opposition et de certaines autres personnes.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Further debate?

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Thank you very much, Speaker. There were a lot of members on this side of the House who wanted to speak to this bill, and I just want to let you know that I'll be sharing my time with the hard-working members from Kitchener Centre, Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale, Niagara Falls and Durham.

I would like to thank the member from York North for setting the framework for us so well on Tuesday while opening the debate on this very important piece of legislation, Bill 216, the Accountability for Expenses Act (Cabinet Ministers and Opposition Leaders), 2002. This is an important new measure by this government to bring even greater transparency and accountability to government and the tax dollars it spends.

I know there isn't one member here who would disagree with this principle, at least not on the record. I say that because I know there are members of the opposition, particularly their leader, Dalton McGuinty, who have said a bunch of nice things about transparency, but, when the rubber meets the road, have run away from the prospect of submitting details of their own expenses, have run away from it like children being chased from a hive full of bees.

We're really talking about details here—none of the summaries that Dalton McGuinty talks about, but the real receipts that show how much he spent, when and where. Why has he done that? I'd really like to know. Of course I say that rhetorically because I know that I can't ask questions of the opposition in this House. We all know it is a right reserved for the opposition parties to call on the government to account for its policies and its actions.

Let me emphasize the word "account," because one of the most important principles of this House is being accountable: being accountable for policies, money spent and the ideas that we bring into this chamber every single day. Again, I think we'll agree that all of us here, regardless of political stripe, must be accountable to our constituents and all the people of this great province. For any government in this province, accountability measures are numerous on the government, and that's the way it should be. After all, we all know that while elections are the greatest forms of accountability, there's far too much time between elections for real accountability.

In our system there are a number of measures to ensure that the government, entrusted with the reins of power, uses it, as we say in the House, wisely and well. There are dozens of means by which the government is held to account in our system. Every day I sit here in the Legislature and listen as the cabinet stands in front of the opposition and takes a grilling. Every day any member of the opposition can stand up and ask the head of government about any question in the world.

I see a lot of heads shaking—

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): So what?

Mr McDonald: —and saying, "So what?" Right? The member for Timmins-James Bay is saying, "So what?"

Mr Bisson: It's called question period.

Mr McDonald: It's called question period. But do you know what? I think they take it for granted, exactly how important this is. Think about it. Can you imagine the President of the United States providing this much access?

There are so many other ways that government is held to account. For an example, we saw one just today with the Provincial Auditor's report, an independent officer of this Legislature who is free to comment on pretty well any issue under the sun.

What are the other ways, you might ask? Well, there are of course the other officers of the Legislature: the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Environmental Commissioner and of course the Integrity Commissioner. But I'll come back to him and his office in a minute.

What really is the point of all of this accountability? My point is that there are a great deal of ways in which the government is held to account in this Legislature, without even getting into the discussion about the media and the important role they play. Speaker, I hope you don't misinterpret what I'm trying to say here. The accountability should come with the office. Government should be held to account and to a standard that is very high. We don't disagree. Taxpayers deserve to have this amount of oversight—checks and balances, as we often say. After all, we all know that it is the taxpayers' money that we spend, not our own. We also know that taxpayers really don't know who spends their money; they only know that someone else aside from them is spending it. That's why so few people can tell the difference between the government per se and the assembly. In many ways, they are all part of a giant tax-spending machine.

That's also true for the members of the opposition. Taxpayers pay for everything they do as well, and they pay for all your work. Constituency work, opposition work, committee work are all done on the taxpayers' dime. Of course, we all know this; it's nothing new. But there needs to be some accountability at all levels, and, to be quite frank, some of that accountability just doesn't cut it. There is too much money being spent by members across the floor for duties other than constituency work and for which there is no added accountability.

For example, if we say, and I'm just going to pick one at random, the member for Windsor West were to go out for dinner with a public interest group to talk about their thoughts in regard to a government policy, that would probably be a legitimate expense, business expense, although—

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Referring to the standing orders, it's very clear that no member of the assembly can charge such an expense and have it reclaimed. It's out of our pocket. We cannot reclaim. None of the members, government or back-bench—

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): He's misleading the House.

The Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, and we don't use that kind of language. I would like to give you the opportunity of withdrawing.

Mrs Dombrowsky: I withdraw it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The Chair recognizes the member for Nipissing.

Mr McDonald: Mr Speaker, I'll withdraw it if it offends the member opposite.

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: I've withdrawn it. Although it would be clearly not a legitimate expense, there is nothing there that involves advocating on behalf of their constituents. But I'll withdraw that.

I just want to talk about the leaders of the opposition. As a member of the opposition, they could claim that from that $3.5 million that they are entitled to and that Dalton McGuinty talks about so affectionately—

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: Well, you know, that's a lot of money. That's taxpayers' money that they have to account for, and right now they don't have to account for it. There's no legislation. The taxpayers aren't allowed to look at how they spend their money. There is no legislation that says they have to submit their bills. That's wrong, and I think this is what this bill is truly about. The taxpayers of Ontario want to be able to know how their money is being spent, and right now the leader of the official opposition does not have to show the public one single expense.

This is a really valid point. We don't know how he spends his money. No one knows. No one has any idea how the opposition spends that money. I don't know that he really spends money he shouldn't be spending—I don't know that—but he could. I'm sure he doesn't spend it on frivolous things, but he could. I'm sure he doesn't spend it on booze at night, but he could. He could spend it on just about anything, because he's not accountable to the taxpayers. But he could be, and he should be. That is why this bill should carry, so that Dalton McGuinty and his dozens of staff account for some of the money they get from the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr McDonald: I know the members opposite are going to try to blow this out of proportion; I'm hearing it right now. That's the standard operating procedure of your party: bluster and confuse and maybe, if you're lucky, pull the wool over someone's eyes.

Let's be clear: there is nothing in this bill that would give any person any more depth of access to information about the government. The simple fact is that the government will remain held to a tougher, more rigorous standard. That's the way it should be. This government should be held accountable at very high standards, and we don't disagree with that.

The Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act would continue to apply to all government members—all the members on this side—for more information than is being proposed for the members opposite. In other words, we're being held accountable. We have to put our claims forward. They can access them through the freedom of information act. We don't disagree. We're happy to be able to do that. We'd hope that the members opposite would agree that their leaders should be accountable as well, and we're hoping they support this legislation.

Mrs Dombrowsky: Absolutely.

Mr McDonald: That's good to hear. I'm glad to hear it.

Bill 216 extends the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to the opposition leaders and their staff. Their staff spend taxpayers' money. It would be limited to the four types of expenses of opposition leaders and staff; ie, travel, meals, hospitality and hotels.

In comparison, what would be the grand total of members of the official opposition who would be covered by this bill? One. Just one. Their deputy leader would not be covered, even though our Deputy Premier is; their House leader would not be covered, even though ours is; the same goes for their whip and every single member of their shadow cabinet—not one more ounce of accountability. All this side shares accountability, and we welcome that. This bill only speaks to one member on that side being accountable. It would just be your leader and his office staff, however many that might be. I've heard 42 used before, but I'm not really sure.

Ultimately, my point is that there desperately needs to be some accountability for the members across the way, or at least their leaders. I personally think it wouldn't be a bad idea to make all their members open to FOI—freedom of information—requests, but I think it might be a bit more measured approach that only their leaders be open. I understand the decision that only their leaders be open. But let's just say that the Liberals were to put forward an amendment to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act to apply to all their benches. That I would support. I don't know if I am going to hear that when they stand up, but I would support that amendment if they put it into the legislation. Somehow I think that would be as likely as me getting my Christmas shopping done early. I don't know about the member from Timmins-James Bay, but I probably wait till the last minute to do a lot of my Christmas shopping, because we're pretty busy down here.

Now that I've had my say about accountability, there really are some points I'd like to make about the rest of this bill. I've heard from the Chair of Management Board about the review that was being done on this policy. I was not surprised to find that this was not an issue new to this House nor unique to this government. In fact, during the David Peterson Liberal government, the Provincial Auditor, in his 1989 annual expenses, said, "In our opinion, further classification is required as to what types of expenses are permitted for ministers." In that same 1989 annual report, the auditor noted $6,300 spent on a staff Christmas party, $1,100 for an annual membership fee to a social club and $425 for dry cleaning.

In addition to all this vagueness, I find it troubling that there was no independent referee who could counsel ministers on the interpretation of the rules. Now, all members will always be ultimately accountable to their constituents and to this House for their own decisions. That is the fundamental aspect of our system, and that should not change. However, we all know that reasonable people will disagree on some matters and it is important that there be an independent referee who can provide this type of advice. Clearly there is a real need for an independent person who can provide advice about the rules for expenses and compliance. For decades, governments have crafted their own rules. It's time to end all of this and give the people of Ontario some real certainty and accountability about the rules surrounding these expenditures.

This bill will do just that. It will provide clear rules to ministers and their staff and provide for an annual public mechanism where the Legislature and the people of Ontario can be reassured that the government is indeed spending their money in a reasonable manner. We are currently working with the Integrity Commissioner, an independent officer of the Legislature, to provide ministers with greater clarity about their expenses and to give the people of Ontario greater certainty that their hard-earned tax dollars are spent prudently.

Under the bill, the Integrity Commissioner would not only have the ability to provide advice but also set the form of expense claim information and recommend corrective action if he or she felt there was a case of non-compliance with the rules. Of course, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act would still apply, providing people with a dual track of accountability. One will provide for a regular reporting mechanism to this House and one will continue to give any person the ability to request and review the information on a first-hand basis.

Of course, the members of the official opposition might tell this House that the legislation is not necessary since they have always been willing to submit their expenses to the Legislature. It has been more than a month since the leader of the official opposition, Mr McGuinty, offered this up and we've yet to see one shred of information from his office about it. This is not surprising, since the leader of the official opposition so clearly told the media, "I've got no problem releasing my expenses," but when asked if he would expect his staff to do the same, he said, "Why would I do that? I'm talking about my own personal expenses." He would want to do that because that money was spent by his staff. Why aren't they accountable?

Mr McGuinty, why isn't your staff, who are spending taxpayers' money, accountable to the people of Ontario? I just ask that question.

These comments only underscore the importance of this legislation. It is a reasonable way that taxpayers will be able to see for themselves how reasonable and responsible the leaders of the official opposition are and if they are practising what they preach, or if, in typical style, it is the usual "Do as I say, not as I do."

Mrs Dombrowsky: They will be so impressed.

Mr McDonald: I take this piece of legislation very seriously. I hear the member heckling. But I hope you support this and make your leader accountable to the taxpayers of Ontario—and his staff. I'd like to hear you say, "His staff will be accountable as well and will submit all their expenses." Will you agree to that?

We expect the Liberals will support this bill. After all, the deputy leader of the official opposition, the member for Windsor West, said, "You can't have a double standard here. It's about leadership." She also said quite clearly, "I'm prepared to tell you how I spent, what I used," of the $3.5 million her caucus is allocated by way of expenses.

This is an important piece of legislation. However, I don't believe it is as important as the hydro legislation in this House, nor do I think it's as important as the clean water legislation or the bereavement legislation before the House. That's not to say that these are my personal priorities, but these are priorities of the people of Ontario. The people of Ontario want clean drinking water and they want reasonable hydro prices. Those are very important issues that we face here in the Legislature as we move forward.

This bill is about accountability, and we think it's only reasonable that the leaders of the official opposition and the third party release their expenses to the public so the public can see how they're spending the taxpayers' money. The leader of the official opposition has $3.5 million to spend any way he pleases because there's no accountability, nor did he have to explain how he spent all their money, and even joked that he could spend all the money on expensive luggage. I don't believe he spent the money on expensive luggage—

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): But you don't know that.

Mr McDonald: —but I don't know that, and he has joked about it. So I think it's important that the taxpayers of Ontario see clearly where, I believe, every dollar is spent in this Legislature. I don't have a problem. I'm happy to make my expenses public. It's one of the things we have to do for the taxpayers of Ontario. I believe we're accountable to them and we should be open and transparent.

Interjections.

Mr McDonald: I hear the heckling across. I've always stood for transparency and an open process. I have since I was elected, even on my municipal council in northern Ontario. I was very clear. I believe that decisions should be made public, should be made in the open, and we should be able to explain. The public should be able to understand why we make the decisions we do.

The people who sent us here are probably hoping that we come to some speedy conclusion on this bill and get on with the rest of our business. I believe the people of Ontario want us to get on with the running of this province, to provide them with jobs, provide them with clean drinking water, provide opportunities for our youth, and to invest in our colleges, universities, schools and hospitals. That's what is important to the people of Ontario. But we're also talking about accountability here. Accountability is important because all of that is important. So we're hoping there is speedy passage of this bill. That's really important work that we should be doing here. With the co-operation of the opposition leaders and parties, we'll be able to get on with the real business of the province.

It was a pleasure to stand here and speak to Bill 216 because it is important. But in the grand scheme of things, I'm hoping we all agree that accountability to the taxpayers of Ontario is important and that we all agree that our expenses should be open and transparent; there's no question. I don't believe that one taxpayer in Ontario would say, "Do you know what? I don't think you should have to turn your bills in or show us the bills." I don't believe there's one person in the province who pays their taxes who is going to say, "It doesn't really matter how they spend their money." On the government side, we are responsible. We have been held accountable. We have higher standards that we have to live up to compared to the official opposition and the official opposition leader. Right now, he does not have to show us how he spent his money.

As I said when I stood up, there were a lot of members on this side of the House who thought it was very important that I share my time in speaking to this bill. If I could, Mr Speaker, I will turn it over to one of my colleagues to continue to speak to this bill. I believe the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale really wanted to stand up and speak first. I know there are a couple right behind him, but Raminder's the closest one to me so I thought it might be appropriate that he speak. I know he's a hard-working member here in Toronto at Queen's Park. His constituents are very lucky to have him. I'd like to turn over some of my time to that member.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): It is a pleasure to join this debate on Bill 126, Accountability for Expenses Act. I'm sure the people at home want to know what we're discussing today. This is the cabinet ministers' and opposition leaders' Accountability for Expenses Act, 2002.

I want to thank the very important and hard-working member for Nipissing who has given me the opportunity this afternoon to put my views forward on this very important bill. I know the member is working very hard for his constituents. He's also looking forward to perhaps more comments and questions on this later on when he gets a chance on another day. I'll be fairly concise because I know there are many other members who want to speak on this important bill. I thank you, Mr Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to discuss this bill.

Seven years ago, our party promised the people of Ontario that we would inject discipline and accountability into the public sector. It was a promise our opponents and many so-called experts said would be impossible to keep. I've said it several times before: promises made, promises kept. In fact, that's what really interested me when I ran for this party in 1999, that we came up with a certain platform. We sent it to the people so that they could examine it and ask us questions before the election. I'm glad people agreed with what we were saying and gave us this opposition to represent them. I want to thank the members of my constituency, which as you know is Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale. I know that similarly the people of Nipissing are very happy to send Mr AL McDonald here to represent them. He's doing so very eloquently, with a lot of hard work and accountability.

We took a different approach to government. Our commitment to accountable, transparent government started with us. As you may remember, we reduced the number of politicians on the public payroll. We cut our pay and eliminated pensions and perks. As most people do, I have been doing a lot of door-knocking, which means talking to the people and trying to get the pulse of what their concerns are. One thing I must point out is that the perception out there still is that we have these golden pensions like fat cats. I want to put it on the record that those pensions were eliminated before I even came to this office. I guess they are really making that understanding from the federal members, because people must know that they have some of the best pensions pretty well in the world.

Today I'm happy to say that our government is moving ahead with even further measures to bring accountability and transparency to the way politicians spend taxpayers' hard-earned dollars.

Many times politicians come to office and in the euphoria, I suppose, of the office, they forget that there's only one taxpayer and it is their money that we, with a very responsible manner, have to spend wisely. If we expect the taxpayers to tighten their belts, then it behooves us that we lead by example. That is why

Premier Harris ran on the platform of a lesser number of politicians, and in fact you know that we reduced the number of politicians in the Ontario Legislature from 123 to 103.

I have from time to time had the pleasure of discussing this with delegations from throughout the world and they just can't believe it. They can't believe that a government would reduce the number of people. We felt there was too much government, there was too much red tape, so it was fair that we reduced the number of people. In fact, similar things happened by our, perhaps, advice so that even the number of Toronto councillors was reduced.

For far too long politicians of all political stripes were plagued with problems, with unclear, misguided and inconsistently applied rules relating to how they spent taxpayers' money. Like I said earlier, there's only one taxpayer and, as you know, some of that money that the Ontario taxpayers pay goes to Ontario and some of that money goes to Ottawa. In a nutshell, in the overall scheme of things, we actually get back less money from Ottawa. Many of the provinces, and I'm not trying to say it's right or wrong, get more money than they send in. We get back less money.

At the same time, there was a typical boondoggle that was exposed yesterday, something to do with the gun registry, where the federal government estimated that they were going to spend $2 million. That expense has increased to $1 billion, and I don't believe they yet have a handle on how much more money—taxpayers' money—they're going to be wasting.

Politicians who had control and purview over millions of dollars of public money found it a genuine challenge to navigate the various schemes which were presented before them. You had what, de facto, became 26 different sets of rules for 26 different cabinet ministers. What was worse, opposition and third party leaders, who are largely seen as carrying similar responsibilities over staff and public dollars as cabinet ministers, got away scot-free without any accountability.

As MPP for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale, I know that the hard-working men and women and small businesses of my riding don't care if one taxpayers' dollar is spent by someone in government or by someone sitting across the way in opposition; it's all taxpayers' money and it must all be accounted for.

If passed by this Legislature, Bill 216 will bring accountability, clarity, fairness, and unprecedented openness to the way cabinet ministers, parliamentary assistants—including myself naturally; I'm parliamentary assistant to the Premier now—opposition and third party leaders, and all their respective staff spend taxpayers' dollars.

For the first time there will be one set of clear rules that all will be required to abide by. For the first time ever a neutral third party is going to review expenses and say what is and what is not allowed. The primary good news in all this is that the system is being fixed to protect taxpayers, with regular disclosure plus an independent review of what is and what is not allowed. If passed, we will be the first government in Ontario's history to legislate safeguards governing the way ministers spend your hard-earned dollars—yours and mine; we're all taxpayers—and of course public taxpayer dollars.

This bill will establish a rigorous framework that spells out clear expectations, demands compliance and gives the Integrity Commissioner, an independent third party, power to oversee ministers' expenditures. We have brought greater accountability and transparency to the way your hard-earned tax dollars are spent by broadening public access to expense information of the other party leaders. We are raising the bar of accountability and transparency for all politicians in a leadership role, regardless of party or political affiliation. We're leading from the top by building accountability and transparency into the way politicians do business, thereby protecting taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. We will be the first government in Ontario's history, and in all Canada for that matter, to legislate oversight of this kind to govern the way ministers spend your hard-earned tax dollars. In fact, during a thorough review, the government found no other jurisdictions in the Commonwealth with legislative oversight for such expenses.

We will bring accountability and transparency to the way your money is spent by improving public access. We are honoured that the Integrity Commissioner, an independent third party with the complete confidence of the Legislature, has agreed to be a major player in this new regime. The Integrity Commissioner will have involvement in every step of this process. He will be helping to shape and craft these new rules for ministers, parliamentary assistants, opposition leaders and their staff. He will have complete, unobstructed access to expenses incurred by these individuals for meals, travel and hospitality in the course of carrying out their day-to-day public service.

But we all know that our hard-working taxpayers deserve more than just access; they deserve disclosure. This bill would also require all individuals covered by this legislation to table all expenses incurred with the Integrity Commissioner by the end of April each year. The Integrity Commissioner would then include a summary of this information in an annual report released in June in conjunction with the MPP expense release, that is, the global budget release. Of course, like ministers of the crown and their staff, leaders of the opposition parties and their staff should be held to the same high standards of public accountability because they are in a position of leadership—I wonder about that sometimes.

Other members of the Legislature are governed by budget limits established by the Board of Internal Economy and so do not need to be covered by the proposed legislation. Not only will the Integrity Commissioner participate in the development of the new rules we must all abide by, but he will also be given the real muscle he needs to recommend that corrective action be taken when the rules are strayed from. The corrective action he may recommend can vary, depending on the severity of the specific situation, from a request to make repayment of any inappropriate expenses incurred, to whatever remedial action he deems necessary, including—and this is important for people to know—declaring the seat the member holds vacant.

One of the more severe reprimands for non-compliance contained in this legislation is that it allows the Integrity Commissioner to publicly name any person covered under the legislation who does not follow the rules.

Interjection.

Mr Gill: Yes, it is hard, but it's fair.

Mr McDonald: The way it should be.

Mr Gill: The way it should be, as the member from Nipissing so eloquently said. I agree with him.

This provides a strong incentive for compliance, for there is no greater scrutiny than that of public scrutiny.

The opposition has made a great deal of noise about expenses incurred by ministers dating all the way back to 1995. Our government wants to move forward and look to the future, but in order to do so, we need to clear the air and bring closure to events of the past. So in addition to the annual filing by ministers and the annual review and reporting by the Integrity Commissioner on expenses, we are taking clear, unprecedented steps to correct any wrongs of the past and clear the air once and for all.

As a first step, the legislation proposes that the Integrity Commissioner report on all expenses incurred for the period 1995 to 2002 by January 21, 2003, and that he include in his report his recommendations and actions. As I've said before, there have been umpteen sets of rules for umpteen cabinet ministers. With such confusion and chaos, there have inevitably been some problems.

This legislation aims to honestly, critically and thoroughly review all expenses incurred to date and put the review in the hands of an independent, non-partisan third party: the Integrity Commissioner. This step is unprecedented. While opposition members point to specific individuals and specific situations, our government feels that nothing less than a full review can adequately address this issue, right the wrongs of yesterday and help us move this House to a more productive and useful purpose.

For far too long, the members across the floor have devoted their efforts to self-defeating, navel-gazing efforts that did nothing to improve the quality of education and health care in this province, to accusations and mud-slinging that did absolutely nothing to help protect our environment and keep our streets safe. All these accusations have done is to distract our attention from the issues of real importance to the people of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale and to the people of Ontario, and focus on theatrics and bad spin.

My friends, today the other shoe has dropped. If this legislation receives royal assent, Dalton McGuinty and Howard Hampton and their collective staff will be held to the same standards of accountability and transparency that government members with similar responsibilities will be called to hold to. Today we are levelling the playing field by treating both government and opposition leaders the same. We are raising the bar for all politicians in a leadership position, regardless of their party or political affiliation.

Traditionally, we have viewed opposition leaders in the same way as cabinet ministers in terms of their capacity and breadth and scope of responsibility over office dollars and staff. Shouldn't they be called upon to meet the same standards? Shouldn't they heed the same rules? Shouldn't they meet the same reporting requirements? Shouldn't members of the public have the same access?

This legislation is fair and equitable, and I urge all members of the Legislature to give it speedy passage.

Mr Wettlaufer: It is my pleasure to speak this evening on this important bill, the Accountability for Expenses Act, 2002. After listening to the members speak, and of course after listening to the exchange in the House during question period a couple of weeks ago, I am convinced that this bill is fair, transparent and, more importantly, necessary.

I see across from me today the member for York South-Weston, who ran for the leadership of his party. Joe Cordiano, I know, is a very respectable person. I saw him sitting there with his head in his hands earlier. I know that he knows that if he was leader of his opposition party, this bill would not have been necessary, because that party, that leader and his office and his staff, would have made available their expenses very quickly upon request.

Instead, what did we have? On October 4, 2002, in a scrum, Mr McGuinty was asked by the media, and I quote: "Mr McGuinty, the FOI's going back: I believe Mr Jackson included his staff, Mr Stockwell included his staff. Are you willing to include your staff in FOIable requests?" Dalton McGuinty said, "I'm prepared to make my own expenses public." The question: "Why not your staff?" And McGuinty said, "Because it's not up to my staff to, uh—" Question: "We're talking tax dollars." Dalton McGuinty said, "Yeah, but again, you know, what we've got is a set of rules here that says that the Liberal caucus is entitled to about three and a half million dollars and it's up to us to decide how we are going to spend those three and a half million dollars."

In the same scrum, he admitted there is no control over how a caucus spends its money. He said, "Under the rules that we play by today, we get three and a half million dollars, it says here, folks; there's your three and a half million dollars. Put it all into supper if you want, all into salary if you want, put it all into polls, put it all into expensive luggage."

I see the member for York South-Weston over there, and I know that he knows that would not have happened if he was the leader of that party. There's no accountability in that party. There's no desire to be accountable in that party. The other night the member from Kingston spoke up and said, "My leader's expenses you should know about, and we should know about your leader's expenses too." I agree with that. We have requested a number of times, numerous times, to have detailed expenses from the Liberal leader's office. The people of Ontario and this government are still waiting to see those expenses. He's willing to provide a summary, but he is not willing to provide details.

I think the member for York North may have said it best Tuesday night when she said, and I'd like to quote from Hansard:

"Acting in good faith, ministers, parliamentary assistants and their respective staffs have claimed expenses which in turn have been called into question by their critics. Whether they were claims from dinners, trips or hosting delegations, all parties at some point have been on the receiving end of this criticism.

"Now is the time to take action to end the uncertainty and speculation, and to give taxpayers real assurance that the people who spend their hard-earned money are truly accountable for it and have clear, consistent rules by which they must abide."

I think this says perfectly how this bill, if passed by this House, would introduce an element of fairness and independence into the whole system that has long been missing.

I'm not going to say that there are not certain things that I think should be allowable. There are certain things that I do believe should be allowable. Right now, under the present system, we are not allowed to spend any amount on liquor, not one cent on liquor in entertainment—

Interjection.

Mr Wettlaufer: Alcohol. That's right. It includes beer and wine. Thank you, I say to the member for York North. We are not allowed to spend one iota and claim it on our expense accounts. If we have consultants, experts in their field, come here to advise us on a particular item for a particular afternoon or evening, we don't pay them per diem—

Mr Wettlaufer: Hang on. We don't pay them per diem, meals and mileage. That's right. Now, I'm not saying we don't provide that under contracts; that might be possible under contracts. But in numerous cases we have experts in their field come in and advise us, and we will take them out for supper. If you have an expert who in the business world is quite often used to having a glass of wine or a beer with his or her meal, are we going to say the government of Ontario, or the opposition parties, are not going to provide that to that individual, that expert? Are we going to be so cheap so as not to allow that individual to have a glass of wine? No, we're not. Are we going to say the host, the elected member, is going to pick it up out of his or her own pocket? That's nonsense. I think the vast majority of the public realizes that's nonsense.

Now is the time to take action. I know that members of this House when doing business in the interests of their constituents, whether it's in opposition or as a minister or as a parliamentary assistant, incur expenses that should not be on their own ticket. Travelling on government or legislative business, hosting a foreign delegation or, as I said earlier, a delegation that is coming in to give advice, whether to the opposition parties or to the government, are examples of what I think taxpayers see as legitimate expenses. Certainly most taxpayers do. Do you agree, I say to the member for Niagara Centre.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): A little glass of Niagara wine.

Mr Wettlaufer: You want them to buy Niagara wine. OK.

I know that to a certain degree the members opposite agree with me; I can see by the nodding over there. I think the member for Kingston and the Islands and the member for Timmins-James Bay both acknowledged this on Tuesday night when they said certain expenses are quite legitimate. I think most of us agree with that.

The real matter here is what is reasonable. That is probably subjective. We would look at it and say, "Oh yeah, that's valid." But that is subjective from our own point of view. The members opposite have an overriding goal in all of this, and that is to embarrass the government, and that's fair. That's politics. We all know that to some degree the role of the opposition is to act as a viable alternative to the government of the day.

I would prefer, as the member for Kingston and the Islands said earlier this week, that we be able to spend time today speaking to certain other issues, whether it be health care or education, because they're more substantive. Nevertheless, we're here talking about this particular issue.

This leads to arguments about accountability and how there is a need for the opposition to be held accountable for the money with which they've been entrusted by the people of Ontario. Right now their responsibility is not matched by accountability. I think we on this side of the House certainly feel that should change. I was encouraged the other night to hear a couple of the members say there should be consistent, tough standards for opposition and government members. I think that point has been effectively argued by all my colleagues here, not just on my side of the House but on your side. So I would like to spend more of my time addressing the issue of fairness and how we can address it, how it relates to the various rules we have in the House.

We have the Integrity Commissioner, in whom we all have a lot of confidence. We think he is above reproach. He is appointed by the Legislature.

Interjection.

Mr Wettlaufer: That's right. That's how it should be federally; I agree with the member for Niagara Centre. But in Ontario he is appointed by the Legislature, and he reports to the Legislature. He does not report to the government, nor does he report to either of the opposition parties. He is accountable to all of us in here and, in turn, to the people of Ontario. We have a great deal of confidence in him. We have a great deal of confidence in his independence and in his professionalism. I don't think I have ever heard a word of reproach toward him.

What we are saying in this bill is that we think members' expenses should be reviewed by him; not the individual members, but the parliamentary assistants, the cabinet ministers and the opposition leaders. This is where most of the money is spent and this is where there is that possibility of abuse. There should not be any abuse. The people in my riding of Kitchener Centre don't want there to be any abuse. It's their money that we all are entrusted with in here. When they hear of abuse, they call me and rail against it, and they have every right to do so, because I rail against it. We all pay taxes here too. Is there one of us in this House who thinks it's fair that our taxes should be abused?

Mr Kormos: What about the government's consultants? They haven't been paying taxes.

Mr Wettlaufer: Maybe some of them do. You never know.

This is not a new phenomenon; it's been going on for 20 years. On Tuesday night, the member for Kingston and the Islands said that we shouldn't stop right now, that we should be going back further. In the interests of fairness, and considering that rules change dramatically over the years, it's difficult to put today's values, today's norms, on to a leader seven years, eight years, 10 years, 20 years away. So we drew the line and we said that former Premiers would not be subject. The member for Kingston and the Islands made a big deal of the fact that former Premier Mike Harris was not subject to this bill. Well, I say to you that neither is former Premier Bob Rae, nor is former Premier David Peterson, nor the cabinet ministers in their cabinets. I know, you know and all the members on that opposite side know that there was considerable abuse, using today's standards and today's norms, in those cabinets, because this has been going on for 20 years.

What we are saying is that it's not practical for us to say, "I'm taking somebody out for supper tonight. I'm not too sure whether or not this is FOIable. I'm too sure if this is eligible for expenses. Maybe I should call the Integrity Commissioner." No, no, you're not supposed to call the Integrity Commissioner at 10 after 6 at night, when you've got somebody out for dinner at 20 after 6. There are going to be clear and hard—

Mr Wettlaufer: That's right. We're not going to abuse it.

There are going to be clear and firm guidelines set out that we will know, and so will you, the members on the opposite side. You will know exactly what is going to be claimable, what is legitimate, what we can justify to the public that pays our salaries and our expenses.

Will there be some alcohol allowable? I hope so. I think we have to realize that this is the 21st century.

I would like to read a short paragraph from the Members' Integrity Act about this. The preamble to the act, which sets out broad parameters, states, "Members are expected to perform their duties of office and arrange their private affairs in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity of each member, maintains the assembly's dignity and justifies the respect in which society holds the assembly and its members."

How better to define that this is what we want with this bill? The act will then outline how the commissioner should go about assisting members in the reaching of this worthy goal.

The public, the taxpayers, really don't care whether it's the Liberals, the NDP or the Progressive Conservatives, government or opposition; all they care about is how they spend it and how it's accountable.

The Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:45.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 9 December 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 9 décembre 2002

*The House met at 1330.
Prayers.*

ESTIMATES

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by his own hand.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates and supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 2003, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): Sarnia-Lambton is becoming a toxic waste haven, thanks to the Harris-Eves government. Their lax regulations saw that the now Clean Harbours site near Brigden expanded in 1997 to become the largest toxic waste landfill and incinerator in the country, yet only about 5% of the waste is local. Most of the waste comes from outside the province. Next month, this facility will receive untreated toxic sludge from the Sydney tar pond site in Nova Scotia.

Dalton McGuinty took the time last Thursday to speak and listen to the people in Lambton county. Dalton called the tar pond sludge proposal what it is: a disgrace.

In Ontario, we will take untreated hazardous waste from anywhere and simply dump it into the ground, a practice that has been outlawed in every other jurisdiction on this continent.

The residents have said enough is enough, and thousands are now joining forces to stop the toxic sludge.

The fundamental difference between the values of an Ernie Eves government and a Dalton McGuinty government is that the Harris-Eves government does not stand up for strong environmental laws. But Dalton McGuinty understands that the way to compete is not to have the weakest toxic waste laws in North America but to build strong communities by having the strongest toxic waste laws on the continent.

PORT PERRY LIONS CLUB

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I rise in the House to recognize the Port Perry Lions Club on its 65th anniversary. I would like to congratulate Wayne Burrell, president of the club, and all the members who have given so much to the community.

Lionism in Port Perry began on November 16, 1937, when the local club was founded with 20 members and sponsorship from the Newmarket Lions Club. Ernest Hayes was the first president.

The help they provided to the community included building playgrounds, sponsoring street dances and providing 700 sacks of candy for the Santa Claus parade. Over the years they contributed gift bags for soldiers in World War II, raised funds for the hospital and helped build the first ice pad at Scugog arena.

Today, Port Perry Lions continue to serve the community with hospital fundraisers, support for the guide dog program, Breakfast with Santa, the annual soapbox derby and the Santa Claus parade. Port Perry Lions sponsor a youth fastball team and also volunteer at a local vision screening program for junior and senior kindergarten students. Those are just a few of their projects.

Their roster includes Gord Prentice, who has belonged to the Port Perry Lions for 38 years and has been honoured with the Helen Keller Award. Among the other dedicated Port Perry Lions are Tom Wilson and Maurice Patterson, who each have more than 40 years' service to Lionism in Port Perry and with other Lions clubs. Mr Rob Rice, a past governor for the Lions, is also among its members.

The Port Perry Lions are but one example of the many community organizations that make a difference in Durham and make everyone's lives better with the families they touch. I wish them continued success.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): Last week the Provincial Auditor put the lie to the myth this government has propagated that Progressive Conservatives are good money managers. The auditor pointed out that this government spent $662 million on consultants last year, almost $400 million more than was spent in 1998.

Ontarians are rightfully outraged at this flagrant breach of taxpayers' trust. This is a shameful amount to waste when our kids are without schoolbooks.

It's simply disgusting that the Ministry of Finance allowed a consultant to be paid $681,000 in error. It's sickening that the same ministry awarded a $3-million contract, despite the fact that the lowest bid was less than half that amount, when our hospitals are running deficits. It's appalling that Management Board awarded a $1.7-million consulting contract without any competition.

This echoes the kind of mismanagement that left taxpayers on the hook for $5,000 per Ministry of Natural Resources computer last year. This same government refuses to give us the numbers on this and other contracts with MFP and refuses to table any consultant contracts for public scrutiny.

This government obviously doesn't know and doesn't care what they're doing with our taxpayer dollars. It's typical of their mismanagement over the past seven years. Good money managers? They couldn't manage a two-car parade.

THE ARTS PROJECT

Mr Bob Wood (London West): I rise today to inform members about The Arts Project, based in the great city of London. The Arts Project, otherwise known as TAP, is a not-for-profit organization dedicated to encouraging, aiding and promoting artists and arts groups in the London area by providing a multi-use facility where they can meet, work, share information, learn new skills and exhibit their art.

The goals of The Arts Project include providing artists, arts groups, schools and non-profit organizations with affordable artists' studios, printmaking studios, education workshops, exhibition space, a performance area, arts-related programs and an on-line art gallery.

There are approximately 6,200 artists living in the London area, plus a large student population that attends arts programs offered by their schools. There are also some 60 arts organizations operating in the area. Historically, these individuals and groups have worked in isolation and there has been little communication and collaboration with each other. The Arts Project is primarily designed to bridge this divide.

The general public and visitors to the city also gain from a strong multidisciplinary arts centre in the heart of London. The following are some of the key benefits that TAP provides: affordable space, accessible public art, unique education opportunities, cross-pollination of the arts, enhancement of London's reputation and downtown revitalization. Through its various activities, shows and events, TAP has seen some 20,000 people pass through its doors to date this year.

The Ontario Trillium Foundation recently awarded The Arts Project with two years of operations funding, which will give the London-based arts centre the required time to become self-sufficient.

I know all members will join with me in congratulating The Arts Project members, volunteers, sponsors and staff for providing such a worthwhile service to the London area.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): I rise today to speak about the lack of leadership when it comes to racial profiling. Several weeks ago, a coalition of black community leaders held a press conference and openly called upon this government to finally address the severe problems of racism that exist with some in the police force. To their credit, the police have made some steps in meeting with the concerned community. But where is the leadership by the government of Ontario?

A summit was held, sponsored by Lincoln Alexander, and they too took some steps forward. But where is the leadership by the government of Ontario?

The Toronto city council has passed a resolution and made some steps forward. But where is the leadership by the government of Ontario?

Dalton McGuinty, my colleagues and I just a week ago met with some 35 leaders of the black community, and we are fully committed in eradicating racial profiling unequivocally, with a zero tolerance policy. But where is the leadership by the government of Ontario?

This is not an issue that only concerns the black community. Racial profiling is abhorrent and vicious and impacts us all. This is an issue that requires leadership, integrity and understanding. This is an issue that required a clarion call for justice and the involvement of government, society and the police. This is not about pegging one group against the other. It's about rectifying a wrong, bringing everyone to a conclusive and final agreement. This does not require any more studies; it requires action. Where is the government of Ontario?

FIRST NATIONS MINING AND FORESTRY REVENUES

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): This coming Thursday I'll be introducing in the House a motion for debate, and I'll be looking at various members across the assembly from the three parties to support it.

The motion is quite simple. It reads as follows: "That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should, in consultation with First Nations communities of northern Ontario and with other levels of government, develop and implement a mechanism where those communities can share in the revenue from mining and forestry operations that are conducted in their traditional territories."

This motion speaks to a long-standing problem we've had in the province of Ontario and, I would argue, across Canada. This is the first time something like this is being attempted anywhere in the nation; that is, if you have a mining or forestry operation set up, let's say, next to North Bay or Timmins or wherever it might be, there's an automatic mechanism for municipalities to be able to share in the revenue from those projects by way of taxation. It's well understood that if you start up a new forestry plant in North Bay, there's going to be taxation paid by that company to the city of North Bay in order to be able to offset the costs of running infrastructure and for the betterment of the community. First Nations communities have no such mechanism.

This motion calls for the provincial government, in consultation with First Nations, to develop a process by which if a project like De Beers diamond mine was to start up in Attawapiskat, there would be a mechanism where De Beers would have to pay some form of taxation to the community of Attawapiskat so they can benefit from the full benefits of such a project, just as they would if they had set up that mine in Timmins, Kirkland Lake or Kapuskasing. I call on all members of the assembly to be here Thursday and to vote on behalf of this motion.

SANTA FUND IN NIPISSING

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Today I'd like to speak about an event that occurs every holiday season in my riding of Nipissing. It is known as the Santa Fund, a fundraising effort that provides assistance to families in need over the holiday season.

Every year, the Santa Fund has a fundraising goal to be met, and this year they are aiming to meet their $100,000 goal. So far, they are just shy of $20,000. According to Lachlan McLachlan, the fund chairman of the Santa Fund, they feel very confident that within the next couple of weeks they will be able to meet their goal with the assistance of local businesses, community organizations, churches, schools, carollers and individuals throughout Nipissing.

The Santa Fund has been very successful over the years in helping out those less fortunate. This organization began in 1947 and was founded by the late Sam Jacks, and Doris and Art Haley. The motto is, "No family should go without food." They have maintained this motto, with over 300 volunteers delivering baskets of food, turkey, toys, and clothing for children. The Santa Fund now is one of the city's largest and longest-running fundraising efforts. It continues to grow stronger over the years thanks to the help of many people.

It is a well-known fact that Ontario continues to be the best province in Canada to work and raise a family. Unfortunately, there are still families and individuals who go without. It is organizations like the Santa Fund that truly bring the spirit of the season forward and help out members of their communities through efforts such as this.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I rise today to speak about us heading into the holidays. People don't realize that this is likely our last week. These are less than happy holidays for the 280,000 children in the Toronto District School Board that this government has made into political pretzels. Students have been losing needed services like guidance counsellors in education systems every day.

Today, Kathleen Foley and a few dozen parents made a public presentation on behalf of those students and they have named who to blame. They named, in fact, Ernie Eves as the grinch that stole education in their city and, of course, in communities around the province. They say it's the grinch that stole special education, occasional teachers, educational assistants, parenting centres, and so forth.

Mr John Hastings (Etobicoke North): Oh, yeah?

Mr Kennedy: We hear some "oh, yeahs" on the part of some members opposite, but this week, as they sit there complacently, headed toward their holidays, we have a pregnant mother here today who talked about a social worker who helped keep her going. That social worker was laid off this week. Another student told us of a three-year-old work order on a ceiling that's falling in their classroom.

They also told us about the fudge cookies they brought as a present for Mr Eves because of the fudging that happened with the books here in Toronto. Most importantly, these parents still have hope. They hope that, like the grinch, Mr Rozanski may be able to make Mr Eves have his heart grow three times bigger and change his mind and admit his mistakes. But these children and their parents believe they are more likely to be like disappointed kids at Christmas: that they'll find a lump of coal. But that coal may come in handy in their stocking, because the heat has been turned down in Toronto schools.

DRINKING AND DRIVING

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): I want to say first of all how nice it is to see so many of the students here today in our galleries.

With just over two weeks before Christmas, I, like all members of the House, look forward to spending quality time with my family and friends back in the riding. It is the festive season and the focus is placed on the dangers of drinking and driving.

We now see evidence of this everywhere. Turn on your TV to see it in the form of commercials, or look on the streets of your neighbourhood to see the police authorities implement a RIDE program.

The festive season provides us with the opportunity to get together with people we may not have seen all year long. Unfortunately, getting together often means having a few drinks too many and being faced with the decision of whether or not to get behind the wheel of a car.

I encourage everyone who has to make this decision, perhaps more than once over the holidays, to remember that drinking and driving is the principal cause of death and injury in Ontario. But there is much more at stake. By drinking and driving, we not only risk injuring or killing ourselves or other people; we also risk leaving our family and friends without us.

Our government has implemented a number of measures to fight drinking and driving. For example, we increased fines and suspension periods for convicted drunk drivers and doubled grants to RIDE programs. I introduced a private member's bill to implement an ignition interlock program for people who violate drinking and driving law in Ontario. We will see these devices installed early in the new year.

But no matter how much we do, the decision still counts down to a personal decision, so please remember to make the right choice this holiday season. Please don't drink and drive.

VISITORS

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Today marks the 25th anniversary of the air ambulance service in our province. It's my pleasure to recognize four members of the service who are joining us in the members' gallery today. We have Dr Chris Mazza, the CEO of the Ontario air ambulance base hospital program; Steve Farquhar and Steve Darling, two critical care flight paramedics from Bandage One; and Captain Jerry Beatty, a pilot from Bandage One.

I ask that all members of this House recognize these members of the air ambulance service and to congratulate the service for their 25 years of hard work and commitment to Ontarians from north to south and east to west.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm also very pleased to have with us today in the Speaker's gallery Her Excellency the Vietnamese ambassador to Canada, who is accompanied by her husband. Please join me in welcoming our honoured guests.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to wear a button that says "Stop the Toxic Sludge."

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

REENA FOUNDATION ACT, 2002

Mr Arnott moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill Pr17, An Act respecting the Reena Foundation.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Pursuant to standing order 84, the bill stands referred to the standing committee on regulations and private bills.

GENOCIDE MEMORIAL WEEK ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SEMAINE COMMÉMORATIVE DES GÉNOCIDES

Mr Wood moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 222, An Act to proclaim Genocide Memorial Week in Ontario / Projet de loi 222, Loi proclamant la Semaine commémorative des génocides en Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Bob Wood (London West): This bill proclaims the week beginning on the fourth Monday in March of each year as Genocide Memorial Week. It is similar to a bill I introduced earlier, but adds the United Nations definition of genocide to the preamble and makes a few editing changes to the preamble.

I will be asking the House soon to give second reading to the bill and refer it to committee for consideration.

ONTARIO HERITAGE DAY ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE JOUR DU PATRIMOINE DE L'ONTARIO

Mr Agostino moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 223, An Act to proclaim Ontario Heritage Day and to amend other Acts to include Ontario Heritage Day as a holiday / Projet de loi 223, Loi proclamant le Jour du patrimoine de l'Ontario et modifiant d'autres lois en vue de l'ajouter comme jour férié.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): If this bill is passed—if the government will bring it forward—it certainly would give us an opportunity to have a day to celebrate our heritage and history in this great province. I think Ontarians from all walks of life who have come here from many countries would love to participate in that. It would be the second Monday in June and would be declared a statutory holiday.

VISITORS

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Speaker: It gives me the greatest of pleasure to stand and introduce the class from Our Lady of Perpetual Help school, created in the great riding of Toronto Centre-Rosedale, and the home class of our page, Victoria.

MOTIONS

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that, notwithstanding the motion passed by the House on Monday, November 18, 2002, pursuant to standing order 9(c)(ii), the House shall meet from 6:45 pm until midnight on Monday, December 9, 2002, for the purpose of considering government business.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1355 to 1400.

The Speaker: Would the members kindly take their seats, please.

All those in favour of the motion will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. I have in my hand lists that have been put together by the Municipal Property Assessment Corp. This is a corporation that you created and that is run by your provincial appointees.

The Toronto list is entitled "fine-tuning," and for Windsor it's called the "sensitive" list. The people on this list for fine-tuning of their property tax assessments read like a Who's Who of who can make trouble for the government: along with local politicians, media types such as Moses Znaimer, Peter Mansbridge, Garth Turner, Gord Martineau, and on and on.

The agency is a creature of your government. You created it; you appoint the board. There's a list like this for every region in Ontario, and it's a list about damage control. You went out of your way to go over the assessments for the people on these lists with a fine-toothed comb because you don't want anyone with a high profile causing trouble for you, but the rest of Ontario waits on hold while they complain about their high tax assessments.

Minister, how do you rationalize the creation of these lists?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): As the honourable member may well know, this organization is an independent corporation that is run by the municipalities on property tax assessment. However, it is very, very clear that the issue here is that some taxpayers may well have received treatment that is different than other taxpayers. I think any perception of favouritism by MPAC is unacceptable. That's why I wrote to them this morning and asked them to look into this to assure taxpayers that everyone has been treated equitably and fairly. They have written back to assure us that an investigation is going on into the existence of that list and what it means and to make sure that no taxpayers have been treated unfairly.

Mrs Pupatello: Well, Minister, let me say to you again that this is an agency you created. You appointed the board members. It is your agency, and you can't sidestep this one. You've politicized the bureaucracy so much that they put together secret lists for special treatment to do their damage control.

It's you who cut the civil service to the bone so there aren't people to do these assessments and reviews like there used to be. There's about half the staff there used to be. There aren't enough employees to handle the complaints by the public, but they've got the time to make these special lists for special people: for city newspaper columnists, journalists, politicians. They get special treatment and an assessment to the 11th degree, and that covers your bases. But for normal people: please, Minister, explain why there would be two standards for people in this province, one for that special list of sensitive people and another for the rest of Ontario complaining about their tax hikes.

Hon Mrs Ecker: First of all, there are not, nor should there be, two standards for taxpayers in this province. That's why I have written to MPAC to ask them to explain themselves and to ensure that all taxpayers are treated fairly, that there is to be no special treatment. They have written back and said to us that they are reviewing this to make sure that is indeed the case.

This organization was set up at arm's length from the government to govern the property tax assessment system on behalf of municipalities. Municipal representatives constitute the majority of the governance of this board. But what is important here is that all taxpayers must be treated fairly, and steps are being taken to ensure that is indeed the case.

Mrs Pupatello: Minister, the list exists and there's a secret list of people who get special attention. You appointed the people to run this organization. In Toronto it's called "fine-tuning"; in Windsor it's called the "sensitive" list. Tell us why it could possibly include columnist Gord Henderson on a Windsor list, but you want to stay out of trouble. We've heard that people on the list get special treatment and the average family can't get through on the line. They're put on hold and they don't get answers on why their property taxes are going through the roof. They can't get the service, but special people are getting all the service they require.

Last week we learned that half of Ontario companies aren't even filing their income tax. That's your ministry's problem. Today we learned that half of the people can't get through on the phone lines. They're put on hold when they're trying to call about their property tax assessments, but these special people, the elite of Toronto, are the ones who get all of the attention.

Minister, this is in your bailiwick, and it's about time you do something about it.

Hon Mrs Ecker: That particular list contains a number of politicians on it from all political parties, so if the honourable member believes she or a member of her party have had special treatment, I would be very pleased to look into that.

The assessment rolls are public. We have told MPAC this is not acceptable. We have written to them this morning to ensure that this is not acceptable behaviour. They indeed are launching an investigation to ensure that no taxpayers have received preferential treatment. That would not be right. That is contrary to government policy, and I have encouraged them to do the right thing.

GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet. I want to follow up on some concerns raised by the Provincial Auditor last week. He tells us in his report that spending on consultants has more than doubled under the Harris-Eves government.

Over the past three years, the Ministry of Energy has paid one company, Enterprise Canada, over $600,000 in consulting fees. We've checked the lobbyist registry, and at the same time as you were paying them as consultants for the Ministry of Energy, they were also being paid by Direct Energy and National Grid.

Minister, how could you allow such an obvious conflict of interest to occur?

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): First of all, I point out that last week—and in fact every day that I answer these questions—I indicated that the auditor is making certain recommendations that we accept fully. In fact, what we're doing right now is bringing in rules that will address all the concerns the auditor has. We're trying to make sure that we have that type of full accountability for the taxpayers' money.

These are some of the rules I indicated last week, which I certainly indicate again. The ministries will be required to also provide annual reporting to the Management Board on their use of consulting services. In addition to that, we are requiring full documentation. I also am looking right now, at the request of the Premier, at going further than addressing the concerns the auditor indicated in his recommendations, which we have either implemented or are in the process of implementing now; to go further than that to see if there are any other ways in which we can make sure the public service is far more accountable than it is now.

Mr Duncan: One of the principals is Hugh Mackenzie, a good friend of the Premier's. I should say that our beef is not with him or that firm; it's with you. You are the ones who have allowed the conflict of interest to occur.

Senior civil servants have a cooling-off period. They aren't allowed to profit from their government work. The same either isn't true or hasn't been enforced with regard to government consultants.

Minister, Enterprise Canada's Web site says they offer "an energy practice designed to assist clients in influencing the restructuring of Ontario's electrical and natural gas sector."

The Ministry of Energy paid Enterprise Canada $600,000. While they were working as government consultants, Direct Energy and National Grid were paying them to influence government energy policy. If this isn't a conflict of interest, I don't know what is.

Minister, were you aware of this situation? If not, what investigations will you undertake to ensure that the public interest was never compromised by your government's incompetence?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: I'm going to send the second part of this over to the Minister of Energy for the response.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I read with great interest the report tabled last week by the Provincial Auditor. I think all of us on this side of the House value the contribution that he makes to public administration in the province of Ontario.

I've gone on record a good number of times saying that the taxpayer is well served by the Provincial Auditor. The Premier, on receiving the Provincial Auditor's report, said that with respect to the use of consultants by government ministries, we should not only adopt what he has recommended but perhaps indicate to the Chair of Management Board that we should look even further. I totally agree with the Premier in that regard.

Mr Duncan: Minister, documents filed with the lobbyist registry indicate that Enterprise Canada was lobbying on behalf of Direct Energy on the electricity market opening. They were lobbying on behalf of National Grid on both the market opening and the sale of Hydro One. At the same time, the Ministry of Energy was paying them $600,000. These are two of the biggest decisions your government has taken. These decisions are worth billions of dollars.

In addition to the energy contracts, they were paid by Management Board while lobbying for Accenture. They were paid by the Attorney General while lobbying the government for changes to the Public Accountancy Act. Last year, Enterprise Canada was paid by the Ministry of Health. This year, it's lobbying them for private MRIs.

Taxpayers have paid Enterprise Canada in excess of $3 million. They have worked for 11 ministries while representing 113 private interests. Will you authorize the immediate release of all their contracts, and will you release what rules you have, if any, governing these consultants and how these conflicts have come to happen? Will you do that today?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: What I will indicate today is what I've been indicating for the last week: the auditor has made certain recommendations, we're following them fully and we're looking to go further than that. I put on the record again, in case the members of the opposition haven't listened fully, that part of what we need right now, and what the auditor said we needed, is full documentation.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: By the way, we do have lobbyist registration legislation. We brought that in, folks, not you.

It's important for us to make sure there's accountability for money that's being spent. We also indicated clearly that we want to have follow-up reports as well for any use of consultants. We've also asked all the ministries to look first in terms of using internal resources we have in the public service. If they're not available, we will allow the use of consultants. But as part of any consultant's job, they have to make sure we have a transfer of that knowledge to the public service, so that in the future we can depend on the resources we have at hand.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I wonder if Enterprise Canada has any connection with Groupe Action Québec, or is it Groupe Action Canada?

My question is for the Minister of Finance. Enron was a company that engaged in a number of side deals to cover up the bad financial shape of its books. We know from your financial statement that your government is facing a $2-billion shortfall, so you're going to do a side deal and sell off 50% of Hydro One in order to make your books look better.

Can you tell the people of Ontario why you're going to use the discredited Enron style of economics here in Ontario?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): We are not; we would not.

Mr Hampton: I think it's pretty clear that the government has indicated it wants to sell up to 49% of Hydro One. I think it's also pretty clear from your financial statement just a couple of days ago and your budget in the spring that you're $2 billion short. We've asked for estimates out there of what Hydro One might be worth. Even some of your cabinet ministers have indicated that you'd like to get about $2 billion for the sale of half of Hydro One. That sounds very much like the Enron style of economics. You do a side deal over here and try to cover up the difficulties you're facing with your budget, in terms of your finances. Except the problem here is that when you sell off half of Hydro One, you also sell off half of its profits, $200 million a year, which the people of Ontario then have to make up either through higher hydro rates or through some other means.

Can you tell me how the people of Ontario come out ahead in this kind of Enron-style deal?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I appreciate the honourable member's concern about balanced budgets in this province. It would have been more helpful for Ontario taxpayers if he and his government had paid attention to balanced budgets instead of racking up an $11-billion deficit, having the government spend $1 million more an hour every hour of the day than they were taking in.

This government, because of the economic planning and policies we put in place under Premier Harris, under Ernie Eves, under Jim Flaherty—those policies have given us balanced budgets for three years in a row. We're on track for another balanced budget this year. We have more jobs, more growth and less debt interest as a percentage of our GDP. The management that we have put in place, and will continue to have in place, is delivering what Ontario needs to generate more jobs and more growth for this province.

Mr Hampton: Your own budget discloses that you have to sell off $2 billion of assets to give the appearance of having a balanced budget. The Provincial Auditor in his report last week pointed out that currently the stream of revenues, the profit from Hydro One, goes toward the stranded debt. If a private company is interested in half of Hydro One, it's only so they can get their hands on those profits, which means the money will no longer be going to the stranded debt. But you still have to pay on the stranded debt, so you either have to raise the debt charge that people pay on their hydro bill or you have to raise their hydro rates. Any way you look at it, the hydro consumers of Ontario get stuck paying over and over and over again just so you can use a little bit of Enron-style flip-flop to hide the fact that you've got a $2-billion deficit. Wouldn't it be better to tell the people of Ontario that you've got a $2-billion shortfall, rather than sticking it to hydro consumers year over year over year with high hydro bills? Wouldn't that be a more honest way of doing it? Why don't you come out and admit that that is what's really going on?

Hon Mrs Ecker: Again, I appreciate the honourable member's concern for the debt of Ontario Hydro. Why was it that his government, when they left office, had racked up the debt of the old Ontario Hydro to $38 billion? He thought that was acceptable to taxpayers. We did not think that was acceptable. As a matter of fact, the debt has come down for Ontario Hydro. We laid out the plan in the June budget with revenue and expenditure forecasts as we always do, with a plan in place to ensure there is support for more jobs and more growth, and we laid out our plan for a strategic partner in Hydro One: to have them come in with the private sector discipline that I'm sure the honourable member would agree needs to be done with the investments and improvements that will benefit electricity consumers in this province.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Energy. In September I asked you about the situation in Wawa, a northern Ontario town where people were facing skyrocketing hydro bills. Pensioners were paying more for their hydro bill than they were paying for their rent; Main Street businesses were looking at the prospect of going out of business—the major employers in the community having to question whether they could stay in business. Then you brought in your so-called hydro rebate scheme and you tried to tell everyone that this was going to make a difference for people. We were talking with folks in Wawa just last week. They're still paying 50% more on their hydro bills. Can you tell them why, despite your much ballyhooed rate cap, they're still going to be paying 50% more on their hydro bills?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): As the member opposite will be aware, I spoke to him in September in this place about the cross-subsidization that had occurred in that particular community. The announcement the Premier made on November 11 said that the price of delivery of electricity in Ontario would be frozen.

Mr Hampton: The people there have a different version of it. The people there noticed that the company which now owns virtually all of the hydro system is Brascan. This is the same Brascan that contributed over $100,000 dollars to your Premier's leadership campaign. Brascan has been allowed to arrange the hydro rates so that people are on an ongoing basis being stuck with hydro bills that are at least 50% more than what they paid before.

You're spending $1.5 million advertising on television and in newspapers a hydro rebate scheme and a hydro rate cap. Why are the people of not just Wawa but of the surrounding communities going to continue to be stuck with hydro bills that they can't afford to pay? Don't you recognize any responsibility to them, or is your responsibility solely to your corporate friends at Brascan?

Hon Mr Baird: I find it passing strange that the leader of the third party and his entire caucus just stood in their places in the Legislature and voted against Bill 210, a bill that would have provided substantial relief to consumers in Ontario. It would have provided relief to farmers, small business people and working families, and he and his party said no; they wanted none of it. They voted against it that they can't afford to pay? Don't you recognize any responsibility to them, or is your responsibility solely to your corporate friends at Brascan?

The member opposite has raised a tremendously serious concern with respect to how this government may have been influenced. If he has any evidence, I would encourage him to take it directly to the Integrity Commissioner, because I don't believe he has any.

ADULT EDUCATION

Mr Joseph Cordiano (York South-Weston): My question is for the Minister of Education. Today a number of students from the York Adult Day School have come to Queen's Park to tell their story. It's a story about how your government has turned its back on them and shut the door on their education.

Your appointed supervisor to the Toronto District School Board, Paul Christie, ordered the closure of the York Adult Day School effective January 2003. That means that these students will have no chance to complete their education. How do you answer to the students at York Adult Day School when they say you are being insensitive? Students who are here today, students like Inez Lawrence, Diana Lopez, Michelle Allen, Caroline Moran, David Silva, Jay Singh and John Chan, who are in the gallery today, want to know why your government is turning its back on them and absolutely shutting the door on their continuing education. Why is that, Minister?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): Nothing could be further from the truth. I'm sure that the member opposite knows that as well. I understand the decision was made in order to ensure that any underutilization of space could be taken into consideration. A decision was made to consolidate in order to respond to underutilization. There have been no programs reduced or eliminated. Students are all going to continue to be accommodated at the four remaining sites.

This was an administrative decision that has been made. I can assure the member opposite that the programs will still be there. They will be at different locations but I understand they are in each part of Toronto in order that all the people in the city continue to have access to adult programs.

Mr Cordiano: Minister, I don't know what planet you're on but the facts are clear. The closure of York effective January 2003 means that these students will have nowhere else to go because the other schools have waiting lists. They are at capacity. There is nowhere for these students to go.

As a matter of fact, since your government took office in 1995, the number of adult education spaces in Ontario has dropped from about 50,000 to about 8,700 spaces, a tremendous drop of 83%. Not only that, but you reduced the grant per adult student from $7,000 to about $2,300. So boards can't fund these spaces. Is it any wonder that the number of spaces has been reduced drastically and these students have nowhere to go?

So I'd like to ask you again, Minister: what do you say to these students who are single moms and people trying to help themselves get back in the workforce? You're turning your back on them. You're shutting the door to their continuing education. That's the end of the story. How do you answer to them? There's no other way to explain it.

Hon Mrs Witmer: Last week I spoke to CESBA, which is an organization that deals with adult learners and continuing education. I congratulated them on the tremendous job that they do with our adult learners. I would say to the members opposite that the decisions that are being made will not eliminate any programs. They will not eliminate the opportunities. According to the information that I have received from the Toronto District School Board, it is simply the consolidation of underused space and making sure that people can be accommodated at the other sites.

Adult education, I would mention to the member opposite, is very important. I understand that the Toronto school board is going to continue to ensure that students can be accommodated at the four sites.

WEST NIPISSING ECONOMY

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): My question is for the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. Last month, residents of west Nipissing were hit hard by the announcement that Weyerhaeuser was closing its facility there. Being the neighbouring MPP for the area, I understand the feelings and the losses those workers and their families have experienced. What has the government been doing to help residents of west Nipissing?

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): My colleague from Nipissing is quite right: west Nipissing is currently in a very unfortunate situation. However, our government is committed to helping this community in its time of need. Our commitment is very clear. On November 7, I was welcomed to the community of west Nipissing—Sturgeon Falls, to be precise—bearing some very important news.

Before I get into that, though, I would like to commend Mr McDonald, my colleague, for his concern for the people of west Nipissing. AL was the first MPP to voice his concern over the Weyerhaeuser plant closure and to pledge our government's support and action to help overcome the challenges ahead.

Our government stepped up to the plate by announcing in west Nipissing that it would be the first community eligible for the northern Ontario heritage fund's economic diversification program. We've made west Nipissing eligible to receive up to 75% or $5 million per project. These are economic development programs to bring jobs back to the community, and we've set no limit on the number of projects or the number of $5-million tranches the community can receive to get itself back on its feet. I know there's a local recovery committee working very hard on doing just that right now.

Mr McDonald: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. Speaking with some of the residents of west Nipissing, I can tell you they were thrilled with your recent announcement. Can you tell me of any more help the Ontario government is willing to provide for the residents of west Nipissing?

Hon Mr Wilson: I too have had the opportunity on many occasions to speak with workers who are directly affected, and their families, and it is a difficult period. I think many people continue to be in shock in that area, but they're in good hands. Their community leaders and the committee they've put together are great people. I've had an opportunity to meet with some of them.

Our ministries are working together. My ministry, with the Ministry of Training, Colleges and Universities, is also implementing a community adjustment program to help ensure that adequate resources are available to address the needs of the community. As I said, the local community adjustment and recovery committee is working very hard and are now just getting their minds around the huge potential they have as a community and to move that potential into actual new jobs and economic diversification for the community.

I know that their neighbour next door, AL McDonald, will continue to keep us posted on progress and will continue to work hard on behalf of those constituents, who aren't in his riding but who live next door and whom he cares very much about. I know he will continue to bring to our attention the needs of that community as they arise.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): My question is to the Minister of Public Safety and Security. By now you would have received the letter that was written by the Provincial Auditor to you on December 6 with respect to certain comments that you made both inside and outside the House last week. Specifically, I'm referring to the summary he provides on the third page of his letter. I would just like to ask you for your comments on this.

He states, "I would appreciate if you could clarify to the Legislative Assembly that:

"—the number of 10,000 was an estimate agreed to by your ministry at the time of the audit;

"—the CPIC number of 5,900 had never been communicated to my office and represents more current information which was obtained by you in November 2002;

"—the CPIC number may be somewhat low because it may exclude information from some police forces;

"—my report is not misleading...."

Now, would you please confirm, Minister, that the auditor is correct in his assessment as set out in his letter to you?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Again, as I indicated in the House last week, as a former chairman of public accounts I have enormous respect for Mr Peters, the office and the role his office plays. With respect to these matters, maybe I'm misinterpreting the letter, but I think Mr Peters does not take issue with respect to the number we have provided off of CPIC, the 5,900 number. I guess the question is whether there was any disagreement at the time of publication. That's a matter—I've asked my deputy to sit down with Mr Peters, hopefully this week, to discuss this situation.

I think the important part of this is that the auditor's report raised some serious issues with respect to outstanding warrants. We agree with that. We are addressing that very vigorously with additional probation and parole workers, the additional monies we've put into the ROPE squad and a number of other initiatives undertaken by this government.

Mr Gerretsen: Well, Minister, you still haven't answered the question. He specifically asks you in his letter to clarify to the Legislative Assembly that the number 10,000 was an estimate agreed to by your ministry at the time of the audit. He also specifically states, "My report is not misleading, but you have more current information, which you wanted to provide to the Legislative Assembly and you and I agree that there are thousands of outstanding arrest warrants, many of which are for serious (Level 1) offenders." He goes on to say, "My report does not indicate that there are 3,000 serious offenders in our community being unmonitored." You made those statements last week; that is not contained in this report in any way, shape or form.

You attacked the integrity of his office, an office on which we all rely in this assembly. Minister, will you not do the right thing now and apologize to him and to the people of Ontario for the language that you used last week?

Hon Mr Runciman: I think I handled the issue appropriately last week. With respect to the question of the 3,000 offenders, I am writing back to Mr Peters. I think there has been a misinterpretation, perhaps fuelled by members of the opposition, with respect to this.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Runciman: They're very thin-skinned, aren't they, Mr Speaker? Maybe it has something to do with last week's poll results; I'm not sure.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): You can't bully him.

Hon Mr Runciman: The number 3,000—and I'm sure Mr Phillips wants to hear this—was in respect to the 10,000 figure in the auditor's report. There was an estimate made by the auditor that 30% of those 10,000 individuals with outstanding warrants were level 1 offenders, or serious offenders. That's where the figure came from. So there was a misunderstanding, a lack of communication with respect to that number.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTING STANDARDS

Mr Bob Wood (London West): My question is to the Attorney General. It relates to the public accounting provisions of the recently passed Bill 213. There have been concerns expressed by many people with respect to whether standards for public accounting are going to be lowered and with respect to what process is going to be used to determine what changes are to be made to the current governance of public accounting. Can the minister assure this House that Ontario's standards for public accounting are not going to be lowered and that all interested parties will be fully consulted before any changes flowing from Bill 213 are implemented?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I thank the honourable member for his question. With regard to the public accounting provisions of Bill 213, which passed through this Legislative Assembly last week, and as the Minister of Labour reminds me, unanimously, I say to you, sir, that I'd be quite happy to share with you what I have shared with interested parties and indeed with members of this Legislative Assembly, members from all three parties of this Legislative Assembly. No part of the public accounting provisions will be put into effect until there has been full consultation with the interested party. That will include the ICAO, the CMAs and the CGAs. The standards will not be lowered, and any new rules will reflect the high expectations of our trading partners, both internationally and domestically, and only serve to strengthen Ontario's reputation as a jurisdiction in which individuals from around the world have comfort and great confidence in their investments. That will allow for us to continue to grow as an economy and to create jobs in this great province.

Mr Wood: The minister will be aware that one of the key principles of good regulation supported by the Red Tape Commission is that all parties affected should be fully consulted before regulatory changes are made. Will the minister outline for the House the process of consultation which he has in mind for the public accounting changes being contemplated?

Hon Mr Young: We have asked Dean Daniels to look into this matter and indeed to consult with stakeholders, including the ones I mentioned just a moment ago. We've given him the task of making sure that accounting standards in this province continue to be internationally respected and reflective of the high expectations of business and indeed investors. He will not only work at establishing a tough exam but he'll also consider educational and experience requirements, public oversight, codes of professional conduct and monitoring and discipline. All his work will ensure that these standards will operate to protect investors, businesses and citizens. He will consult with parties like the ICAO, the CGAs and the CMAs, and he has already started those consultations. We encourage all parties to co-operate with Dean Daniels, and we certainly look forward to receiving his report in the new year.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): My question is to the Minister of Labour. The Conservative government is forcing people to work overtime against their will. Three men who work at the Toyota assembly plant in Cambridge have spent the last half year fighting for the right to go home after putting in an eight-hour day—the right to go home to rest, to recuperate, to see their families—because Toyota claims those workers don't have that right. Toyota claims that these workers and others have to work overtime, and it says your government has given it the right to do this to those workers. Minister, why did you and your government enact a special regulation that allows bosses like Toyota to force workers to work overtime?

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): The member for Niagara Centre, I'm sure, would want to be factually correct in his statements. It was an employment standards officer who issued an order against Toyota, and Toyota has disagreed with that and has taken it to the Ontario Labour Relations Board. The employment standards officer, an employee of the government, issued an order on this matter to Toyota, and Toyota disagrees and they've taken it to the Ontario Labour Relations Board. We won't comment further on it because it's before the board.

Mr Kormos: Two years ago, your government brought in these new standards—if they're standards at all, they're not standards for workers; they're standards for bosses—and New Democrats argued that workers would be forced to work overtime. Your government, of course, said it could never happen. The then-Minister of Labour, now the Minister of the Environment, said, "The allegations made by the New Democrats are absurd. You're suggesting that somehow an employee would have to agree to overtime averaging for two years and they'd have no way of getting out. That's absurd, absolutely absurd." Of course, the same member claimed that hydro prices would never go up. He was wrong on both accounts.

These workers have been fighting for over six months for the right not to have to work overtime. They and other workers are being forced to work overtime. The issue is, what are you doing to protect those workers from being called upon, being forced, being required to work overtime? You said it wouldn't happen. It did, and those workers are telling me they now have to hire lawyers and go through a process to do something you said could never happen. What are you doing to help those workers to ensure they aren't working forced overtime?

Hon Mr Clark: The member for Niagara Centre can growl all he wants; it doesn't change the facts. The facts are that employees of the government of Ontario, employment standards officers, made a decision based on the complaints from employees at Toyota. Toyota has challenged that decision. They have that right, unless you believe they don't have the right to disagree and don't have the right to go before the Ontario Labour Relations Board. If a union didn't have that right, you'd be flipping out. But a company has challenged it, not the province of Ontario. A company has challenged the decision of our employees in this matter. This has nothing to do with your rhetoric. You're completely wrong in this regard. Toyota has taken it to the Ontario Labour Relations Board, and we're going to wait for the outcome of the board. You're just making all this up on the fly.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): My question is to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. On the coldest day of this winter, mentally ill and disabled people have been turned away from lodging homes in the city of Hamilton. Many of these folks end up on the street, and some end up in shelters when they're not full. Your government has caused this situation for a number of years now by capping the amount of money that is given for the city to operate lodging homes. This is a serious situation. You have some of the most vulnerable people—people who are mentally ill, people who are disabled—getting turned away from a lodging home because the cap is there and they cannot accept any more individuals. Where do they end up? They end up back out on the street, and many are on medication, many need that home to carry on from day to day.

The city of Hamilton has asked for $240,000 to fix this problem. Will you stand up and commit to that money now?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): We have a number of programs in many jurisdictions to help those who are having challenges with housing. I believe the program the member across the way is referring to is a program to which we added per diem funding last year in response to concerns that were raised on this very matter.

Mr Agostino: Minister, it is clear that you don't have a clue about what you're talking about. You have capped this program for a number of years. The reality is this: 65 people have been turned away from lodging homes—mentally ill, disabled individuals; sick individuals; individuals on medication to control their mental illness. They're being turned out on to the streets. On Saturday night, all the shelters in Hamilton were full. That is the sheer reality that the mentally ill and disabled are facing in my city and across the province. Minister, I hope to God we don't have to wait for someone to die on the street before you act.

I made a very simple request. The city has said that $240,000 in emergency assistance would give them enough to cover this for the winter, would give enough to ensure that nobody gets turned away from a second-level lodging home, that no one gets turned away from the home who needs its help.

Again, very simple, very clear: will you commit today to the $240,000 so no one gets turned away from one of these homes: people who need your help and are looking to you to protect them?

Hon Mrs Elliott: In response to my colleague across the way, we have increased the per diem for domiciliary hostels by 16% to $40 a day, adding another $7.6 million in provincial subsidy to try and address that concern.

With regard to the Hamilton situation, I understand that there are 100 units under the homelessness phase one and 93 under the homelessness phase two program, for a total of 193 homelessness housing units. There is an organization in position to take up some of the individuals who may be displaced in this particular situation. So I can say to my colleague across the way that we have been trying very hard to address this situation. We have already taken steps to try and address this very matter.

DRINKING AND DRIVING

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is to the Minister of Transportation. The holiday season is fast approaching, a time when family, friends and co-workers gather together to celebrate our holidays. All too often, these holiday gatherings turn into tragedy because there are still those who drink, get behind the wheel and drive: a deadly combination.

Despite valuable efforts from organizations such as Mothers Against Drunk Driving, Ontario Students Against Impaired Driving and the Ontario Provincial Police, drinking and driving remains the principal cause of criminal death and injury in our province.

Minister, clearly the message is not getting through to everyone. Perhaps selfish drivers who continue to drink and drive without any concern for other people's lives will be concerned about the consequences they personally face. Minister, what can drunk drivers in this province expect to face when caught by our police?

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): A lot of people who are caught driving after they've been drinking think a suspension will come in place and they are not aware of the heavy financial penalties that they pay as well. Normally, the fine is anywhere from $600 to $2,000 on the first offence. Court costs range anywhere from $2,000 and up for a lawyer. There's a mandatory remedial program which costs the sentenced person over $500. There's a licence reinstatement fee of $100. Now, under the ignition interlock, thanks to Garfield Dunlop, there's an additional fine of $1,140. In addition, we have learned from the insurance industry that insurance rates go up $3,000 a year for three years as a result of an impaired driving charge. That totals $13,000 for an impaired driving charge. People in this province shouldn't drink and drive.

Mr Dunlop: Minister, it is reassuring to know that there are still financial penalties for this reckless offence, as there should be, but perhaps not all drunk drivers are concerned about the monetary penalties. For some, the only answer may be to get them off the road. What has your ministry done to get these safety hazards off the road and, to the greatest extent possible, prevent them from getting behind the wheel drunk again?

Hon Mr Sterling: I mentioned in the first question what the financial penalties were. The other penalties of course are the suspension of the licence on the first conviction, one year; on the second conviction, three years; and the third conviction is a life suspension. Also, there's a 90-day administrative driver's licence suspension. In other words, the licence is taken right away from the person on their blowing 0.08. As well, there is vehicle impoundment for those caught driving while suspended if they had a conviction for impaired driving before. And as I said in the previous answer, there are mandatory in-car breath screening devices installed in vehicles upon licence reinstatement, at the cost of the person who has had their licence taken away.

Perhaps the most cogent reason for not drinking and driving is the life that somebody can save by not drinking and driving.

ONTARIO SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is for the Minister of Education. Recently I've been contacted by a parent who has been told by a Ministry of Education regional staff member that the Ontario scholarship program is being discontinued. Students who are graduating from secondary school after grade 12 do not qualify for consideration for an Ontario scholarship. One parent wrote to me to say, "Although Ontario scholars receive a certificate and no financial award, I believe that the recognition by the province of academic achievement of students in this manner is very important."

Minister, would you please confirm for the students of Ontario who will be graduating from grade 12 this year if your government will continue to recognize those students with honours achievement by awarding them an Ontario scholarship?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I would certainly take that issue under advisement and I will respond appropriately.

Mrs Dombrowsky: Minister, students in schools are beginning to prepare for their post-secondary experience. On the Ministry of Education Web site today, policy memorandum number 53, which talks to the Ontario scholarship program conditions of award, very clearly describes the requirements for students to be considered Ontario scholars. Students must obtain an 80% average in Ontario academic courses and they must be recommended by their principal. You would know that this year students who would graduate from grade 12 would have no OAC courses and therefore would not qualify.

Students and schools need to know as soon as possible if this program will continue to be offered for students in Ontario. It's very important to students, to their teachers, to their parents and to people in our communities. So I would ask if you would double your efforts to ensure that this kind of information gets to the school communities and particularly to our students who have worked so very hard and who achieve very well so that they would understand—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I very much appreciate the question from the member opposite. I would certainly concur with her. I think we have every reason to be proud of the students in Ontario. If we take a look at the international testing results, I think we're seeing that our students are performing better at the international level than ever before. I think we owe a huge debt of gratitude to the students themselves, but also to the teachers and certainly the very supportive families. I can assure the member I will have additional information.

FISHING

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is for my good friend the Minister of Natural Resources. I know personally you have a very active role in promoting youth and other fishing opportunities. I believe these opportunities are very important, as fishing plays a significant role in the recreational life of my riding of Durham. Your actions have made a difference. I can say that for sure, as I participated with my constituents on Kids' Fishing Day.

I understand there was a national meeting held recently with representatives from other provinces and predominantly non-governmental organizations. Can you inform James Gilchrist of Peterborough and each of us what the intent was of this meeting?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): I thank the member for Durham for the question. A large number of organizations came together from all across Canada, which included provincial organizations, national organizations, non-government organizations and representatives from the various ministries within each of the jurisdictions. They were brought together to review how we can better put together future plans for fishing activities here in Canada, such as National Fishing Week or the family fishing weekend, or moving forward on such things as national retail advertising. I'm sure a lot of people have seen the advertising that has come forward to promote that, because it's very significant. I know for example that fishing in the region of Durham, in the member's riding, represents about $75 million annually in income, which is very significant.

This meeting was designed to discuss issues such as access and changing society's attitudes on immediate gratification and fast food. I just want to commend and thank Rick Amesbury and all the people involved for their hard work in putting the meeting together.

Mr O'Toole: On behalf of not just the youth but indeed all outdoors people—to see a leader like you as minister in this area is reassuring.

Minister, I know that you pushed the representatives from the other provinces and territories for a Canada-wide fishing initiative. What is it that you and your ministry are doing specifically to promote fishing, not just in my riding of Durham but indeed across the province of Ontario?

Hon Mr Ouellette: Ontario does have a family fishing weekend which usually comes around in July and it will continue on this year.

While I was in Halifax, I also was the lead person leading the other jurisdictions, provinces and territories to fully implement and endorse National Fishing Week Canada-wide, which was well received.

Not only that; we have recently opened the Chatsworth fish hatchery, which is going to provide 2.8 million fish annually to be released in Ontario at a cost of about $6.5 million.

Annually with our partners, we release over 10 million fish, and we stock over 1,000 rivers, streams and lakes throughout Ontario.

As mentioned, we have a Kids' Fishing Day. There are other programs, which include streamside development.

Not only that; youth is the future in the MNR. MNR is going to focus on those individuals of today to make sure they're there for future generations.

SAULT STE MARIE SAWMILL

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): My question is for the same minister, the Minister of Natural Resources. He knows that over the last couple of months we've had mills close. A sawmill closed in Kirkland Lake. We've had a mill close in Sturgeon Falls; we heard about that this afternoon. Another Domtar mill closed in St Catharines.

In the last couple of weeks we've heard Domtar announce that it's going to close its sawmill in Sault Ste Marie. This will throw 130 mill workers out of work. When you consider the ripple effect throughout the community, hundreds more hard-working people will lose their jobs too.

Closing the mill is bad enough. Now we learn that Domtar wants to ship the wood, and our jobs, to mills in other communities, maybe even ship the wood across the river into the States.

Don't let Domtar rub salt into Sault Ste Marie's wound, Mr Minister. Stand up for the jobs in the Soo. Stop Domtar from shipping away our wood and our jobs. Will you do that?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): I know that any loss of a mill in any community in northern Ontario is very significant, and we take it very seriously. The member should know that my office is already trying to bring other investors forward who may be potentially interested in that specific mill. There are 50 employees who are going to be retained there, which is very significant, because some of the product that those 50 employees produce will support other mills throughout Ontario.

I don't intend to allow any fibre to leave Ontario. What will happen there is that we will talk with people in other locations to find out if there is a demand within Ontario. If we can retain that wood here, we certainly will.

Mr Martin: We're not convinced over here. We've seen what happened in Kirkland Lake. We've seen the effort that my colleague from Timmins-James Bay made there and you're still allowing them to ship that fibre. First you let Tembec ship Kirkland Lake's wood and jobs away. Now you're giving Domtar the same dirty deal.

Let me remind you that Ontario never wrote Domtar a blank cheque. We let Domtar harvest Soo-area wood because the company promised to build that mill and create all those jobs.

Read my northern lips, Minister: no mill, no jobs, no wood. Stand up for jobs in the Soo. Stop Domtar from shipping away our wood and our jobs. Will you do that?

Hon Mr Ouellette: This is a very in-depth question. He has mentioned Kirkland Lake in there. We met with the mayor from Kirkland Lake, and he wanted us to keep the workers working in the bush. Rather than have those extra 100 or 200 people unemployed in Kirkland Lake, the mayor asked us to keep it there and make sure that fibre flowed within the province of Ontario.

If I can keep people working in Ontario, I intend to do so. Domtar has been very active and has been working very hard, and has offered the employees early retirement, relocation opportunities and severance and training opportunities to keep the people in the north. If we can help out in any way, shape or form, we will. First and foremost is retaining the fibre, and we will look for options in the best interests of the people of Ontario.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. In eight months, the double cohort will come knocking on our doors. You have underestimated the number of spaces by approximately 6,000. Your own report shows that 6,000 students won't have a place at a college or university by the fall.

We have discovered that you are holding conversations with the universities and colleges, asking them to consider not accepting non-traditional students—mature students, college transfers to universities and anybody looking for a second chance in life by pursuing a post-secondary education—because of the fumbling of the double cohort.

You had seven years to plan for this. You mismanaged it. Now, our students, including our adult and mature students, will not have an opportunity to pursue a post-secondary education. Minister, what do you say to these 6,000 students across the province?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): Point by point, we have not underestimated. We have planned for the 6,000 students. We have not just talked about these special arrangements we have with the colleges and universities; we had them last year and they worked out. They are ongoing conversations. It isn't discovered now; this is part of a long-term plan.

I will also say, I'm wondering if the member opposite is saying we shouldn't put first our own high school graduating students coming from our secondary schools. Is that what the member is saying: not Ontario students first? I'd like to know if that is her problem.

Mrs Bountrogianni: I think the minister should listen carefully. I was speaking about Ontario students. Twenty-five- or 30-year-olds are still Ontario citizens.

I will agree with you on one point: you did know, way back in 1995, the exact number. Mike Gourley, who worked for then-Finance Minister Ernie Eves, told him the exact number of double cohort students. You've recently had a report that confirmed Mr Gourley's numbers. Absolutely, you've known all along how many students will be graduating in the year 2003. You chose, for financial reasons, to ignore this. You chose to put your friends first and students last.

I was speaking about Ontario students of all ages who want to pursue a post-secondary degree. Don't twist my words; just stand up and tell us the truth. What are you going to do?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: The chair of the guidance counsellors for Ontario would refer to this question as one of the many double cohort horror stories.

This is what's happening to our young people. This is a critic, and she knows that the government's priority is to accommodate Ontario high school students. That's the priority. As a matter of fact, last year we were able to do both and this year we plan on doing both, but if you have to choose, you will choose a secondary school graduating student first, period.

WORKPLACE SAFETY AND INSURANCE BOARD

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Interjections.

Mr Wettlaufer: I can't even hear myself speak.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. It's your own minister yelling, I might add. Members, please. The member for Kitchener Centre has a question. Sorry, member.

Mr Wettlaufer: Minister, the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board comes under your responsibility. I guess for about the last 10 or 15 years, I've heard from medium-sized and small employers in my riding—and I'm sure we've heard them all across Ontario—about the high costs of workers' comp. Many of them have said over the years—and I know they continue to say so—that they would like some kind of credit for reducing occupational injuries and illness and promoting overall workplace health and safety within their plants.

I would like to know exactly what we've done. I know that we have a safety groups program in place, but I'd like to know a little bit more about it, whether or not the employers in my riding and across Ontario are receiving any benefit from it. What kind of an investment is it?

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): I thank the honourable member for the question. What he's talking about is the safety groups program.

Hon Mr Clark: They don't want to hear it, Mr Speaker. It's so typical. They laugh about these things. These things are so important for the businesses in the community.

The program that we have in place allows for safety programs to be developed right with the employers. The reality is, it creates experience ratings. As a result, if these businesses do things right and improve their occupational health and safety programs, it actually results in much lower premiums for themselves. Historically, we've lowered rates by 30% across the province. We eliminated the unfunded liability down to $5 billion from the $9-billion, $10-billion or $11-billion deficit that was there before. Incidentally, it was the Liberals who took that unfunded liability from $2 billion to $9 billion. We'd like to remind them of that.

At the present time, the employers are working with the WSIB, lowering their lost-time injuries and, as a result, lowering their premiums.

PETITIONS

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): I've got a petition here that is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads like this:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

Thousands have signed this. I'm going to give this to Theresa to take to the desk.

HEALTH CARE

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I have almost 7,000 signatures protesting the closure of the Chedoke hospital site and the closure of the addictions rehabilitation services, effective tomorrow. Shame on the government for that. These petitions are calling on the government to reverse both those decisions and do it now. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas the Hamilton Health Sciences intends to close programs at the Chedoke hospital site and eliminate vital community services such as the young adult complex continuing care, addictions rehabilitation and outpatient physiotherapy programs;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We ask the Legislative Assembly to reverse these decisions and keep these valuable programs in our community" of Hamilton.

I proudly add my name to the list of thousands of Hamiltonians who are saying to the government, "Don't make these cuts."

ASSISTIVE DEVICES PROGRAM CENTRE

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I know my constituents are watching as I read this petition.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas a proposal for the creation of an ADP regional vision centre, sight-enhanced and sight-substitution, was made to the Ministry of Health on August 19, 2002; and

"Whereas the proposal was made by a registered ADP vision authorized with the MOH"—Ministry of Health—"who prepared a 26-page report; and

"Whereas the proposal demonstrates the need and benefit that would be derived from such a centre for the people in Durham who are low-vision, blind and perhaps blind and deaf; and

"Whereas ADP centres are more numerous west of Toronto, in the close proximity of Hamilton, Waterloo and the 401, this same privilege should be afforded to the eastern regions instead of coming into the hard-to-reach centres in Toronto; and

"Whereas clients, ophthalmologists, school boards, families, communities and employers want a regional ADP centre in Durham and surrounding areas;

"We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"(1) Approve the proposal for an ADP centre in Durham region as submitted by Deborah Wilson on August 19, 2002, on this date, December 3, 2002;

"(2) Undertake to further enhance access to ADP services east of Toronto, with Durham Region Vision Centre Inc."

This is signed by Susan Para and Nancy Diamond, the mayor of Oshawa. A number of people have signed and authorized this document, and I am presenting it to Anthony, who is from the riding of Oshawa.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): Over 1,500 of my constituents have asked me to read this petition to remind the government that they are expecting it to overrule the Ontario Energy Board approval of the retroactive delivery charge that Union Gas has put forward. We're hoping the government review of the OEB will accomplish that.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship"—right now they're saying they will be collecting as of January;

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

Some 1,500 people have signed this. I'm very grateful for their tremendous efforts. Hopefully the government will listen. I'm very pleased to add my name to the petition.

MEDICAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the OHIP schedule of benefits is often unclear about its definitions of good medical practice for many serious medical conditions: general checkups, re-checks, psychotherapy counselling and often major illness care by specialists. The medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons has been aggressively clawing back payments to hard-working, conscientious doctors on the basis of these flawed definitions and skewed statistical analyses.

"We, the undersigned, request the Minister of Health to suspend further reviews by the medical review committee; return the monies with its penalties, pending a negotiated agreement of an unambiguous schedule of benefits with representatives of affected practising physicians."

I have affixed my signature as well.

CAT SCANNER

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I have a petition that's signed by a great number of constituents in the city of Woodstock and the county of Oxford. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas various local partners have contributed capital funding for a CAT scan to be purchased by the Woodstock General Hospital; and

"Whereas a CAT scan is an essential piece of equipment for the practice of modern medicine; and

"Whereas a CAT scan is standard equipment for a hospital of this size in North America; and

"Whereas all hospitals associated with a city the size of Woodstock in southwestern Ontario have at least one CAT scan except for the Woodstock General Hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care approve the placement of a CAT scan at Woodstock General Hospital and provide the hospital with necessary operating funds to continue with its use."

I will attach my signature to this, as I totally agree with it.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it deals, again, with the multi-laning of Highway 69.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas over the last three years 46 people have died tragically along that stretch of highway; and

"Whereas so far this year 10 people have died between Sudbury and Parry Sound in car accidents; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I proudly give this petition to our page from Sudbury, Michael Schonberger, to bring to the table, and together we encourage everyone to drive very, very carefully along that stretch of highway.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): My petition reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 77 passed second reading on June 28, 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, received committee hearings in November 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77 addresses privacy concerns for those who wish to avoid or delay contact; and

"Whereas adoptees are dying from genetic diseases in the absence of their family medical history; and

"Whereas birth mothers were never promised confidentiality;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Immediately call Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, for third reading and final vote."

I will of course sign my name to this petition, because I fully support it.

WATER TESTING

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas Pine Meadows is a retirement community of 195 homes;

"Whereas Pine Meadows is self-contained with its own drinking water system and its own sewage facility;

"Whereas Pine Meadows' water supply was classified as excellent and high quality by the department of health;

"Whereas prior to the Walkerton concern, Pine Meadows' costs for water testing were $40,000 per year;

"Whereas the current costs amount to $88,000 per year;

"Whereas individual residents in Pine Meadows are charged $451 per year for these multiple tests;

"Whereas Pine Meadows is being penalized to a greater extent than larger surrounding communities, eg, Fergus, Guelph and Kitchener;

"Whereas residents of Pine Meadows are living on fixed incomes;

"Whereas residents of Pine Meadows can ill afford the unnecessary cost escalation;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, request the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to limit the number and frequency of water testing procedures occurring upon an already healthy water system."

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

Hundreds and hundreds of individuals have signed these petitions from all across the riding, in such places as Wheatley, Tilbury and Harrow.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; ...

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive rate increases."

I'm in full agreement and will sign my signature to this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I have a petition here addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; it deals with the increase in co-payments in long-term-care facilities.

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years; and

"Whereas this increase is above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario for 2002; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost-of-living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least at the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

This is signed by a number of people in London and Milton. I agree with it, and have signed my name accordingly.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 37(a), I wish to advise the House of my dissatisfaction with the response of the Minister of Public Safety and Security to my question today, Monday, December 9. The reason for my dissatisfaction is that he did not answer the question nor the supplementary.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Hopefully, you will file that.

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EXPENSES ACT (CABINET MINISTERS AND OPPOSITION LEADERS), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR L'OBLIGATION DE RENDRE COMPTE DES DÉPENSES (MINISTRES ET CHEFS D'UN PARTI DE L'OPPOSITION)

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 5, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons / Projet de loi 216, Loi concernant l'accès à l'information ainsi que l'examen des dépenses et l'obligation de rendre compte des ministres, des chefs d'un parti de l'opposition et de certaines autres personnes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Further debate.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I welcome the opportunity to speak to Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons. I think this is a good opportunity to speak about the bill, what's in it and what's not in it. I just want to say that basically this comes out of the disclosure that the former Minister of Tourism was found spending extravagantly on hotels, steak dinners and so forth and other things were happening. Expenses by ministers were not being accounted for. There was no transparency. Through the freedom of information process, the member from Windsor, Sandra Pupatello, found out that these ministers were spending way beyond the norm.

As a result of this, the government is trying to say "Well, we're going to check this." But this bill, in trying to check expenses, seems to be targeted more as a thing of getting back at the opposition for discovering these exorbitant expenses.

Interestingly enough, in this legislation the expenses of former Premier Bob Rae are included for scrutiny by the Integrity Commissioner, and so are the expenses of former Liberal leader Lyn McLeod. Yet oddly enough, the expenses of cabinet minister Cam Jackson, who was the one who purportedly spent lavishly, are not included in this because he's no longer a cabinet minister. So he's exempt from this act, as is Premier Mike Harris, who was in government since 1995. This act obviously omits a number of members of the government or former members and tries to essentially go after the opposition side.

I would hope that the government perhaps gets rid of the accusation that this is meant just to bring an accountability chill over the opposition, and that they will include former Premier Harris in this, and all former cabinet ministers on the government side, if they're serious about transparency and accountability. So we will see what happens with that.

Day after day we've seen incredible disclosures about what expenditures are actually filed by government members and are basically paid by the taxpayer. These are things like Smarties, movies—it just goes on and on. It's almost the type of thing—if it weren't so difficult for taxpayers trying to pay their bills, if they were to see what their money is being spent on they would be outraged. Filing after filing indicates that things are not taken very seriously when it comes to filing expense accounts. You wonder who they are thinking of.

We've got one MPP, who is a parliamentary assistant, who spent $862 on a Palm Pilot and charged the taxpayers. Another MPP, a parliamentary assistant on the government side, charged $178 for office supplies and to the Legislative Gift Shop for a mug, a souvenir plate, a glass. Former transportation minister Turnbull filed expense reports for food and alcohol at the Albany Club. Former transportation minister Brad Clark billed taxpayers for flowers. Dan Newman, when he was Minister of Northern Development, charged bulk candy purchases: $23 for Smarties, $16 for chewing gum. These are the types of things that are being charged to the taxpayer by members of the crown and parliamentary assistants.

I think something has to be done more than this government is doing to put a stop to this. We just see time and time again where it is impossible for the taxpayer to get at this information. They hide behind freedom of information where the taxpayer or the opposition has to pay money to get the information the government has. This is public information, and they are charging the taxpayers thousands of dollars to find out what their money is being spent on. So the government reluctantly tries to block this information and charges so much money that the average person can't afford to find out where their tax dollars are going. This has been going on for years. For the last seven or eight years there has been a pattern of blocking information, and that's why they wanted to block it. When you're spending this kind of money on things like Smarties and everything under the sun, you know why they did not want the public to know this stuff. That's why they charge money to find out where the money is being spent. This government has again gone out of its way to make it impossible in some cases to find out information about what these ministers are spending.

One of the areas that's very obvious too: you find out that the ministers here have spent $676 million on consulting companies. These are government tax dollars that are supposed to be transparent and there's supposed to be due process, yet these contracts are being let out. As the auditor says, the Provincial Auditor whom they're attacking because he told the truth, not only are these contracts exorbitant—and these are just the same thing as other expenditures of government money. Here's a case where the Management Board, which is supposed to be in charge of the other ministers—in August 2001, a consultant was paid $14,000, twice for the same invoice. In another case, the Management Board permitted a consulting firm to significantly increase its rates for two of its consulting staff for a period of time. Then this government allowed one consultant to raise his rates—he raised his own rates; this is the consultant—from $725 a day in April to $1,800 a day in May to $2,600 a day in September. This is what the consultants do. This is how seriously they treat taxpayers' money. It is just scandalous.

There are examples over and over again by the Provincial Auditor, who basically says that this is totally out of control; $672 million spent by this government in expenditures that are impossible to get at. So if the public wanted to find out about these contracts, they could not. In fact, these contracts haven't been released, but the auditor—thank God for the auditor—has been able to get to these contracts and saw the gross waste of money that this government has perpetrated on the taxpayers of this province.

Over and over and over again we've got blatant examples of expenditures by ministers. The ministers are supposed to be in charge. I'll give you some other examples. This is the finance ministry. A math error in the finance ministry saw two financial advisers both get contracts for $681,000. This was a $681,000 math mistake made by the Ministry of Finance.

Then we see that another consultant was given a contract for $3 million under the SuperBuild fund, a price which was double the lowest bid submitted for the work. So someone who bid $1.5 million didn't get the contract.

The person who bid $3 million got the contract. Why did that contract, twice as much, get the approval? These are the ministers, and that's why if you look at their expenses—and I think what they pay consultants should be included in this bill, because right now it's a free-for-all for consultants. They look at the ministers of the Ernie Eves-Mike Harris government, and the consultants all across this country smile because Christmas has come early and often for consultants from Santa Claus Ernie Eves. They have given these people blank cheques over and over again, whereas if you're a principal in a school trying to get your roof fixed, they say they have no money. If you're a senior who's in a nursing home, well, you have to get a 15% increase. They have no money to help seniors or kids in schools with leaky roofs, but if it comes to consultants, "Whatever you want." They even get twice what they ask for.

Look at another one. At least 15 senior consultants were paid $1,200 a day to supervise other consultants. A senior civil servant performing the same job would have been paid $340 a day.

If you look at what these ministers and their parliamentary assistants are spending on Smarties and Palm Pilots and dinners at the Albany Club, you'll see that they don't really care who gets the money, where it's spent; it is totally out of control. That's why when this government comes forward and says it wants an Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of Cabinet ministers, Opposition leaders and certain other persons, well, there is a whole area where they're spending literally a billion dollars a year on consultants under the sole control of these ministers. There is no scrutiny. There are no rules.

Then if you try and get the contract—we've asked the minister responsible for all these contracts to make the terms of these contracts worth $676 million public, to put them on the table. He refused. Why does he not want to put these contracts worth $676 million on the table? He knows why he doesn't want to: because the Provincial Auditor, who has looked at some of them, is scandalized. The press has said that never in the history of this province has a Provincial Auditor found such gross mismanagement, such free spending without tender, without contracts. That's why there are all these expenses and why they don't want to really tighten up on this kind of stuff. They're pretending now, "We're going to go after the opposition leaders; we'll show them," because they don't want us to raise these issues. They don't want us to get at contracts they've signed. They don't want us to get at how much money they really spend as ministers and parliamentary assistants. They're trying to keep it all hidden because there's a lot of dirty linen there, folks. There's $676 million that they tried to hide from the public.

Here's another example the Provincial Auditor found on how they control their expenditures. "At both the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Public Safety and Security, we found numerous examples of payments to consultants that were made without a valid contract in place to indicate the terms and conditions of the consulting arrangement or exceeded the ceiling price of contracts. In one example, we found that payments totalling $760,000 made by the Ministry of Public Safety and Security to a consulting firm were not supported by a formal agreement." So you can imagine giving someone a contract for $760,000 without a formally signed contract. This is the government that's pretending now to clamp down on expenditures by all members of this House, supposedly, especially cabinet ministers and the opposition leaders, yet in here there's not a mention of consultants, where they have given systematically, untendered, without competition, with no watchdog, $676 million of money that comes from the pockets of Ontario taxpayers that could have gone to build better roads, better public transit, better housing and better health care. Instead, they have thrown away $676 million.

I challenge all the ministers here: if that money was well spent, show us all the contracts. If you show us those contracts for $76 million, we'd then like to have a real debate on whether you got value for money. We know the Provincial Auditor has basically said in his report that you did not get value for money. This is not the opposition saying it. This is not the media saying it. This is the independent auditor of the provincial Legislature who does not report to government; he reports to this Legislature. As an independent auditor he has slammed this government not only for not getting value for money, but basically for not having or not obeying any rules when it comes not to $1,000 or $10,000 or $10 million or $100 million; basically there are no guidelines.

So when this government now says that they're going to put in some guidelines, I ask them why there are no guidelines here on what ministers expend not on their Smarties, not on their bills at the Albany Club; I want to know why there are no guidelines in this bill for $676 million in consulting contracts, which are very clear in the auditor's report. It's very clear that essentially there is a free-for-all here. It's not just one ministry; it's ministry after ministry. The ministry in charge, Management Board, is the worst of all. They're the ones who are supposed to be the watchdog for the other ministries.

I don't think that in this province we have ever seen an indictment of the free-spending ways of a government—and not only free spending. Basically a lot of these contracts were done improperly or were given mistakenly, without following their own rules. They did not follow their own rules.

Time and time again we have examples of a government totally out of control when it comes to spending. Do you know why they can do it? Because they can assign these contracts behind closed doors. The Legislature never sees these contracts. They're never reported in any minutes. The public ask me, "How could you ever vote on these contracts?" Well, we don't vote on the contracts because these contracts are signed by ministers behind closed doors. That is frightening.

We saw today where one of the big consulting firms in Ontario, Enterprise Canada, got $3 million worth of contracts, among other things. Then they found out they were working the other side of the table with the energy firms, advising the energy firms and then advising the government. How can that be value for money when you've got one company hired by the government to advise them on energy policy—like hydro and natural gas—and they're also working for Direct Energy and private firms on the other side? This is a blatant conflict of interest because it points to the lack of any kind of scrutiny.

I think the root of it is that all these contracts are never going to see the light of day. This ministry, this minister and the government are refusing to let us see those contracts, because they would be ashamed. They know that the public would ask for their heads if they ever saw who these contracts went to, how they got them, and that they were refusing to let them be made public. It's just glaring.

You've got an editorial here: "Ontario betrayed by ballooning fees."

"The most obscene example of ignored warnings comes from the very ministry that has nickel and dined welfare recipients for years.

"Peters"—the Provincial Auditor—"returned again this year to the issue of government fumbling over consulting contracts to private companies. The practice has ballooned from $271 million in 1998 to a whopping $662 million this year." It's just incredible.

Then you have situations where civil servants are let go or fired, as they were in the Ministry of Public Safety—40 of them were let go—and then they get rehired, in another case, at twice the amount of money. This is incredible. They're paying them this salary, they get fired, and then they get rewarded and come back as consultants. This is a total, flagrant example of how out of control it is.

"In the truly absurd category, how about the 15 consultants hired to supervise other consultants, at a daily rate of $1,200. A salaried senior civil servant"—again, he was paid 340 bucks. The civil servants who could do the job get paid one third or one quarter of what the consultants do.

The other great one, which has been going on for about seven or eight years, is Andersen Consulting. This government has signed—I guess the contracts must be worth over half a billion dollars with Andersen Consulting. They have been claiming they're doing all these savings, but Andersen Consulting, which is now called Accenture, is supposed to be revamping its computer system. The government, in awarding these contracts to Andersen Consulting, doesn't even obey its own rules. The money they're paying them is totally obscene. They don't even know whether they're getting any value for this money, but Andersen Consulting says, "Oh yes, we did such a good job at Enron, we're going to do a great job for the province of Ontario too." They're still hiring this company, which is an offshoot of Enron. They give Enron a bad name, I think, the way they're hiring this group.

Over and over again, we've got all kinds of examples of a government that allows ministers to hire consultants without any kind of rules. And they don't come cheap. The contracts range anywhere from $25,000 to tens of millions of dollars, and in the case of Accenture, almost half a billion dollars in contracts. There are no rules. In many cases, there are mistakes. In many cases, the one that offered the lowest tender doesn't get it, or the one that offered twice as much gets it over and over again.

And then they have the gall to defend this. They think that it's all right for them to have this unfettered right to sign these secret contracts with consultants without any legislative scrutiny. I even challenged them at the public accounts committee to put these contracts on the table. They won't. Put them on the table of this House so we can see them. They will not table the $676 million worth of contracts, because these contracts are a true abuse of power, an abuse of their control over these accounts. It is just beyond the norm, over and over again: hundreds of consultants paid salaries two to three times higher than the salaries of ministry employees; 40 Ministry of Public Safety employees returned at twice the salary; a contract not to exceed $25,000 going on for three years to a total of $455,000.

These ministers in this act are saying they now have this really tough act—they're going to cut back on their own ministers; they're going to cut down the opposition. But they don't have one word about the hundreds of millions they tender out to consultants. That is what is missing in this, because that's a lot more damning than what is happening in the other. It's damning to see what is being spent on restaurants and trips, what is being written off supposedly as government expenses, dinners and booze all over the country, all over the world. They say, "We're going to check that," but I don't believe them. If they're not including any checks on how they pay consultants, I don't think they're going to be watching their own people. They'll keep an eye on the opposition, because we raised this in the House, and they're trying to say, "We're going to watch you now too." Let's see them make these contracts public.

The most galling thing of all—here's a $1.7-million contract issued by one ministry without any competition. SuperBuild, the ministry in charge of building: a $681,000 adding mistake. Over and over again, we've got blatant examples of a government that is totally out of control.

We see, day in, day out, that there's essentially one rule for everybody else in this province, who have to tighten their belts and watch their expenses. If you're marginalized or poor or sick, they come after you and make sure you pay up. But if it's consultants' contracts or expenditures of ministers, there is no tightening of the belt; there are just gross expenditures daily. To spend $676 million, you have to have a whole sophisticated system of this kind of spending.

It's every ministry that's doing it and getting away with it, basically without any rules. The Provincial Auditor said this is just the tip of the iceberg. We challenge every ministry—

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): Why did you say "every ministry" if he didn't look at every ministry?

Mr Colle: If he looked at every ministry, we would find hundreds of millions more dollars. If the Provincial Auditor had the time to look at every ministry, we'd probably find twice as much. But the other contracts will never see the light of day either. So you can imagine if you're in a small municipality or a small company—this is the public's company, and we can't even see these contracts that were signed. Who signed the contracts, for how much, to whom did they go and what work did they do? The astonishing thing would be to see how much value we got for $676 million. And if you try to get the information, you have to pay for it. Over and over again, we've got expenses by ministers and parliamentary assistants. It was like a free-for-all, like a drunken bunch of sailors who had the ability to tap into the government treasury.

This is a province that's been saying to people, "We have to be frugal. We have to tighten our belts. We don't have money for schools. We don't have money to provide for the elderly in their nursing homes." Only one bath a week in nursing homes, yet they find hundreds of millions, probably millions every day, for contracts and expenditures by ministers. And look at the expenditures. We've seen it over and over again. If you look through what has been spent by ministers and parliamentary assistants, it is just beyond the pale and it goes on over and over again. Bar tabs; hotels, 16 times; the Royal York; Ruth's Chris Steakhouse; putting money on the tabs of the bureaucrats; trips to Japan, Arizona, Chicago by Premier Eves; Paris, France. There's no limit if you go over it. Then you go over what the parliamentary assistants and the ministers have spent: $130,000, Minister Wilson; $50,000, Rob Sampson; $41,000, and on and on and on, all on the taxpayers' tab. Smarties, cocktails—there's no limit to it, whether it's hundreds of millions of dollars for consultants or even putting Smarties on a tab. That's incredible.

Here's a politician who went on a trip, and even the fee for his passport—the Minister of Labour, who is here, put 60 bucks for his Canadian passport in anticipation of a business trip to Rome and Siena for a mental health conference. So he put $60 for a passport on his tab, a personal tab for a passport.

The Minister of Northern Development purchased, at the taxpayers' expense, the book Podium Humour, $19; he put it on the taxpayers' tab. He purchased A Dictionary of Important Theories, $24, on the taxpayers' tab.

There was another minister and a senior aide last July who went on a trip to Zurich, Munich, Newcastle and London, England. They billed their flights for $11,000. There's no limit to the expenditures.

Now they say, "We're going to tighten up." The only reason they're going to tighten up or try to tighten up or pretend to tighten up is because they got caught, and they got caught because the opposition did their digging. They tried to shut up the opposition; they tried to make sure the opposition didn't get this information out. The Provincial Auditor has said that these guys not only spend on their personal accounts, but as ministers they're spending hundreds of millions of dollars a year giving to their friends without tender these fat consulting contracts that they refuse to make public. I again challenge this government to table every one of those contracts with consultants. Let's see what you spent that $676 million on. I would like that to be made public as soon as possible.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 216, the Accountability for Expenses Act, 2002. Let me begin by saying that the official opposition welcomes greater transparency and accountability in expenses filed using taxpayers' dollars.

The member for Brampton Centre, Mr Spina, was just heckling my colleague Mr Colle, and I would remind Mr Spina that he spent $86,782 as a parliamentary assistant, not even as a minister. The Chair of Management Board was yelling at us, "Release your expenses." We do that every year, and it's detailed line for line. There are reporting accounts out of here every year and I'm quite happy to do that. I say to the Chair of Management Board, I in fact spent every penny of that budget on my constituency office, on providing services for my constituents and doing the routine business of a member of provincial Parliament.

This bill does in fact provide greater accountability but it is flawed in a couple of areas, and I'd like to use some of my time to address that. Certainly, as we reflect on this bill, the expense abuses of Mr Jackson and others show how out of touch the Eves government is with the people of this province. We want to make sure that this bill actually does what the government says it's going to do, because they're great at promoting a bill saying it'll do something when in fact it doesn't do that. Certainly in a couple of areas it falls short, and I'd like to review those for a minute.

Former ministers, those who are no longer in cabinet, and former parliamentary assistants from June 26, 1995, to present day, are exempt from releasing this. Who are those people? Well, the biggest name is Mike Harris. Who was Mike Harris? This government likes to pretend that he was never here. They like to talk about a different way of doing government than they were doing, but the fact is they exempt that. The truth is, they're not fully FOIable and, for those listening, that's a freedom of information request. That process, as we have seen, is subject to flaw, it is subject to misinterpretation and it's subject to false information. For instance, last week—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): Order. I can't hear the speaker. All right. It's Monday. Everybody is looking toward the end of the week, but I'm going to ask you to just kind of tone things down a little bit, please. Give the member the respect that he's entitled to. Sorry for the interruption.

Mr Duncan: Last week, the Chair of Management Board, in responding to a question that I had placed with respect to expenses, answered by citing expenses from the Ministry of Labour in 1988 and 1989 and saying that I was employed there at the time, when in fact I wasn't. That is just one example of how those freedom of information requests can be exploited, blacked out and so on. So we have the bizarre situation that the expenses of a former Premier and former leader of the NDP, Mr Rae, must be tabled, but those of the former Premier who was a Conservative Premier, Mr Harris, do not have to be, fully for seven years.

Oh, another time allocation motion was just tabled on this bill, and let's see what this says. Are we going to have third reading debate? No, I don't think so. No further debate at such time. No third reading debate, no committee hearing. Interesting: this is the only government we can find in the history of this great province that's had to do time allocation on bills that all three parties support, and that's in the face of a relatively light legislative agenda. We've had a number of bills of course where they've had to, for instance, repeal their entire energy policy. We had the spectacle of this government repealing a major section of a budget bill—the pension. That's when they wanted to allow employers to grab surplus pensions. After prodding from the opposition, they finally withdrew the offensive part of the bill, a major part of the bill, a budget bill, which shows that this government in my view doesn't even have confidence in its own ability to govern. That's one of the many reasons why none of us should have confidence in this government's ability to govern, and that's why we are looking forward to the election that we are told the government is going to call probably toward the end of March. We look forward to debating these and other issues. We will be debating ethics in government as an important component of what it should be.

I was astounded in the course of my research over the last week when I discovered that a consulting firm that's being paid by the government to consult can be employed by private sector interests to lobby the same ministry that they're employed by. I say to the Chair of Management Board, in the interest of transparency and the interest of accountability, do what I asked you to do today and table those contracts so we can have a very close look at what they were saying and doing with the ministry versus what they were saying and doing with the private sector interests, who clearly wanted to—

Mr Duncan: Yes, here's a very good bill, Mr Bartolucci's Bill 2, An Act respecting Accountability for Ministerial Travel. I heard Mr Clark, the Minister of Labour, indicate that he was in Rome earlier and he expensed his passport. I and a number of us travelled, I should say—this is a matter of public record—with the Legislative Assembly committee this past spring. We were in Great Britain. We were in Scotland. We were in Wales. Do you know what? I had to renew my passport, and I paid for my own passport renewal. I wouldn't have billed that to the taxpayers. Hopefully, the Integrity Commissioner will see fit not to allow that kind of silly thing to happen again. Passports are good for five years. If he did it this year and he's thrown out of office next year, which this government likely will be, he should at least reimburse the four fifths of the passport cost that he has charged off. It's a five-year passport so, in any event, he should do that.

We do know why the government exempted the parliamentary assistants who are no longer PAs: otherwise, they couldn't have got this bill through their own caucus. I can't imagine that a number of these people want to have their expenses released or least held accountable, the way Dalton McGuinty's are going to be. We welcome that, and I should say that very clearly. I know the third party welcomes that for its leader. We think that's a good process, and we think the idea of the Integrity Commissioner—although I must say we do need to talk about the Integrity Commissioner, his role in this Legislature and how that's going to work.

The government House leader has indicated a willingness to consider an amendment. There's one clause that allows the Integrity Commissioner to consult the government, the executive-in-council, but it doesn't allow the same consultation to happen with the opposition parties. Given that he is an officer of this assembly, we believe that he should be compelled to consult all three or any recognized political party, depending on how many there are in this House in future Parliaments.

There could be two parties. There may be a new mayor of Hamilton by this time next year. Any number of things could happen to change the political dynamic around here. I certainly know whom I'd like to see as mayor of Hamilton. Unfortunately, I am not a citizen of Hamilton and wouldn't dream of suggesting that—

Interjection.

Mr Duncan: No, but I am on the secret list of property taxpayers in Windsor. I'm on that secret list, but I'm not on the secret list in Hamilton.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): The preferred list.

Mr Duncan: The preferred list, yes, indeed. I wouldn't want to interject and suggest that any colleague in this House is particularly well suited for that job, but there's certainly one in this House who I think is. I, of course, would wish that colleague well—

Mr Bartolucci: I think he'll be good.

Mr Duncan: I think he'd be a very good mayor as well. Hamilton is a great city, I might add. Hamilton is very much like my hometown of Windsor. We have a working-class city, a large union component in our city which we're very proud of.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): They've got a football team.

Mr Duncan: Yes, and we do too. Ours plays on the other side of the border but we've actually had professional football longer than most parts of this country. My home, I should tell you—my home that's on the secret list; it's no longer a secret list—is actually closer to Ford Field than I would imagine the member for Hamilton West's home is to Ivor Wynne. We do enjoy the benefits of living next to a large urban centre and all that goes with that.

I can't imagine in the state of Michigan a scenario like we have here in Ontario. I can't imagine a government of the state of Michigan repealing its electricity policy after it had been warned for four years that it wasn't going to work. I can't imagine that. The state of Michigan just elected a new Democratic governor, a Canadian-born woman who is a remarkably talented person, and they rejected the right-wing policies, the type we've seen coming from this government for the last seven years. I would suggest the people of Ontario will do the very same thing.

Again, I anticipate, and all my friends on the government side are telling me, that the election is going to happen at the end of March of next year. They're saying that. They're saying, "Get ready. Get your signs printed. We're going to come to an election." It will probably be called right before April 1. I would recommend and suggest the date might be April 24. The government backbenchers are saying that, so we fully anticipate that.

This bill is an important step forward and we welcome it. We look forward to amendments that will provide for the coverage of Mr Harris, the former parliamentary assistants and the now former cabinet ministers. There could be obvious exemptions, I suppose, in certain circumstances. For instance, Mr Spina won't have to release or justify a single penny of the $86,782 in expenses that he racked up between 1995 and 2002. My colleagues opposite are saying, "Dalton McGuinty should release his expenses." Well, we did. They were $32,956. Let me tell you, that compares to Mr Spina's $86,782. Mr Spina was the ninth-highest spender. He was exceeded only by cabinet ministers. That's correct: only by cabinet ministers. Even my leader was 30th on the overall list. So we'll release those detailed expenses. I should tell Mr Spina that Mr Stockwell has agreed to an amendment that would cover his expenses. We look forward to that amendment being brought forward in committee of the whole House, now that we're time-allocating this whole thing here.

We have to consider these expenses at this point. This is the last week that the House will be sitting. We are down to approximately seven or eight two-session days, perhaps a couple of midnight sittings which don't constitute sessional days. It's appropriate that in fact tonight we are addressing a bill that has been designed to somehow get the government out of a pickle. Mr Jackson had to resign earlier this fall as a result of his expenses. This bill is in direct response to that. Earlier today, third and final reading to Bill 210, the hydro bill, the bill that undid everything the Tory government has done over the last four years—a flip-flop of monumental proportions, one that's unparalleled, I think, in this. I've tried to reflect on similar situations. Yes, the NDP had their social contract, which represented a rather strange twist for that party. But this, this policy, in the face of very compelling criticism, right from the beginning—the government never did proceed with the Honourable Mr MacDonald's recommendations, someone for whom I have the highest regard. They never proceeded with that. They didn't listen. They bullied. They pushed things through as they've done on so many occasions.

What we've seen in this session: in addition to that, we've seen Bill 198, the government's budget bill, which had final passage today. That was a very interesting case. Part XXV of that bill, roughly I think 18 or 19 sections of the bill, gave employers the ability to reach into pension plan surpluses and take the surplus out. The government denied that was the case for a number of weeks, and under persistent questioning here in the House by my colleagues Mr Smitherman and the leader of my party, Mr McGuinty, with respect to that issue, the Minister of Finance, Mrs Ecker, just said, "No, you're wrong." Then she said, "No, you're wrong, but we're not going to proclaim the sections of the bill."

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We're debating Bill 216, not Bill 198. I'd ask that you remind the member of that, please.

The Acting Speaker: Sure, I'll remind the member. You are now reminded. Please continue. Thank you.

Mr Duncan: The bills are related. This bill, Bill 216, represents for the government an attempt to clean up, wash up, fix up a problem that they have—that they have—that was hidden from the public until we released it. In that sense, Bill 198 is another bill at the end of the session where the government had to clean up its own mess. The point I'm making, and the members opposite obviously don't want to talk about it, is that they had to repeal an entire section of their budget bill. That's unprecedented. Imagine that. Imagine the confidence convention of this place and other parliamentary institutions and the implication of that. This was after repeated questioning, after repeated opportunities offered by the opposition to do precisely what the government said it should do.

So this government is limping to the finish line on December 12, limping with a bill that reminds us of what happened earlier this year in terms of cabinet ministers' expenditures, and we finally will be trying to bring some semblance of order, accountability and transparency to a process, and all they're able to do is point fingers and say, "We want to see your expenses." Well, we want you to see them too, because we don't have anything to hide, and we want to see Mr Spina's expenses, we want to see Mr Mazzilli's expenses and we want to see Mr Harris's expenses for the last seven years, the same way we are being compelled to provide the expenses of our leader, which we are more than happy to do. We've already released the global figure for Mr McGuinty. We will comply by January 31 with the tenets of this particular piece of legislation.

Yet again we are faced, even as I am debating this bill, with a time allocation motion on this bill. I just want to again explain to those listening what time allocation is. That's cutting off debate, shutting down the opportunity for members to speak. There are about a dozen members in the Liberal caucus, I suspect, who wanted to speak to this bill who will not have the opportunity now. That opportunity is gone because of this time allocation, this guillotine bill, this attempt to stifle debate, to limit the ability of members to participate in the discussion. What's particularly sad about it is that over the course of events—on the budget bill, they had to go to committee of the whole and then waive their own time allocation motion, because they had shut down debate on that and they wouldn't allow third reading debate.

Looking over the order paper for the last several months, we've had no third reading debate on most major pieces of legislation. Well, why have a third reading process if that's what you're going to do? What's particularly ironic about this is that again we have a bill which all three parties—perhaps I shouldn't speak for the third party; I believe we're all going to support the bill—can support, and they're time-allocating it; they're cutting off debate. That's because they don't want to be here a minute past the earliest hour on December 12, because that means they will have to answer more questions during question period and participate in the broader public debate.

So my colleague, and friend I might add, the government House leader, has the distinction of having introduced a number of time allocation motions this session on bills which all three parties support—absolutely unprecedented in this House or most other places. It would be funny if it weren't so serious. It would be funny if we weren't taking away the ability of members to speak on a bill, because that's what it does. People are elected and are sent here to represent people, and they don't have the opportunity to fully participate.

So transparency and accountability are themes in this bill. Those are the government's themes in this bill. I would challenge Mr Spina to release his expenses for those seven years, detailed invoices, and we'd be happy to explore that more. As I say, I've had indications from the government that in fact they're prepared to entertain a motion to that effect. Even if it's not, I would imagine a member would want to do that just to save us doing it by FOI—

Mr Spina: It's done.

Mr Duncan: I'd ask him to bring them forward if it's done, because we have not seen them yet.

So accountability and transparency are in fact major themes and ethics are a major issue in elections. Ethics are a major consideration that voters have when they go to the polls. I would submit that this government's ethical record is highly, highly questionable.

My leader, Dalton McGuinty, will bring a new level of ethics and competency to government that has been fully lacking for the last seven years. When we table his full, detailed expenses on January 31, I fully expect to see Mr Harris's expenses for the last seven years tabled. That would be really nice to see; to see those released as they're compelling others: Mr Hampton, Mr McGuinty, Mr Rae—poor Bob Rae. He's not even here any more, and they want to kick him around a bit more, which is fine. I'm sure he'll comply. He has nothing to hide. I wonder why they didn't include Mike Harris's expenses here. I wonder why the Chair of Management Board didn't include former parliamentary assistants.

As I said, the government House leader has indicated a willingness to entertain an amendment. We will certainly put that amendment if given the opportunity. We'll seek to go into committee of the whole House, because right now we've just been given a time allocation motion, which means there will be no more debate at third reading, there will be no committee hearing on this bill. The cover-up continues on the Harris expenditures and others, which, even though they're FOIable, are certainly not easy to get at and are subject to, in my view, in my estimation, manipulation of the worst order, the kind of manipulation the Chair of Management Board said last week, when he said expenses incurred by the Ministry of Labour I was part of—

Mr Duncan: In fact, I wasn't here then. In 1988, 1989, no; I was gone long from here. It's unfortunate that those things are subject to that sort of manipulation—interpretation, if you will.

But back to the themes of transparency and accountability. Another part of that theme this week was the auditor's report, which again deals with transparency and accountability. In addition to the scandal surrounding ministerial expenses, in addition to the flip-flop on energy policy, in addition to taking the pension section of their own budget bill out, in addition to jamming more legislation through this House with no third reading debate, no committee hearings, we now find out that the Provincial Auditor says the Harris-Eves government is wasting hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars: $662 million on consultants last year, an increase from almost $400 million in 1998. The government refuses to table the contracts. We've asked for those contracts. They won't table them.

Another set of contracts we've asked for—let's talk about transparency and accountability—is MFP. There's something going on here in Toronto right now, an inquiry into leases regarding computer equipment, police radios and so on. The government of Ontario has contracts for the very same thing with MFP, across ministries I believe. I don't have my notes in front of me, but the Sol Gen was the largest ministry having dealings with MFP. I've asked repeatedly for the government to release those contracts. We tried to get them under FOI and were denied. Why? Because of a third-party intervention. Well, I'd speculate that third-party intervention comes from somebody directly associated with the contracts, though we can't find that out. So again I say, if it's transparency and accountability you're interested in, table the MFP contracts as well.

We have a government in the last, waning months of its mandate, a government that has lurched from crisis to crisis this fall. I can't think of one achievement the government has had, one item that the government could point to and say, "That's a victory," or "That's a win for us." We have seen a government brought down, and I say that the people of Ontario will remember all aspects of the record and the government's legitimate role in successes and failures in the past and will cast—I hope we get the chance to go to the polls. I know government members are saying it's going to be March. I hope we get to go to an election to determine these things. The government is doing everything it can to clear off every piece, every item on the order paper right now. I believe it's time to give the people a say, because we've all put our cases and we're getting to the point where we're repeating things. The last four months have probably been one of the most mismanaged sessions I've ever seen here, both as a member and watching from outside.

So it is time for an election. It is time for a new vision. It is time for new ideals and for new values. Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals represent the real and meaningful change there. We have laid out policies now with respect to education. We have detailed policies with respect to our communities. We have released policies with respect to a democratic charter that would see the kinds of abuses that we've seen in this House—things like this time allocation motion, which will prohibit third reading debate, will prohibit committee hearings on important legislation—restricted greatly from where they are right now.

I'm always reminded that previous governments, whether the NDP government of Mr Rae or the Liberal government of David Peterson or indeed the Conservative government of the great Premier William Davis, rarely, if ever, used time allocation—rarely, if ever.

Mr Bartolucci: Peterson used it twice.

Mr Duncan: Peterson used it twice. I believe Mr Rae was in the magnitude of 10 or 11 times. Mr Davis, with his mandates, both minority and majority mandates, rarely used the tool either.

You know, people often talk about the decorum in this place and why members do things that appear to be childish. Well, that's because we haven't got the ability to debate things properly. The whip for my party, Mr Bartolucci, who has a number of outstanding private member's bills on the order paper, has told me that about a dozen of our members would have liked the opportunity to discuss this bill. They won't get that opportunity.

It's a bill that, remarkably and regrettably, I suspect—and again, I shouldn't speak for the third party—has the support of all three parties. There have certainly been a number of instances earlier in the session when bills of that nature have had all-party support but have been time-allocated. As I say, I've never seen anything quite like it.

We are confronted by a government that is using the last few days of its legislative time to clean up a mess that it created, just as we spent the last three months. That's why Bill 216 is so similar to the hydro bill and the budget bill. It's a theme. It's about a government that doesn't lead. It's about a government that's bereft of ideas. It's also about an opposition with new ideas, new leadership and a willingness to take over. It's about Dalton McGuinty being the next Premier of this province and providing the kind of leadership that has been sadly lacking on the other side of the House.

It's about new priorities for Ontario. It's about putting the interests of working families ahead of special interests, like Enterprise Canada. Isn't it amazing: we discover this week that a consultant who is being paid as a consultant by the government can in fact be paid by private sector interests to lobby the government via the same ministry. And again, they refuse to release the contracts. They refuse to talk about that. It's about a government that has the stench of rot to the core.

It's time for a change, and that change will be led by Dalton McGuinty, with progressive new policies as outlined. For instance, in education we will cap the primary grades to 20 students. We will put 1,000 new police officers on the streets in this province. We will hire more crown attorneys. We will put a greenbelt around Toronto to truly protect the moraine and give the people of the greater Toronto area, which is such a magnificent part of this economy and this province, the sense, the belief, that their water system will be protected.

Isn't it ironic that this week we will pass the clean water legislation, which came about because seven people died in Walkerton and hundreds were left ill? Again, the chief medical officer of health said to this government that when he attempted to bring the issue to the Premier's attention—

Mr Spina: He wasn't doing his job.

Mr Duncan: —the Premier turned his head away. Well, the people of Ontario won't forget that, any more than they'll forget Mr Spina's expenses, any more than they'll forget the flip-flop on pensions in the budget, any more than they'll forget the energy fiasco this government manufactured and now is attempting to dig itself out of. The people of Ontario won't forget that.

But most importantly, the people of Ontario will look for new leadership from a man like Dalton McGuinty, who won't need legislation like this for his ministers any more because it would have been in place already—the type of leadership that will restore to government the ethics and confidence which have been sorely lacking in this province for seven long and painful years.

The Acting Speaker: It is now time for questions and comments. Members have up to two minutes each.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I listened to the two previous speakers on this issue, and although they did from time to time stray just a little from the topic, there was a kernel of truth in what they had to say. I think what was most important in both their speeches is that they touched on the fact that by December 31, 2002, the Integrity Commissioner will have access to all expenses dating back to June 26, 1995, for the following people: any minister or parliamentary assistant or member of their staff, as of November 28, 2002, and every person who held office as opposition leader and their staff since June 26, 1995.

Quite clearly and carefully, what they said about the former Premier, Mike Harris, is true: he is not included. He should be included. I think the people of this province will be demanding to know how he spent his money while in office. It is only fair that if the opposition leaders—Lyn McLeod and Dalton McGuinty from the Liberals and Bob Rae and Howard Hampton from the NDP—are going to have their expenses under the freedom of information act, it is absolutely and abundantly clear that Mike Harris should have his expenses under that same act as well. To leave that out, I would suggest, taints the entire process. One has a choice. One has a choice to leave them all out or to include them all. But one cannot choose that that one person of such tremendous influence in this province be literally left out, a person who was in charge for seven long years, a person who was in charge during very difficult times for a lot of people and organizations. Clearly he should be the subject of the same guidelines and the same rules as everyone else. I would suggest the government should include that amendment to make this act even better than perhaps it already is.

Mr Spina: For this member to accuse the civil servants of collusion is tantamount to accusing them of breaking the law, because, sir, they are not permitted to do so, and I remind you of that.

Secondly, with respect to my expenses, I make no apology. All my expenses have been FOIed, released and published. In fact, I would like to remind the member that the list that you sent to the newspaper in Brampton, the list that you sent, was clearly detailed. I make no apologies for doing the work of government.

I was given specific responsibilities by the ministers of the day. I travelled from Mattawa to Kenora in northern development, in tourism, and as the PA for small business. I have done it all in six different ministries. I do not accept any criticism for doing a responsible job, particularly for the people of northern Ontario, who had no voice in the government other than the Premier of the day himself. My expenses are clean, sir; in fact, if you want to know how much I had to pay back, here's your 35 bucks, because that's the limit of what you are going to find in my expenses. Tell your researchers to get off their backsides and dig through it, because that's exactly what they will find.

I know what I have claimed. I know what I'm entitled to. I know the good job that I do for the government of Ontario and for the people of this province.

I want to remind the member about the comment made by the newspaper in December 1989 about the Liberals: "This was the crew who promised to be different and blow away wasteful Tory traditions, to spend each buck as if it was theirs." That was a comment made about the Liberal government in 1989. Go blow that stuff somewhere else.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I've let a little latitude, and now I regret it, as usual. So I'm going to ask everybody to give the respect that every member standing is entitled to.

The member for Sudbury.

Mr Bartolucci: Certainly, Speaker, I'll try to bring it back to order and indicate that the member from Windsor-St Clair, the Liberal House leader, Dwight Duncan, has made a compelling case why the people of Ontario should elect a different government. I believe his case has been added to by the member from Brampton Centre, Mr Spina. I honestly believe that the House leader for the Liberal Party has outlined in a very fair, open way why the people of Ontario should be very, very concerned with the way the Harris-Eves government handles money, especially people's money when we deal with their expenses.

Do you know what I'm really, really concerned about with Bill 216? It's that when they had the chance on April 23, 2001, when I introduced Bill 2, An Act respecting Accountability for Ministerial Travel, they didn't act as a government on this. You effectively spoke in support of it. You said how important it was to be accountable. You said how important it was for the people of Ontario to know how their money is being spent by their elected ministers. We had a second reading debate on April 26, and everybody in this House supported it. We on this side of the House wanted it to go to a committee so that we could have frank and open discussions so that we could improve upon this bill, my Bill 2. You chose instead to bury that at committee of the whole.

In other words, you really didn't want accountability. Then you were caught with several hands in the cookie jars and all of a sudden we're concerned about accountability. My bill is a reasoned amendment that I would hope we will be putting forth very shortly.

The Acting Speaker: Before I go any further, the member who is about to stand up, the member for Timmins-James Bay: I think he just had a cellphone in his hand and actually made a call. If that's what happened, I'm going to give you a chance to deny it, because you're at the other end of the House. But, boy, that better not have happened and I'd better not see that thing come out again. If it does, you're going out of here with it.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): No, actually it's a Palm Pilot. I was doing something on my Palm Pilot. Sorry about that. I'll be more discreet about the use of my Palm Pilot.

You took me a little bit off-kilter here, because I wanted to say—anyway, let me get back to the point of the debate here. I quite frankly find this whole debate a little bit troubling, because what we're doing in this Legislature by way of this debate, I think, is demeaning all of us. We're all sitting here pointing our fingers across the aisle and saying, "We're more pure than you, and we're better, and we've never done anything wrong, and it's only them; oh, not us."

I think we all look the same when we get into these debates, and I quite frankly regret that we're having this debate in the way that we're doing. If we want to talk about a system of accountability, fine; nobody's going to argue on either side of the House that we don't have to be as accountable as humanly possible and as transparent as possible when it comes to being able to make sure we're judicious with the taxpayers' dollars. That's not the argument.

I think that when we get into this whole debate that "I'm better than you; I spent less than you; you spent more than me"—the reality is that different members have different needs. I live in northern Ontario. My expenses, like Mr Bartolucci's, like Ms Martel's and a whole bunch of others, are higher than anybody else's by nature of where we live.

I listened to the member who was the former parliamentary assistant to northern development and mines. I accept that he's going to spend far more money as a parliamentary assistant in that ministry than he would in a ministry that doesn't travel as much.

If we want to get into a debate about how we make the system more transparent, I am more than prepared to get into that debate and I think it's great. But to get into a debate where we say that we, as public servants—because that's what we are as elected officials—shouldn't be able to expense anything when it comes to our travel, I think is a bit beyond the pale.

The reality is that you eat when you're on the road, you need a hotel room, you've got to pay mileage, you've got to pay airplane fare or whatever it might be, and to somehow suggest that doing those expenditures is wrong I think demeans all of us. I really regret that we're having that kind of debate.

The Acting Speaker: Now one of the original speakers has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr Duncan: I'm pleased to have the chance to respond. Accountability and transparency are important and they've lacked. They have lacked in the area of ministerial expense and accountability. There's no question. If this situation hadn't been provoked, this debate wouldn't have to be happening. It's here now, it's before us, and I would submit that the bill does not suggest, and no one is arguing for a moment, that we shouldn't be spending money. This bill doesn't do that. It simply provides for proper accountability and mechanisms.

I understand what the government said, that the Chair of Management Board has said that there have been fuzzy, unclear guidelines for many years. We welcome this. We welcome the opportunity to compare, because I think that is a legitimate issue. I think it is legitimate because we are challenged to manage the taxpayers' money properly.

I would remind you, I would remind all members, that this is the government that on the one hand has preached restraint. It has preached restraint on school boards. We have supervisors in the three largest school boards of the province. This is a government that has talked a game about welfare recipients, cut their benefits 22%, set up snitch lines to call. This is about double standards. I would suggest to all members that the parliamentary assistant to a minister ought not be spending more than the minister, or several ministers.

Interjection.

Mr Duncan: Yes, it is subject, but unfortunately the bill exempts that parliamentary assistant and it exempts the former Premier. It's a double standard. I do agree with the member for Timmins-James Bay that it's a bit of a gotcha, and that's unfortunate. It's unfortunate that this debate has to happen at all. We should be debating the real issues, but they've time-allocated all of them, so we can't.

We'll support this bill. It's an important step forward. But this is a government that is clearly out of control.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is now open for further debate and to recognize the member for Beaches-East York for what I believe is the leadoff speech of the third party.

Mr Prue: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I rise to speak to this bill, and I should advise that I will be sharing some of my time with other members of the caucus.

This is an important bill. I'm glad that the debate in the last couple of minutes has started to tone down just a little, because all of us in this Legislature will be either supported or demeaned by what is said here today. It is very easy for people out there who aren't in government, who don't like government or who make their living by selling newspapers or through the media to question government expense and people, as I suppose they have the right to do and as many times they should. But government is a business, just like if you were running IBM or any large corporation in this country. It requires one to have expenses, it requires from time to time that one travels and it requires that one represents the business, and in this case the people of Ontario. However, it is important that we lay down very clear guidelines, which in my belief did not exist before this bill, so that everyone understands what those guidelines are and so that the general public and the media can understand as well what they are and what they can come to expect from their politicians, the people in this Legislature and those who work for them.

I stood earlier to comment on a previous speaker and talked about the one glaring aspect of this bill that needs to be remedied. I stand to talk about it again as my first item. What has not been remedied and what is glaring and obvious to anyone who reads this bill is that it exempts the former Premier of this province, Mr Mike Harris, who was Premier from 1995 until just earlier this year. He is not the subject of freedom-of-information requests. Others are, others who are no longer in government, like former Premier Bob Rae, who is subject to this. Others who are leaving government, like the member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, Lynn McLeod, when she was the leader of the Liberal Party, are not exempted from this bill, nor are current leaders Howard Hampton and Dalton McGuinty exempted from this bill. It would seem very clear to me that a person who exercises so much power, a person who had believers on so many operations in this government, should have his expenses audited like everyone else. To leave them out is to do a disservice to this Legislature. To leave them out is to make the entire bill far less meaningful than it can and should be.

All members of this House should be mindful of how they are spending taxpayers' money, but especially mindful should be those who are in charge, and ultimately the person who was in charge for all of the period under question, going back to 1995, save and except for the last several months, Premier and former Premier Mike Harris. He was a man, and I agree with what the previous speaker had to say, who presided over a lot of pain in this province—a lot of pain to amalgamated cities and the people who fought them; a lot of pain to the cities and towns that were downloaded with services that they're having difficulty in paying for to this day; a lot of pain to the children in our education system and to the parents who worry that the schooling they're getting today is not as good as the schooling they once got; a lot of pain to those on welfare who had their monies cut by 22% and who continue to exist far, far below the poverty level, almost always in hunger and in want; and to our disabled, who have not had an increase in some eight years, and all the cancelled social housing that was done in 1995, so that people do not have decent and clean places in which to live.

That is the person who was there. Those people need to know that during all that pain they existed through, that they were forced to endure, someone was not living high in the lap of luxury.

I believe with all my heart that former Premier Mike Harris should put his expenses forward and the people who are under that pain should know whether or not he suffered the same consequences, whether he underwent the same problems they did. Obviously he would not have, because his salary alone would have protected him, but they need to know that he wasn't living high on the hog, with expensive golf club dates and foreign trips and everything else. That needs to come forward. I would suggest to the members opposite that if you put that into the bill, if you have the guts to put that into the bill, and you put everyone else through the same scrutiny, then you will get not only the support of this side of the House but also the support of Ontarians across this entire province.

This bill does some good things, and I believe that my caucus in all likelihood, depending on what happens to the bill, whether it goes to committee, whether there are amendments made to it—I hope there are. I hope the public is heard on the bill as well, although given the fact that almost everything is time allocated, I'm not going to hold my breath. It does some good things. It includes cabinet ministers. All of those who are in cabinet will now be subject to freedom of information, as will parliamentary assistants, as will opposition leaders and, I think most importantly, the staff who work for all of those people. It will be incumbent upon them to keep clear and meaningful records of where the money is spent so that there cannot be aspersions cast upon any members in this House, because when aspersions are cast on one of us, they are cast quite literally on all of us. When a cabinet minister is forced to resign over questionable spending, then it looks bad on all people in public life.

Last week I went to a small, little Christmas luncheon. A man of 90 years of age was present, or just about 90 years of age; quite a remarkable man. He lives in the Leaside area of East York. He told me that he was ashamed he had to tell me, but he felt he had to tell me, that in the last few weeks he has changed his mind, after 90-some years, on his respect for politicians. He changed his mind because of some of the things that were said in this Legislature. He changed his mind because of what was happening in Ottawa and the whole boondoggle around gun control and how much money was being spent, and I guess the fiasco of the federal government from time to time. He changed his mind because of the MFP inquiry in Toronto and the mayor who was called as a witness who did not assume any type of responsibility for the actions that were clearly under his administration.

He told me that for the first time in his life—and remember, he's 90 years old this spring—he was ashamed of our politicians. He wanted to know what I would do or what we could do to get the feeling that he used to have in his younger life of politicians whom he looked up to and whom he admired; politicians who did things for the province, for the city or for the federal government; politicians who worked in the name of the people; and politicians who are not, as he put it, on the take or seeing what they could get for themselves.

It struck home to me that he is not atypical. He is probably your average citizen who is worried about what is perceived to be a decline in standards. This bill hopefully will bring that back, not only for the members of this Legislature but for the people who work for each of us. We have that responsibility, whether they be our researchers or people who work personally for one of the leaders, to make sure that they are acting at all times in the best interests of the people of this province. I believe everyone should be under the scrutiny of freedom of information; every single politician, every single member of staff of a politician, and that most especially includes former Premier Mike Harris.

As a municipal politician for some 14 years before I came into this chamber, which I still continue to look around at in complete awe—you look and find little carvings on the wall you didn't notice the day before; it's really quite an august and wonderful place. As municipal politicians, we had constraints upon us as well. I would suggest that most of the municipal politicians in Ontario, in all our 400-plus cities and towns and regions, work extremely hard, and they have expenses as well. Perhaps we as provincial politicians should emulate some of them. Every year most municipalities require that the expenses of their locally elected people be put out for public scrutiny. Those bills are put out and you can look down the list. In Toronto, the Toronto Star, the Sun and the Globe and Mail publish yearly the list of politicians and how much money they spent.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: They're summaries, just summaries.

Mr Prue: They are summaries, I grant, but anyone can go beyond the summaries and look at what actually was spent.

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): No.

Mr Prue: Yes, they can. The summaries are out there, and you can see which politicians spend the most money, which politicians spend the least money and which politicians are in the centre.

There is another thing municipal politicians do that maybe this Legislature should look at from time to time; that is, in many jurisdictions, although not all of them, when a trip or a convention or something outside the region or municipality is undertaken, if there is not a budget in the politician's local global budget to attend, then the council itself must make a decision whether or not to send that politician or group of politicians. There is often a debate—

Interjection.

Mr Prue: I'm sorry. I didn't hear the muttering. Was it a good one or not?

Interjection: It was a good one.

Mr Prue: All right. I'm sure, but I wish he would mutter it a little louder so I could enjoy it too.

Interjection: You may not, Michael.

Mr Prue: All right. I'll mutter when you get up.

There is almost always a debate on how many politicians to send, whether it be the FCM conference or whether it be a conference of cities around the world. There is a debate about whether one is too many or two is not enough. We should perhaps be getting into these kinds of debates as well, because oftentimes it has been my experience that we should be attending conferences and conventions, we should be going to fly the Ontario flag, not only in this country but also potentially in other ones as well. But the money should be spent wisely. We should be there to give the Ontario perspective, but oftentimes we do not, I would suggest, have to have legions of people when one or two will do.

That brings me back, though, to where we should be going. We should clearly be on the side of expending money wisely and smartly, and we should not be there to over-expend it. It is important, however, that Ontario at all times be represented. It is equally important, perhaps even more important, that Ontarians feel that that representation is meaningful and that the money has been spent in such a way that it promotes our interests, either our interest in bringing new industry to Ontario or our interest in finding new technologies or new ways of providing government services or something that needs to be brought home. I would suggest that if that is done, the public angst about dinners at expensive steakhouses or bottles of wine that cost too much perhaps would be lessened.

This brings me to the next part: the allowable expenses of this bill. The allowable expenses list the word "prudent," that the expenses must be "prudent." I wonder sometimes what that means, and I've tried to figure it out.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: It means careful.

Mr Prue: It means careful.

Ms Mushinski: It means wise.

Mr Prue: It means wise too to you. OK. The word means a lot of things to many people, but that is the word that is used. Then one questions, as the rest of the bill unfolds, whether or not the expenses can be seen to be wise, whether they are standard business accounting expenses or whether they're not. I'd just like to go through some of those.

There is a "strict"—and I put that in quotes—ban on alcohol for an individual member to have a glass of wine or something with his or her dinner after a hard and gruelling day on the road. However, there is no such ban when it involves hospitality—hospitality with a whole list of persons which I'm going to go through. So if you are by yourself on a lonely highway after a hard and gruelling day of driving around, as Mr Spina suggests, in northern Ontario for eight or 10 hours, to go from one location to another, stop at a small restaurant and have a $10 meal and a beer, you can't have that beer. I understand why you can't have that beer, because the taxpayer obviously shouldn't pay for it. But on the contrary, if you are driving around in southern Ontario, eastern Ontario or northern Ontario again and you are subject to hospitality, where you go out with someone else, not only would the definition of the meal change, but so would the ability to have alcohol.

The list of people, and it's listed for government persons, has a whole bunch of other definitions. It includes "incurred for a work-related purpose." What is a work-related purpose? Is a work-related purpose the fact that you sit down with someone from another town and discuss government business? If so, how much government business needs to be discussed? It says that it needs to be a modest and prudent use of public funds.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: That should be self-evident.

Mr Prue: It should be self-evident?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: To most people.

Mr Prue: I'm questioning so it's part of the public record and so it is self-evident not only to myself but also to everyone in this room and hopefully to everyone watching television as well. It must be a modest, prudent use of public funds and it does not include alcohol.

But then there is a whole list of people that this goes on to talk about where it does not necessarily fit. I understand and empathize with whoever wrote the bill and whoever thought of bringing this forward why it doesn't necessarily fit. I would hope the members of the fourth and fifth estates and people watching this on television would understand that a government employee, whether it be a member of the Legislature, one of the staff or a civil senior servant, someone acting on behalf of the government, from time to time will have to do business in a way in which business is normally done not only in North America but throughout the world.

There is a whole list of people who can be feted beyond a simple meal. Those include other governments, so that if a member of this House were to entertain other governments, whether they be other provincial governments, municipal governments, I guess federal governments and even international governments, that type of feting would be allowable under this act. For dealing with members of the public sector, public interest groups, industry, labour, national and international organizations, charities and formal conferences, the member would be allowed to interface with them at something less than a prudent use of public funds.

The reason I'm raising this is not to criticize the bill but perhaps to help explain the bill, not to the members opposite but perhaps to those who are listening. It is necessary from time to time that groups interact with cabinet members and members of the Legislature and that quite normally and naturally this may include hospitality. As I said earlier, I came from the municipal sector and this was not at all uncommon. It was not and should not be uncommon for a mayor or a group of councillors to go and try to get a new factory to locate in their town or city. They may have to travel, and some do, a great deal of distance. I know the mayor of Toronto went to Los Angeles to try to convince the movie industry to come here to make more films. By all accounts, that travel and expenditure were probably wise. Even though what seemed to be a significant amount of money was spent, it did pay many times the return in the number of movie shoots that can be seen on the streets of Toronto. And with all the difficulties we have with those in terms of parking and traffic and noise, and perhaps the little bit of pollution that they engender, it is still a good thing for the economy of this city.

That is the type of example where money must be spent in order to make money. But I also have seen others where the travel was little more than a junket, when the person came back sometimes empty—and you don't win on every trip—because there really was no expectation of getting anything at all. Those are the types of things that we—

Interjection.

Mr Prue: Excuse me. I can't hear your muttering either. If you're going to heckle me, at least do it loudly enough to be heard.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): We're talking about municipal politicians' junkets.

Mr Prue: With the greatest of respect, there are some at the municipal level; there are some at the provincial and federal levels as well. What we need to do and what I'm trying to say is that we need to get away from those which clearly have no benefit and that are seen by the public and by the press, quite wisely, as simply wanting to go to a sunny or great location in order to see it. With the greatest of respect, I think we have to be better than that.

That brings me to the next point. I've only been here some 14 months, but I have seen—

Applause.

Mr Prue: Are you clapping because I've only been here 14 or because I've made so much impact in 14? I hope it's the latter.

Obviously, I cannot speak for all members of the Legislature, but I want to say that I have been very impressed how most if not all of the members of this Legislature have spent their money and what they have done in their travels. The work is gruelling, the work is extremely difficult and the province is very large. In order to see this province and do justice to the people of this province, it does require an enormous amount of travelling. That's one of the things I have discovered in my short 14 months. Trips even just to Windsor take five hours, and all of the little side trips to go to the towns I've gone through to talk about urban visions, or to eastern Ontario or to the north. This province is an enormous place and the travel within the province is really quite great. It takes a lot of stamina to be a politician and a lot of being away from your family for long periods of time.

One needs to recognize that in that travel there will be expenses. There will be expenses to represent Ontario. There will be conferences coming up during the spring, and there was even something in the print media today questioning whether Ontario should be represented at a conference in Australia. I would suggest that it is not untoward to send someone there, provided that something can be gained or learned and brought back to be of benefit to the people of this province. If we go there with no intention of doing that, then it is little more than a junket and of course we should not be party to that.

I've also been very impressed by the association of francophone assemblies and the number of times that travel is undertaken to monitor elections that Ontario is part of and the building of the worldwide Francophonie and what is involved there. It seems to me that that too is a legitimate use of government funds.

I went on to read the bill, and there were other things in there that were intriguing and that I agree with. One was that the consumption of and expenditure on alcohol should normally be less than the cost of the food. I would suggest that this is a prudent thing to say, because there is a whole range of alcohol that can be sold or imbibed at meetings which other governments, the public sector, interest groups, industry, labour, national and international organizations, charities and formal conferences might do, but it does not have to be expensive and certainly should not involve $1,500 and $200 bottles of wine. Clearly, if a glass of wine is in order, a glass of Ontario wine is in order, and really that is the limit to which we should go.

There is more here on the hotels. This is always a controversial item. I would suggest that I think there needs to be a little bit better balance than the writers of this legislation have put forward. What they said quite clearly is that there needs to be a balance of economy plus the status of the minister. They need to be balanced. I guess if you are a minister in the inner cabinet, you need to stay at a five-star hotel versus a four-star hotel if you're a parliamentary assistant, a three-star hotel perhaps if you're a committee Chair and a two-star hotel—I don't know—if you are a lowly backbencher. I'm not sure what that means. Perhaps that should be clarified because, with the greatest of respect, I think a clean hotel is what should be asked for; a clean hotel, and not necessarily a luxurious hotel.

Mr Bisson: I've seen some two-star hotels, and I'll tell you.

Mr Prue: I think that's what needs to be worked into this legislation. It is, of course, mandatory that someone has a place to sleep, as our homeless would tell you. It's important to have a roof over your head, but it should not be at five-star hotels when there are options. I would suggest that when most travel in this province and country, in almost every city and town there are options.

It goes on—and I think they should revisit this one, because I do have a little bit of a problem with this—include the expenses of spouses. When the spouse is required to be at an official function, those expenses are paid for; I guess if there is a gala and they say, "We'd like your wife or your husband to come with you to the gala so that you can walk in." With the greatest of respect, I know our spouses all put up with a great deal from all of us in this place, not being home sometimes for days and weeks on end, but to expenditure this for the purpose of attending gala dinners or to have a partner with you at those dinners seems to me to be an untoward expense for the taxpayers of the province.

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: That's the Monte Kwinter-David Peterson exception.

Mr Prue: I don't know the David Peterson exception. I'm only speaking for myself personally and perhaps—

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: Monte took his wife to Italy.

Mr Prue: I hope Hansard caught that, because all I caught was "a wife in Italy."

Mr Bisson: My wife won't go to Italy.

Mr Prue: Your wife won't go to Italy.

Mr Bisson: She won't go anywhere.

Mr Prue: My wife would go to Italy in a minute. If she's watching this, which I doubt, I have to tell you that whenever I have been required to travel in past jobs, her attendance with me was always at my expense. I believe that is the way it should be. It should be done exclusively and only that way. The members of this Legislature make enough money that we can afford to do that. Quite clearly, that is the rule that should be followed. If your spouse or family attends with you, it should not be done at the taxpayers' expense. I would hope the members opposite would rethink this one and perhaps exclude it when it comes time to do the final bill.

Last but not least, it does not include mini-bars, videos and that type of thing, which is perfectly logical.

I go back to where I began, and that is that Premier Harris should be included in this bill. The public has a right, especially those members of the public—which includes almost all of us in this province—who have had to make sacrifices over the seven years. We have had to make sacrifices, again, for purposes of amalgamation and downloading to municipalities; the sacrifices of the working poor, people who have not had an increase in the basic minimum wage, welfare recipients who have had their money slashed, people who live in abject and extreme poverty, people on ODSP who have not had a raise in eight years, and the list can go on and on. All of those people have an unqualified right to make sure that the man who was in charge of what went down there is himself squeaky clean, and he should be included. I would suggest that if you're going to exclude him, then you're going to have to exclude others as well, and all of us need to be there.

In the New Democratic Party, we believe that this is a good bill. The bill needs, though, to expand beyond just hospitality. It needs to expand beyond just where you eat or where you sleep or what you drink or how you travel. It needs to include other expenditures. We believe that it should open up and reveal expenditures of consultants who are brought in. I don't know about the other parties; I don't think we've done it, at least not in the last seven to 10 years, I hope never, but consultants who are brought in for image building, American consultants who come in and tell people—

Mr Bisson: It didn't work for Dalton, though.

Mr Prue: I don't know. I don't know who it has worked for and who it hasn't, but there are some swirling statements, undercurrents, that monies are being expended by this Legislature for that purpose. If that is correct, then it needs to be rooted out. We need to get to the bottom of that and we need to make sure that hard-earned taxpayers' money is not being expended on consultants, particularly those who come from south of our border, who come up here to refurbish and remake politicians in some style other than what they really are. If that is the case, I think the taxpayers truly would be indignant. I hope that this bill will go so far as to determine whether those types of expenditures are being made and that something is done to stop them.

I'm just about finished. I would like to close by commending the government for bringing forward this bill. It has of course come forward all too quickly, and I guess it's because of some of what was happening to them in the political process and in the media. But it is an honest attempt, I would suggest, to try to set the scales right and it is an honest attempt to make sure that all members of this Legislature are subject to freedom of information laws and that all members of this Legislature would know what is appropriate on which to expend taxpayers' money in a prudent way. If that is done and if that is the ultimate end to this bill, then I would commend it.

I would suggest to the members opposite, though, there are some improvements: number one, to include Mike Harris; number two, to take out the expenses for spouses who travel with members; and number three, that some kind of categorization of hotels to clearly indicate that which is acceptable versus that which is lavish might be in order. If those are done, then I would suggest that this bill will be supported by all parties in this Legislature.

I have spoken a little bit beyond my 30 minutes, and I am going to turn over the balance of my time to my colleague Tony Martin, whom I'm leaving with a little over 27 minutes.

The Acting Speaker: The floor goes to the member for Sault Ste Marie.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): If a page of somebody might bring me a glass of water, I'm probably going to need it before I'm finished.

I appreciate the opportunity to put a few thoughts on the record here this evening with regard to this bill. I'm not going to focus completely and totally in a disciplined way on the bill itself, because I think it speaks for itself. But I do want to put it in some context and help people understand how I see it playing out in this place and in the broader political world out there that I think we all have to be so very careful to protect and support and to grow in a way that is positive and constructive and in keeping with the thinking of those who so many years ago set in place the way we govern ourselves here in this province and indeed across the country.

We've seen in the last few years in Canada and in Ontario a very direct attack on the institution of government, a nibbling away at the corners, some very obvious throwing of grenades into the very heart and a diminishing of the role and the potential role of government in the ordering of the public business of the jurisdiction we call Ontario, and I think that's to our detriment. I don't think that serves any of us well, and in particular it doesn't serve our constituencies, the people who send us here.

This latest volley, this bill that's before us here this afternoon, is another piece in that agenda, in that campaign that is being driven primarily by a right-wing element in the province of Ontario, a right-wing element across this country that comes to us, I would say, most directly and primarily from the United States of America, where the Republicans have been able to very effectively bring forward a chilling and a challenge to democratic processes, to government institutions that have seen very many people, particularly our most vulnerable and at-risk people, not well served—particularly that group but I think we've all been not well served.

I think that we've shown over a number of years in Ontario and in Canada that when we work together collectively, when we focus on communal activity, a contribution to community by all people, and we order that, we organize that in a way where everybody gets a chance to participate, everybody gets a chance to bring their gifts, their talents, their training to the common effort, and at the end of the day, everybody gets to participate in the good that's created from that effort together, then we have a better community, we have a healthier community, we have a safer community, we have a community that works for all people and we have a community that I believe evolves, then, in an intelligent and compassionate fashion such that fewer and fewer people fall through the cracks, fewer and fewer people feel at risk when they walk down their streets at night, when they send their kids out to play or when they go on vacation and leave their homes relatively unprotected while they're away.

That's what worries me about what we're involved in here these days, it seems, and particularly this afternoon as we take a look at this bill, because this bill is a direct result of a challenge by the official opposition. It's their job, their responsibility to challenge government in any way they see necessary to make sure that it is living up to the rules and regulations that are in place and at play in this process that we all participated in.

The official opposition, through some diligence and, I would say, some effort in research, found some things that the government was doing that weren't quite by the rules that have been laid down. Of course the government across the way, who came here priding themselves on how they're going to be better than everybody else, how they are going to actually not only be better but they're going to change this place so that we're all better in the long run, are cut to the quick, so to speak, with this challenge, with this critique, with this exposing of behaviour and spending patterns that aren't reflective of what they speak, what they write, what they put in their documents that they present come election time that people then base their decision on when they vote. So they in turn decide, "OK, what's good for the goose is good for the gander." So they say, "Well, we're going to change the rules so that we can more effectively go after members of the opposition in terms of what they're doing by way of the expenditures they make as they do their work and try to be good politicians and participate in this place and across the province."

But you see, I think that at the end of the day they're not going to find much. I think they're going to go through the history, the records of some of the leaders of the official opposition. They'll probably go through some records of some of the folks who serve over here. They'll have a sharp pencil and they'll spend a lot of time, and they'll find there isn't much, there really isn't a whole lot there.

What they'll find in the end, and what we'll all find in the end, is that the rules as they exist, without the changes that are being proposed in this bill, actually cover all that. If you want information on somebody, if you want to find out what somebody is doing, on behalf of the Board of Internal Economy or the legislative precinct, as they go about their business trying to serve their constituents and meet with individuals to promote the activity of government and the furtherance of good government, to include people in the discussion we all have here so we're all smarter and more aware of how things affect or don't affect the everyday life of a particular individual, community or group of people, the rules that are already in place provide for that.

I know that from time to time I get a phone call or a little note from the folks over at the finance branch in the Whitney Block asking me to justify a particular request I've put in for a return on an expenditure. They say, "Tony, what was that about, and how does that work? Do you understand that that's not in keeping with the rules as laid down in the book we're all given when we come here?"

When I first arrived here in 1990—and I know that you, Mr Chair, probably went through the same exercise—we were talked to very clearly and very directly by people who had been here for a long time as to what we could and couldn't do. We were over in the Macdonald Block, I think, for quite some time, for a number of days, as we went through an in-service. People explained to us how this place worked, how you hired staff, what your staff could do, what they were responsible for, what you could do, what you could spend money on.

Most importantly, they talked to us about what you couldn't spend money on, because they wanted to make sure we didn't get caught doing some things, whether innocently—and I suggest that a lot of times people in this place, if they make a mistake, even in terms of spending some money in doing their jobs, in most instances it's innocent. It's not to try to take advantage or to unduly benefit oneself. But if you do that, there are rules and regulations that have been put in place, that have evolved over a number of years and that have been changed from time to time with all-party participation. What's different this time is that we have a whole new set of rules that aren't actually a collective effort to try to improve the circumstance within which we all work to bring greater accountability and clarity to what's going on, but it's a bit of tit-for-tat.

As I said a minute ago, the official opposition is doing their due diligence, as they are charged to do in that role as opposition, critiquing the government on its behaviour and habits and challenging them. Some of the government members are coming forward and apologizing, admitting to having made a mistake. I think that's fair. That's fine. That's all in keeping with the way you do that kind of thing. Then you get on with your business. At the end of the day, when all is said and done and all the exposure that happens here—when you go into public life, you have to expect that's going to happen. You're laid bare in front of your colleagues, the province and your constituents. They'll decide ultimately whether what you've done is bad enough or egregious enough that you don't deserve to be in public life any more. They'll make that decision, and always do.

It's interesting how they do that and how they come to their decisions about who is and who isn't deserving to serve in this place. I remember sitting here one night listening to Mr Conway, the member from Renfrew, talk about a gentleman who got caught doing something untoward in public life. The assembly that he was serving in deemed him not to be acceptable any more. They fired him, and their constituents sent him back.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke):
Billy Joe MacLean.

Mr Martin: Billy Joe MacLean. The next election the constituents decided differently. "The guy made a mistake," they said. He apologized for that mistake. It was an honest mistake, I suppose. I don't know Billy Joe MacLean and whether in fact it was an honest mistake or not, but he made a mistake and he went back to his constituents in the next election and said, "Hey, you elected me. You sent me to this assembly to serve and they decided that I couldn't serve any more on your behalf. I'm saying that they don't have the right to do that"—and then they'll send you back.

What I'm saying to the assembly here this evening and to you, Speaker, and to the folks out there is that we do have a process in place here of oversight, of people having to be ultimately accountable. It's the rules that we all watch for ourselves and for each other and that we from time to time, yes, here in this House, have a debate about in question period and at other times. We have staff over in the Whitney Block who oversee our expenditures. I know I send mine in every month and do my best job to make sure all the receipts are in place, all the kinds of receipts they want. I've gone through about three different variations of what receipts they will accept and won't accept. It changes with every three or four or six months as some new consultant comes in and says, "Well, maybe we should do it this way," or "Maybe that receipt doesn't quite do it; maybe we need some other kind"—always over there trying to find a way to make sure we are living within the rules and regulations that are set in place for us here, and they are.

There are rules and regulations in the standing orders that are very clear, very precise and very understandable in terms of what we can and cannot spend as individual members and as members of cabinet and as members with responsibility in leadership roles. We know. We know that, and we know that if we break those rules, we may get caught because there are people here who will take it upon themselves to research and find out what's going on and may in fact catch us and then we will be called to be accountable and explain what we've done. We have staff, as I've said, over in the Whitney Block who, because they know the rules even better than we do, because they've been here a lot longer than we have been and will be here a lot longer than we will be, will vet those documents, those expense claims that go in.

At the end of the day, ultimately, we will be judged by those folks who elect us out there in our constituencies when we go back. I suggest that we'll probably be heading there in another three or four months. My bet is, and if you like, I'm a gambling man—I'll put some money on us being into an election and finished by the end of April of next year. I'll say that. I think that's where we'll be, that all of us will be before our constituents before the end of April next year.

That's to some degree part of what this is about here this afternoon too, that we have an election coming up. We have a government that's obviously in trouble. They're behind in the polls. They're not very popular on a number of fronts, hydro being the most obvious, and our leader, Howard Hampton, has been absolutely unrelenting in his attack on the agenda of the government where hydro is concerned, and rightfully so. That's our job to do, just as it was the Liberals' responsibility, if they thought it was of interest and in the public interest to do some research and inquire as to the spending habits of some of the members and cabinet members across the way. That was their right to do. We will then answer that before the public come the election.

That's this little drama play that we're all part of here this afternoon, the discussion of this bill that was put, that was tabled, that will call on every Premier of the province, back to Leslie Frost, I suppose, to have his or her expenses exposed so that we can all have a good look at them and decide whether they're in order or out of order.

Mr Martin: Maybe John A. Macdonald too; I'm not sure. But I know that if you look at this bill, you're not going to be able to go back and look at Mike Harris' expenses. I believe that was some of the assessment done on the bill, that he's not one of the people we have access—

Mr Bisson: Not as opposition leader.

Mr Martin: Not when he was in opposition; that's right. We can as government but not as opposition. We can't look at his. He's one of the ones we can't look at. That's interesting. The government thinks we're going to find something. The government is in trouble. It's in trouble on a number of fronts. It's trying to put fires out. One of the ways you deal with something like that is that you try to find a diversion. My kids do this. They're very good at it. I'm trying to deal with something they've done that I want to talk about and get corrected and they're forever trying to get me off on a tangent. It's really because they know that dad's not too swift some times, particularly if it's late at night or if I've had a long day or mom's on his case.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I disagree. You're swift.

Mr Martin: Am I? My kids don't think I'm very swift, and there are times when they're very smart. They are. They're professionals at this. Actually, the Conservatives should hire some of them to give them some advice as to how they might hang on to power in the next election. That worries me.

Mr Bisson: I wonder if the pages do that to their parents.

Mr Martin: Sure, they do. You do that, eh? Your parents catch you doing something and you know that you're in the wrong and that you're in big trouble, so you try to find a way to get the subject on to something else.

Mr Bisson: I see them smiling. They're smiling.

Mr Martin: We know the game they play. That's what the government is doing here. They're trying to get the focus off the very real and important issues that we should be talking about as a Legislature here that affect every member of the communities we come from and are elected from so that we can't start looking at, "How much did you spend? Did you have a beer? Did you have glass of wine?"—all that really important stuff. I'm not saying for a second that we shouldn't be concerned about over-expenditure or wrong expenditure and people being accountable. But if we're running around in this place, this city and this province trying to find each other having a beer—

Mr Martin: Yes. Just pay for the damn thing yourself and get on with it. That's what I say, and we should all know that. The government members across the way are very happy to talk about common sense. For them, common sense is the foundation upon which everything they do is built. Common sense should have told them that they shouldn't have been chalking up big bar bills and shipping them off to the Legislature and the people of Ontario to pay. If they had been following their own advice and following the common sense axiom that they laid out in their election platform of 1995, they would have known that they shouldn't have been doing that. It's in the rules. It says you can't do that and that they eventually would get caught—because you do.

Kids know that if you keep doing the same thing over and over again and you know it's wrong, mom and dad are sooner or later going to catch you and then you're going to have to pay the price and face the music. It's the same thing here. If you keep doing the same thing over and over again, if you keep breaking the rules and do not live according to the common sense approach that we all know we need to live by here, sooner or later somebody is going to catch you with your hand in the cookie jar, taking more than you're supposed to. You'll get slapped. After that, life goes on.

In this place, life goes on until you get to an election, and then you have your constituents asking you, "A couple of months ago you were brought up in the Legislature and I read it in the paper. I read that you were out for a big dinner and you had booze and wine and stuff, and that wasn't according to the rules. I want you to explain to me why you did that and why that makes any sense and why I should continue to provide my support of you as a member of Parliament for my constituency." That's what will happen, and this government knows that. They know that they've been caught with their fingers in the cookie jar, that a number of their cabinet ministers have been out wining and dining when they shouldn't have been, particularly a government that prided itself when it came here in 1995 on being good managers, fiscal, prudent and all those words you hear where that kind of thing is concerned. They point fingers across the way, particularly at this little group over here, and say, "You guys are big spenders. You guys don't know how to manage. You guys wouldn't be able to run a candy shop." But I'll tell you, I don't remember, when we were government for five years, anybody raising that kind of an issue. We did some things when we were government, innocently and foolishly, that we shouldn't have done. We got caught for that and it was exposed. But I'll tell you, we weren't out there living the life of Riley on big expense accounts.

Mr Bisson: They were too afraid to get caught.

Mr Martin: Yes. I remember when I got here somebody saying to me, "Aren't you going to get the corporate card?" So I went looking in the ministry that I was part of and said, "Where's the corporate card?" and they said, "There isn't any for you, Tony." No corporate card, not that I would have known what to do with it anyway, because that's not where I came from. Before I came to this place, I ran a soup kitchen.

I know the member for Timmins-James Bay, before he came here, worked for a union. He was an organizer and worked for working men and women. They wouldn't let him get away with the kind of irresponsible spending that went on across the way.

I know that the member for Beaches-East York was the mayor of the city of York. He ran a good ship over there, and I don't think you heard any scandals coming out of that place about people spending money wrongly or not following the rules etc.

Interjection.

Mr Martin: Maybe they weren't caught, but I would guess that—this is the point that I want to wrap up my 30 minutes on here. I would guess that probably 99% of the people who come and serve at Queen's Park are decent, hard-working, good-living—

Interjection.

Mr Martin: I'll leave that to you. You get up next and you tell us. I don't know who they are.

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): I think they're all decent.

Mr Martin: Yes, most politicians I've met in my 12 years in this place are OK. I don't always agree with their politics; I don't agree with their approach. I think that sometimes what they do in the name of governing and the public interest is certainly not in keeping with my approach or my understanding of what we should be doing and my philosophical tack on life. But I find that for the most part everybody is trying their best. Everybody is trying to live according to the rules, even if it's because they know that if they don't, they might get caught. That's part of life. There are things we don't do because we know they're the wrong thing to do and morally and ethically we shouldn't be doing them, and there are other things we don't do because we know that if we do them we might get caught. That's life. I think around here that's the axiom as well.

We have 103 members elected by constituencies from across the province who come to this place, and I believe they're probably briefed the same as we are, particularly government members. I would guess that every new government when it first gets elected, because there are usually a lot of new members, will be taken through a very intensive period of orientation, where they're told the dos and the don'ts, where they're told what they can and they can't do.

Mr Bisson: You shall listen to the Premier.

Mr Martin: Yes, that's right, the Premier is God and all those kinds of things. But more than anything, you're told that if you want to have a long life in this place, if you want to serve your community and the province for a long time, live according to the rules.

Mr Bisson: Keep your nose clean.

Mr Martin: Keep your nose clean, as the member for Timmins-James Bay said. Live according to the rules.

We've had a good set of rules in this place, and I don't think we should be moving as quickly as we are tonight and probably tomorrow to change those rules, particularly based on the rationale and the reason behind why that is happening. You can tip a scale in a way that makes the whole thing not work properly, not give you the information that you require because you're focusing on the wrong thing.

I suggest that we already have in place a set of rules that, if we all live by them, if we believe in common sense, as we used to understand common sense before 1995, we'll be able to serve in a way that will be of great pride to the people of this province. Yes, from time to time, when somebody falls afoul of those rules and regulations or the common sense approach, they will get caught, as they do, as they have, and they will be held accountable. Ultimately, as is the way in our political system, they will go back before their constituents and will have to present themselves as worthy or not worthy. Their constituents will pass judgment, and then they'll either come back here or not come back here, based on their track record.

Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I enjoyed this little opportunity this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: You're very welcome.

It now being 6 of the clock, this House will stand adjourned until 6:45 this evening.

The House adjourned at 1800.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION
DE L'EMPLOI DES POMPIERS
VOLONTAIRES

Mr Arnott moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 30, An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997 in order to protect the employment of volunteer firefighters / Projet de loi 30, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la prévention et la protection contre l'incendie afin de protéger l'emploi des pompiers volontaires.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): The honourable member now has the floor for, I believe, a 20-minute leadoff speech.

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): It's an honour to move third reading of my private member's Bill 30, the Volunteer Firefighters Employment Protection Act.

While it's considered a rare instance that a private member's bill is moved forward to this point, a look at the past seven months should explain not only why we are still debating Bill 30, but why we must see that it's passed into law. Bill 30 is intended to stop tactics of harassment and intimidation used by the firefighters' union leadership to threaten their members who also serve as volunteers in their home communities. The damage is done as these double-hatters succumb to threats and are forced to quit their volunteer posts.

I would like to remind the House about Tim Lee. Mr Lee is a full-time firefighter who works in Whitby and volunteers in Kawartha Lakes. He was recently convicted by his union for the so-called offence of volunteering. He has been expelled from his union. Although he is appealing their decision, his future employment remains uncertain. You may know, Mr Speaker, that most of the collective agreements involving professional firefighters include a clause that states that you must be a member in good standing of your union if you wish to remain employed. So in a very real sense, when Mr Lee says he stands to lose his job, his fears are not unfounded.

This is nothing short of outrageous. How can this House remain silent when volunteerism is assaulted in this manner? Surely everyone has the right to volunteer in their community and on their own free time, and in the discipline in which they are trained and skilled. Mr Lee's courage is an inspiration. He isn't quitting. Every member of this House should agree that Tim Lee and hundreds like him should have the right to volunteer on their own free time. Bill 30 would preserve that right.

The fire marshal has stated that legislation of this type is needed to avoid putting public safety at risk. Bill 30 had two days of public hearings before the standing committee on justice and social policy, on October 15 and 21. I was very encouraged when the fire marshal appeared to express support for the principle of the bill. Members may know that the primary function of the office of the fire marshal is to minimize the loss of life and property from fire by assisting municipalities and fire departments to improve fire protection and fire prevention services. The Ontario fire marshal also advises the provincial government on standards and legislative developments that relate to fire protection and fire prevention. Fire marshal Bernard Moyle is an experienced, dedicated public servant who is non-political, and his voice is relevant—indeed, it is central—to this debate. He said the following when he spoke of the discussions that have taken place involving the firefighters' union and AMO:

"There simply was no common ground for agreement on a non-legislated solution.

"For the reasons stated above, it is our opinion that an enforceable and sustainable non-legislated solution to the two-hatter issue is not achievable.

"... It is my understanding that the" Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association "committed to the moratorium as long as constructive dialogue was taking place. This is no longer the case, so the moratorium was lifted. This is not intended as a criticism of the" Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association, "as they have a legal right to enforce their constitution. However, the lifting of the moratorium by the" Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association "will likely exacerbate the existing tension and uncertainty in both the fire service and municipal communities, and it is unclear to what extent and degree this action will impact on existing two-hatters.

"The sudden or phased withdrawal of two-hatters from communities dependent on volunteer fire departments could significantly impact on their ability to provide an adequate level of fire protection and may in some cases pose a potential serious threat to public safety for the following reasons.

"There would be a loss of experience, leadership and expertise in some communities. In fact, for that very reason, even a single two-hatter can make a significant difference in a small rural community. For example, some two-hatters serve as senior officers and captains and have fire prevention and training responsibilities, which are key functions in any fire department.

"There may be a reduced capacity for providing adequate emergency responses during weekdays, when two-hatters are more readily available due to their shift schedules.

"Increased response times may occur, at least until replacements can be recruited and adequately trained, if in fact replacements are available within the community. There may be an increased time in which to assemble an adequate fire attack team and a potential short-term reduction in fire ground effectiveness, resulting in greater fire losses.

"The time required to recruit and train full-time, part-time or volunteer firefighters could be extensive, creating short-term delivery difficulties. In some small communities there may not be a pool of potential candidates available to become volunteer firefighters and a community may not be able to afford hiring full-time firefighters, creating a potential public safety issue.

"In a small number of communities that have a heavy reliance on two-hatters, the sudden withdrawal of their services could create a potential serious threat to public safety.

"In conclusion, there is a provincial and public interest in protecting two-hatters who wish to serve as volunteer firefighters. We do not believe that a non-legislated solution is achievable or enforceable. As a result, without a legislated solution, the existing tensions and uncertainty in the volunteer fire service "will continue, and the high potential for two-hatters to resign as a result of" the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association's "constitutional enforcement activities could well result in significant public safety concerns arising. It is my understanding that such protection is not uncommon in most jurisdictions in Canada and the United States" of America.

"In closing, my office recognizes the importance of balancing interests where possible, but supports first and foremost the need to develop a legislated solution that clearly protects the interests of public safety. It is important that career firefighters who wish to serve as part-time or volunteer firefighters in their home communities are permitted to do so without fear of loss of employment."

I remind the members that this is not just me talking over here. That was the presentation of the fire marshal to the standing committee on justice and social policy while the committee was discussing and deliberating Bill 30 on October 21.

I've been encouraged by the support of many of the interested groups who are concerned about this issue. The Association of Municipalities of Ontario has been steadfast in their support since I introduced the bill in May. They have repeatedly lobbied every member of this House.

I was also very encouraged when I received the resolution passed by LUMCO, the Large Urban Mayors' Caucus of Ontario, in August. This resolution, which was signed by LUMCO chair Hazel McCallion, is significant because it underlines the fact that this bill does not pertain only to the interests of rural Ontario but to urban Ontario as well. MPPs who represent largely urban constituencies need to understand this when they consider their position on my bill.

Thanks in large part to AMO's help in getting the word out, some 79 municipal councils have passed resolutions in support of the principles embodied in Bill 30.

I want to especially say thank you to the region of Waterloo council and the council of the county of Wellington, as well as the local municipalities who offered their support in Waterloo-Wellington.

The Fire Fighters Association of Ontario, which as you know is the organization representing the volunteer fire departments in the province, is just as strong in their support of Bill 30 as is AMO. In fact, one of their executive members, Fire Chief Doug Smith of Puslinch township, was actually the first person to bring this problem to my attention on March 18, 2002, earlier this year, when he came to my constituency office to express his concern that double-hatters in the province were being threatened by the union leadership. My recollection is that he told me that up to one third of his firefighters are double-hatters at the Puslinch fire department. He expressed concern that without his double-hatters, their ability to respond to emergencies would be seriously compromised. I think I should add that the Puslinch township fire department is one of the busiest fire departments in the province of Ontario and that they cover part of Highway 401, which means they're the first emergency response when there's a traffic accident on the 401 through Puslinch township. They are very busy, and they need their double-hatters.

It was at that point that I began to investigate the possibility of doing a private member's bill that led to Bill 30. At that time I knew I had a private member's ballot item coming up and that I would need an issue. In looking at the issues I had before me, I thought this was a good one to bring forward. I was assisted by the member for Ottawa-Vanier, in terms of her willingness to trade her private member's ballot item with mine so that mine could be debated in June.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): Not a Liberal.

Mr Arnott: An independent, as a matter of fact.

Recently, I was pleased to receive the support of the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs. They called a special general meeting of Ontario's fire chiefs on November 20 to discuss my bill. They concluded that, "It is the position of the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs that Bill 30, as amended, protects those full-time firefighters who provide emergency services in their communities as volunteer firefighters." They went on to say: "Bill 30 also minimizes the impact on a firefighter association's right to discipline their members, and maintains the right of an affected firefighter to fire service employment and fair representation. It is time for this legislation to be fully supported by all MPPs and to work toward ensuring a vibrant and community-minded framework for fire and emergency services across the province."

At this time, I want to say a special word of thanks to a number of my colleagues who supported Bill 30 at second reading, in some cases taking considerable political risk by taking a stand in favour of what I believe is just and right. I want to thank John Baird, Marcel Beaubien, Claudette Boyer, Tony Clement, Brian Coburn, Sean Conway, Dianne Cunningham, Carl DeFaria, Garfield Dunlop, Doug Galt, Steve Gilchrist, Raminder Gill, Ernie Hardeman, John Hastings, Chris Hodgson, Tim Hudak, Frank Klees, Margaret Marland, Bart Maves, Ted McMeekin, Norm Miller, Tina Molinari, Julia Munro, Dan Newman, John O'Toole, Richard Patten, Rob Sampson, Joe Spina, Norm Sterling, Gary Stewart and David Turnbull.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): What about me?

Mr Arnott: You weren't here, but I'm counting on your vote at third reading.

Lastly, I want to express my appreciation to the Premier for the interest he's shown on this issue. Not many days ago, in response to a question he received from the member for Toronto-Danforth, if I'm not mistaken, he said, "The member for Waterloo-Wellington has a bill that I believe should go forward and be acted upon." The Premier was, of course, referring to Bill 30. His statement led to an article that appeared in the National Post on November 28, with a headline that said, "Premier throws support behind 'double-hatters': Backs private member's bill, giving unionized firefighters more freedom." I very much appreciated that article as well.

I also need to thank my constituents in Waterloo-Wellington. In the fall I sent out a newsletter about Bill 30 to all the homes, farms and businesses in my riding. I included in this newsletter the verbatim Hansard of what was discussed at second reading. As well, I included a postcard. I asked people to send it back to me if they agreed with me and supported my bill. I was heartened and encouraged by the response. I received more than 400 postcards back, and I'm continuing to receive them through my Web site.

I thank my constituents who have supported my efforts on this and so many other issues during the last 12 years that I've been privileged to serve, representing first the riding of Wellington and now Waterloo-Wellington. I also want to thank my executive assistant, Andrew Juby, who worked with me for the last couple of hours to organize my thoughts in a way that we could present to the House, having just been informed this afternoon that this debate would take place at 6:45 tonight.

Most of us have the opportunity to vote on private members' bills according to our own beliefs, the opinion in our constituency and, most importantly, according to our own consciences. I believe that private members' business is an important opportunity for MPPs to bring forward important issues. I believe very strongly that private members' bills, when supported by the House, should be considered for final passage into law. I was very pleased to be part of a process on the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly which recently has brought forward a report to this Legislature to try to enhance the role of the backbencher. It included a number of suggestions with respect to private members' bills.

For example, the member for Toronto-Danforth has a bill which I know she sincerely wants to see passed into law for the right reasons. I intend to support her bill at third reading if it is called for a vote, and I say that her bill should be called for vote. There are other bills that should be voted on at third reading.

At third reading, we have to be conscious of the fact that with this vote a bill may very well pass into law. I would say especially to our cabinet ministers, whom I work with every day and respect very much, that each of you needs to consider your position on this bill very carefully. I understand for many of you it's very difficult, especially at this point in the electoral cycle. If you think you are opposed to my bill, I'm asking that you examine your own conscience, thinking of why you are opposed to this bill. Perhaps it is a good reason. Honourable members will disagree on public issues; that's the nature of this place. That is why we have this Legislature: to debate and then decide. I hope your reasons are not primarily based on political expediency. As a cabinet minister, is it not your responsibility to think of the interests of the whole province, not just of some of the special interests in your riding?

In conclusion, I want to state again that I have the deepest respect for all our firefighters in the province of Ontario, full-time and volunteer. I appreciate their dedication—I gather some of them are in the gallery, and we welcome them here tonight—their professionalism, their courage and their valour. I especially appreciate the work done by the double-hatters, who are prepared to apply their dedication, their courage and their valour to enhance the protection of their home communities. Bill 30 is a tribute to them, and I ask all members of this House to support its final passage into law.

ROYAL ASSENT SANCTION ROYALE

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): Before I move on to the next speaker, I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, His honour the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in his office.

Deputy Clerk (Ms Deborah Deller): The following are the titles of the bills to which His Honour did assent:

Bill 191, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle / Projet de loi 191, Loi modifiant le Code de la route afin de garantir la sécurité des véhicules de secours arrêtés sur une voie publique et celle des personnes qui se trouvent à l'extérieur de tels véhicules;

Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government / Projet de loi 198, Loi mettant en oeuvre certaines mesures budgétaires et d'autres initiatives du gouvernement;

Bill 210, An Act to amend various Acts in respect of the pricing, conservation and supply of electricity and in respect of other matters related to electricity / Projet de loi 210, Loi modifiant diverses lois en ce qui concerne l'établissement du prix de l'électricité, la conservation de l'électricité et l'approvisionnement en électricité et traitant d'autres questions liées à l'électricité;

Bill 213, An Act to improve access to justice by amending the Solicitors Act to permit contingency fees in certain circumstances, to modernize and reform the law as it relates to limitation periods by enacting a new Limitations Act and making related amendments to other statutes, and to make changes with respect to the governance of the public accounting profession by amending the Public Accountancy Act / Projet de loi 213, Loi visant à améliorer l'accès à la justice en modifiant la Loi sur les procureurs pour autoriser les honoraires conditionnels dans certaines circonstances, à moderniser et à réviser le droit portant sur les délais de prescription en édictant la nouvelle Loi sur la prescription des actions et en apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois, et à modifier les règles qui régissent la profession de comptable public en modifiant la Loi sur la comptabilité publique.

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION DE L'EMPLOI DES POMPIERS VOLONTAIRES

The Acting Speaker: The floor is now open for further debate.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I appreciate the opportunity in third reading to debate private member's Bill 30, An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997. The first thing I want to do, though, is make sure that people understand that in 1999, when I was elected, I was assigned the critic's portfolio of Solicitor General, and since that time, with the evolution of that particular portfolio, I still continue to be the critic for Public Safety and Security, which includes the Solicitor General portfolio and, by its nature, corrections.

I have been going around the province, and in my own riding, discussing with many people, including three or four previous ministers, this portfolio and this particular issue that has been put to the table for us to debate, and also for us to consider the rights and privileges of our firefighters, along with the protection of our citizens, Bill 30.

It probably has been quite divisive to communities. People have been saying that it's a debate about urban-rural. They've been saying that it's a debate about political interests. They've been saying that it's a debate about money. They've been saying that it's a debate about intimidation. Quite frankly, I've been trying to look at it in a larger scope rather than, as some people have been trying to portray it, as simply letting somebody volunteer in their community. That portrayal is not the only issue that needs to be debated here. We need to put on the table some important points that need to be raised.

As part of my own personal background in terms of firefighting, I'd like to point out to the House that before being elected I volunteered as a chair and I created a group called Friends of the Firefighters. There was a need in my community for some equipment. After doing a little bit of educating, because some friends I went to high school with are firefighters—to them I always tip my hat and say, obviously on a personal note, I wish for their safety and security and also for that of their families.

We needed a thermal imager. It's probably seen as one of the most innovative pieces of equipment for firefighting since the Scott Pak. The reality is that up until the thermal imager, firefighters had to go into buildings in a fire—not as glamorous as they make out in the movies or TV—completely blind. The old expression, "You can't see your hand in front of your face," is actually true. They put me in a smokehouse and explained to me what I would be going through. I could not see my hand in front of my face. I grabbed the thermal imager that was provided to us as a sample and I not only could see my hand, I could see right across the room, and I could see where they had hidden the dummies. I could see everything.

Before they had this machinery, they would have had to do a pat-down. What they would do is get on all fours and feel their way around a room. It would take about two to three minutes to clear a room and, as far as a house is concerned, it would take them far too long. We know what the consequences are of not being able to do that. Because of their training and because of their experience, they would be able to find bodies quickly but, unfortunately far too often, not fast enough.

Why am I bringing this up? I am bringing this up to bring to everyone's attention that we're not talking about doing a little electrical work on the side. We're not talking about digging a hole for a swimming pool. We're talking about somebody who risks their life in terms of doing firefighting, and that's being done by both volunteers and professional firefighters whenever they fight a fire. I want to make it perfectly clear that I understand, admire and respect immensely in all senses the firefighters.

I am proud to say that our committee was able to raise enough money to buy three thermal imagers for the city of Brantford and three more for the county inside of its volunteer force. So now we have six thermal imagers in my riding alone because of fundraising and because the people of that riding felt so compelled to make sure that their firefighters were properly equipped.

That brings up another question that I'm going to put out and maybe a comment about that because it has something to do with this bill, when I brought up amendments to the bill that were defeated. All three were defeated quite handily by the four members on the other side.

I want to refer us to the official Hansard of the debates of Monday, October 21, and Tuesday, October 22. I would refer people to those statements and those questions. When the member for Waterloo-Wellington brought up the fire marshal, I'm awfully glad that he did, because there are some differences of opinion as to what was said by the fire marshal. My interpretation of the letter from the fire marshal, and I did ask him a couple of questions, was that he had one meeting of the stakeholders to debate and discuss this bill. He made a few phone calls and he said he had a deputation given to him. So he as a negotiator decided, after one meeting of the stakeholders, that we were no longer going to be able to do that.

My own personal experience has brought me to this place after teaching and being in education for over 24 years. For eight of those years, I was a negotiator for the teachers' side on the teacher-board negotiations, and the first thing I learned was that one meeting did not make a negotiation. As a matter of fact, in one meeting, the first meeting, we usually ended up having some pretty ridiculous proposals from both sides put on the table, and we knew—we knew—that was going to change. We knew that when you put the positions out, you did a little give-and-take, and that when you negotiated, you understood that this was going to be your best foot forward and then see where you could find the middle. But in this case, the fire marshal decided after one meeting, "It's impasse." Impasse doesn't even declare improper negotiations; impasse gets declared by an arbitrator, another person in a task force, shall we say.

That brings me to my amendments. This is the amendment I offered to this particular committee, which, by the way, after the third meeting, clause-by-clause, had three brand new Conservatives, three brand new people who hadn't gone through the process. They ended up being subbed in at the end of the meeting. I wanted to point that out, just for your curiosity.

"Commencement

"... Subject to subsection (2), this act comes into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor.

"... comes into force on the day this act receives royal assent."

What I was asking for was a delay, that the bill could pass but didn't get proclaimed for six months. Why did I ask for that? I asked for the proclamation not to do it because commencing on the first day of the month that it receives royal assent and ending on the last day of six months after the Volunteer Firefighters Protection Act receives royal assent, "the fire marshal shall ensure that the issue of salaried firefighters who also work as volunteer firefighters be subject to no less than twice monthly meetings in order to resolve issues relating to and arising from salaried firefighters also working as volunteer firefighters."

Participants at meetings: the fire marshal shall be responsible for calling all these meetings and shall include representatives from AMO and other organizations representing firefighters, volunteer firefighters, trade unions representing salaried firefighters, representatives from the fire marshal's office and any other such parties that the fire marshal thinks have an interest in the issues.

They report no later than the first day of the seventh month after the Volunteer Firefighters Employment Protection Act receives royal assent. "The fire marshal shall report to the minister on the progress that is made at the meetings in resolving the issues relating to and arising from salaried firefighters also working as volunteer firefighters."

Basically, in a nutshell, what I asked in this amendment was to make sure that we had a really decent kick at the can, so we had an opportunity to debate fully and to come to consensus and possibly bring all the people in to negotiate, to try to find some ground in there that we could present to the minister as, "Maybe we've got a solution here." But we only had one meeting and, quite frankly, that's not good enough.

Another thing that happened: I also asked in one of my amendments:

"Provincial review of funding for volunteer firefighters

"... The minister shall annually review on a province-wide basis expenditures made on volunteer firefighters and the affordability of the use of volunteer firefighters to ensure that appropriate funding is provided to support the volunteer firefighters."

That amendment was deep-sixed as well. Why? Because it made the province accountable to make sure they found out if they were providing any funding to those municipalities. Almost every single deputation made indicated that we can't afford this. We've got to have the bill. Why? Because if one double-hatter leaves, we can't afford it.

Another issue that comes as a result of that is the one that was used—and as a matter of fact, I received a phone call from the volunteer fire service in my riding that actually took offence to an awful lot of the deputations that kept saying that we need those professional firefighters in our force in order to have it a better force. They said that they were trained and as professional as anyone else and they resented the fact that they were continually almost made to look smaller. So that puts a little bit of a kibosh on the whole idea that without the professional firefighters, municipalities wouldn't have good fire services.

I had phone calls from some of the chiefs of those small towns, who said, "Don't count me in on the logic that's being thrown on this bill, because what's happening is that they're lumping us in with all those people who proclaim, some of them municipalities, we can't afford this." We had an amendment that took care of that. Then we had an amendment that took care of whether or not the training and the professional hiring being done by the municipalities or the province provided them with opportunity to put the money in. That ruled out that whole argument, and now we've got municipalities and some fire services stepping forward, particularly fire services, and fire chiefs saying, "Wait a minute. Don't lump us in with some of the statements people are making here. Our fire service is second to none. Don't make us part of your argument to say that if we remove double-hatters, it's all gone."

The fire marshal himself did not say that the province is going to hell in a handbasket with this issue. What the fire marshal did say is that if all at once every double-hatter were removed, which he is supposed to comment on, not the affordability—is whether or not it's safe. His implication was that if all of them were removed, then there would be a safety and security issue of concern, not just simply holus-bolus. Well, that's not what OPFFA was asking for. The OPFFA wanted to come to the table to offer different variations, as did the chiefs.

So I'm saying to you, Speaker, that we never had an opportunity to get to the table to talk about these options, to actually negotiate those. That's why I was discouraged by it. So as soon as they defeated those amendments, I came back and I wrote a letter to the minister: "I've attached the amendments I offered to Bill 30 during the committee hearings that were defeated. I would urge you to give Bill 30 careful consideration. It may have such a large impact on so many groups in Ontario. The mood surrounding this bill is explosive on all sides, and I have serious concerns if this bill should be passed.

"I would offer you my suggestions for a conciliatory resolution to the double-hatter issue. Firstly, I would suggest an all-party committee to monitor this situation and ensure that the appropriate consultation process is in place between all stakeholders.

"Secondly, I would suggest, if that's not doable, a task force be struck by a third person that would assist all parties to come to an equitable solution that satisfies all involved.

"I look forward to discussing my ideas further with you in detail and I am hopeful that you will appreciate the seriousness of the situation."

No response yet, but that was only November 21. I have to give the minister respect in terms of his ability to respond as quickly as I would like.

But, Speaker, I would suggest to you that this issue is strong enough that a task force should be seriously considered.

I'd like to mention that the mayor of Mississauga was brought into the debate in terms of the support for the bill.

"Dear members of Parliament"—by the way, during a press conference that was held, one of the mayor's quotes was, "Nobody can afford this any more. We can't do this. Where is the money coming from?" Well, I suggest very respectfully that maybe she should have turned her wrath on to the government for not giving 50-cent dollars to fire services like they do for police officers. Maybe that's another issue that should be considered.

Here's the letter Hazel McCallion, the mayor of Mississauga, wrote:

"Dear members of Parliament:

"I asked Tim Hudak to send me a list of the caucus members that voted against his bill regarding the double-hatter issue.

"I asked for the list so that I could write a letter emphasizing the necessity for you to vote in favour of the bill.

"If this bill is not approved, the financial impact on the rural areas will be enormous and I can only assume that those who vote against the bill are prepared to set aside a huge amount of money to finance the rural municipalities that depend completely on volunteers to run their fire department."

Well, if they had accepted my amendment, we might not have had to be worried about that, Hazel.

"There is no way that the property taxes in a rural area can sustain a full-time fire department and I am pleading with you to support Tim Hudak's bill.

"All professions volunteer to help communities and the professional firefighter should not be deprived of this opportunity and privilege to serve as a volunteer in the community in which they live.

"I ask for your support of this bill."

Well, Mayor McCallion, the writer, whoever it was, sent the letter to Tim Hudak and not Ted Arnott, and also cc'd a copy to Tim Hudak, the Minister of Consumer and Business Services. So I would hope she would rewrite the letter and send it back out again, and send one to Mr Runciman and along with it one of my amendments that would have taken care of what Hazel McCallion and many, many other people had said was their major concern, which was financing.

I have about seven or eight different items I could go through. The one I will bring mention to is amalgamation in terms of those people who had to suffer through that. I want to reiterate this as a bigger-picture issue as opposed to specifically Bill 30, and that is that amalgamation created an awful lot of this headache.

Amalgamation was not thought out by this government whatsoever. If it had thought it out, it probably would have been able to come to grips with the reality that they were creating a very large problem for those municipalities that had to face this issue. I am told by many people in the professional firefighter association groups, and firefighters across the province are saying, "You know what? The province didn't know what they were doing. They didn't even have a clue about the problems they were creating in firefighting and other services."

There are a couple of other points. I will bring them to our attention. The first one is that of emergency first-response teams. I would respectfully suggest that we haven't looked far enough into the future about what we're going to do with our fire services. Our fire services are slowly becoming more than simply fire services, although their primary focus is suppression, which it should be. On another side of the bill, it says that you're supposed to be an educator to make sure that we do fire prevention, which I fully support. But in terms of suppression, we want to talk to the government side and simply say to them, "You're really dropping the ball on this one."

These teams are now evolving themselves into emergency first-response teams. If that volunteer is going to be a member of that emergency first-response team, that person is going to be on duty immediately and is going to be expected to be there until the emergency is suppressed. We're going to go beyond suppression of fires; we're going to be talking about an emergency first-response team, that's a whole new beast. This bill is going to create more problems for that issue. We're not looking forward. I would ask the government and all the members who are going to vote for this bill to be quite sure that you know what you're asking for when these things are going to evolve into a first-response team. It's a lot different from suppression. You must be aware of that. I ask you to look carefully into what you're creating when you're asking volunteers to do that.

There are regulations in the act already that say you're only supposed to give 48 hours of service in a week. I would ask, how many people are going beyond 48? Is somebody keeping track of that time? Is somebody going to say, "Oops, you're on your 48th hour; you've got to stop. Put that hose down. Don't save that kid. Get out of here; you're on your 48th"? I want to make people understand that we're talking about multi-layered problems here that are not getting dealt with, I would rather say, with a linear-thinking bill.

The other issue I bring to everyone's attention of why I can't support this bill—and I would suggest to you that we have to do this—is to review the fire marshal's office and its actions. We've got to take a look at what's going on here. We've got some really weird things happening. In one case, in Sudbury we're looking at situations where one person is allowed on a truck and we're calling into question some of the things that are happening. Fifteen to 20 different municipalities are put on a list to say, "We're just going to let you know there are some safety issues that could be happening here." Yet, on the other hand, he's supporting a bill that could create that same problem.

So I'm not sure whether or not the fire marshal's office holistically is understanding the depth at which they're making this decision. I'm not questioning the individual; I'm questioning whether or not there's consistency in the decisions being made in the fire marshal's office, because I asked him. The OFM's concern was that these actions had a potential—he used the word carefully—to result in a sudden withdrawal of services of two-hatters throughout the province. So now we're talking about what might happen if the bill doesn't pass or what might happen if the bill does pass. All of a sudden what he's saying now is that if all those double-hatters are removed, then yes, there may be some potential for difficulties.

That got brought up by several of the municipalities. What they said was, "We can't afford this action. We can't train them. We can't do that." That's what my amendment was trying to say. My amendment was saying to the municipalities of the province to sit down at the table and make sure that you're providing enough funds and supervision. The same fire marshal who says 10 in 10—the expectation of the standard of 10 in 10 is just a guideline now for those rural communities that are complaining that they can't afford it. So maybe it's just a guideline. There's so much inconsistency there.

It's time for us to take a good, hard look at what we're providing in terms of fire service in this province. If the one thing that's happened as a result of this bill is that we take a good, hard, linear look at what's going on, then I've got to tell you, we're in trouble. We're in deep trouble if we're not going to analyze what's happening inside our house. And if we think that the one bill is going to solve that problem, I will repeat myself time and time again. This is going underground, if you think this is going to be solved. It's going to rear its ugly head again. Get the stakeholders to the table to discuss that issue, and I'm sure that we can come up with a reputable example for all of us in the province.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Speaker, let me indicate at the onset of this brief amount of time that I have to speak to this bill on third reading that New Democrats do not support this legislation. New Democrats oppose this legislation. New Democrats do it without weaving and bobbing. New Democrats oppose this legislation head-on.

New Democrats, as a party of labour, stand firmly with, in this instance, the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association, or it could be the IBEW or OPSEU or any other number of unions and associations of workers. We believe they have the right to set their own constitution, to set standards for their members. If there is to be a change to that constitution or to those standards, that change has to come from within that organization, from the floor of a convention, whether it's a national convention here in Canada or an international convention in the United States of America, plain and simple. Make no mistake about it: we are unapologetic and far from embarrassed about our united support for firefighters around this issue. Make no mistake about that.

This has been a regrettable debate. One would have thought that firefighters across this province would have recognized the significant dangers that firefighters have been confronted with by virtue of this government's policy of downloading and underfunding municipalities and municipal services, firefighting services among them. I believe that firefighters' time would have been far better spent over the course of the last months lobbying this government aggressively to ensure that municipalities across this province have adequate resources to develop (1) effective professional firefighting services where they are warranted, and (2) where the communities are such that a volunteer service is consistent with the size and location of the community, aggressively lobby for adequate support for volunteer firefighting services to be properly trained and properly resourced so that they can do the job that indeed we and the professional firefighters understand volunteers do.

This issue is not an anti-volunteer firefighting issue. I have spent enough time with members of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association to say, and I believe this firmly, that it is not an issue of volunteers when it comes to the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association either. The OPFFA has indicated over and over and over again on the record that they understand there are communities that are not sufficient in size and that are so dispersed and have so modest a tax base that it would be unrealistic to expect that community and its taxpayers to develop an exclusive professional firefighting service or, in the case of many, even a composite firefighting service.

The issue has been very clear, and I refer back to the hearings that were held around this bill. I attended those hearings, throughout the course of the hearings, on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I want to indicate that I was concerned because over the course of those hearings, when a number of witnesses came forward, I saw the government bench at those hearings have members shifted in and out. Some of my concern around that was because it was my suspicion that at least one, perhaps two of the government members sitting in that committee were making it quite clear by virtue of the questions they were asking and the comments they were posing that they indeed opposed Bill 30 as well. I found it an abuse of the committee process of some significance to discover that a government member who may well have been persuaded, as it appears some of them were, of the legitimacy of the position of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association, rather than being allowed to express their view by way of a vote, simply being shuffled out of that committee and subbed with somebody who was going to follow marching orders, who hadn't had an opportunity to hear the evidence that had been presented, or participated in, never mind listening to, any of the debate that occurred in that committee. Needless to say, that was a peculiar thing in its own right.

There's not a single member of this Legislature who ever has—and, I'm confident, ever will—stood up and spoken with anything other than praise for firefighters. So I'm not going to spend a whole lot of time on platitudes about how much we love firefighters. But we don't trust them to form their own association and create their own constitution, and we don't respect them enough to allow them to determine their own internal affairs within that association. Oh yes, we love firefighters, but we don't love you enough to write your own constitution. We respect firefighters, but we don't respect you enough for you to set standards within your own organization. Sorry, friends, you're either with firefighters or you're against them. And if you're not with them, I regret to tell you you're against them. There's no halfway point here. One either understands how a professional association or trade union works and why it exists, or one doesn't.

I understand that there are members in this Legislature who don't have regard for workers, be they industrial workers, be they farm workers or be they firefighters. I understand there are people in this Legislature who don't have as much regard for them as some others might. I believe as well that there are some in this Legislature who have no regard whatsoever for professional associations or trade unions. There are people in this assembly who have made it quite clear, in act and in deed, that they don't like trade unions and professional associations. They don't think there should be free, collective bargaining.

Indeed, we've seen from this government some efforts—regrettably, some of them successful—to impose arbitration standards on associations and groups of workers that are the most uneven, biased, unfair and predictable arbitration standards that have ever been imposed on any body that had to rely upon arbitration, with its long, noble history and tradition of fairness that has been all but erased, more often than not by this government. And when it hasn't been all but erased, it's only because of the opposition, and New Democrats will take some credit for having been involved in some of those struggles—we have—ensuring that when arbitration has been imposed upon workers, that arbitration, the mandate of the arbitrator, the terms of the arbitration and the selection of the arbitrator are fair and indeed permit some expectation of justice on the part of both parties, workers as well as their employers.

I understand full well that my caucus, my colleagues in the New Democrat Party here at Queen's Park—Howard Hampton from away far north, through to other parts of the north, through to Toronto and all the way down through Hamilton and into Niagara—find ourselves perplexed by some of the contradictions. During the committee hearings I heard one witness who was advocating on behalf of the legislation saying it wasn't about money. Then, remarkably, that witness was followed by one who said everything had to do with money.

I was amazed that municipalities that employ, train and maintain professional firefighters—not all of them, but some—appeared unconcerned about the fact that their trained full-time firefighters were being used by other municipalities, sometimes neighbouring municipalities, as volunteers. Down where I come from, we have, in the largest part, composite fire departments. I know the volunteers well, and I know the full-time firefighters well. I know why young women and men join volunteer fire services. Down where I come from, all of them have an eagerness and desire to serve their community. Most have a very specific interest in firefighting and the skill and training involved in it. More than a few have a desire to use their experience as volunteers to demonstrate to the chiefs of full-time firefighting services that they've got what it takes to be a firefighter.

I'm proud to see a whole lot of the full-time firefighters, a whole lot of the OPFFA, members of the communities that are part of Niagara Centre, having, if you will, cut their teeth in the volunteer services. I don't think they should make any apologies about the fact that they use volunteer services as a stepping stone, as a way to prove their stuff to get hired when there's a vacancy in the full-time firefighting service. But I say to you that I haven't met one yet who, as resources for volunteer companies and composite communities become scarcer and scarcer, thinks it's fair that somebody who's already a full-time firefighter in, let's say, a neighbouring municipality should bump them from a shorter and shorter list because of the pressures on communities flowing directly from this government's policies. Even in composite communities, the pressure is on to reduce the number of volunteer firefighters.

I also accept that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association has a mandate that's inherent in its very raison d'être to not only advance the interests of its members as they exist at any given point in time, but also to develop standards for professionalism across the province. That's why New Democrats have advocated, have embraced and continue to fight, along with professional firefighters, for minimum staffing and response times. Again, if we had had our wish, I believe the debate tonight would have been far more productive were it about this province providing resources to give effect to the minimum response times and minimum staffing requirements that are universal and are clearly the minimum standards, one for urban settings and one for rural and remote settings and volunteer firefighters—a far better use of this chamber's time, far more productive, far more meaningful to the people of this province who rely upon firefighters day in and day out, 24/7, whether it's for fire suppression or for a medical response or for a motor vehicle accident—single-car, two-car or, as we saw tragically on the highway at Barrie over the weekend, a 40-car accident—or when it's one of those catastrophes. And since September 11, we no longer have to use our imaginations to conjure up a worst-case scenario. It exists in vivid reality for all of us, etched in our memories. Whether it's an arena roof collapsing, whether it's an industrial explosion, whether it's a natural catastrophe, it's firefighters, and I respect those firefighters. New Democrats respect those firefighters. If they're good enough to put our lives in their hands, then surely the structure of their very own constitution should be in their hands as well.

During the course of committee hearings and during the course of some of the debate that percolated throughout the province around this Bill 30, I heard a whole lot of talk about Bill 30 somehow being contrary to the charter or “contrary to my rights.” I understand—we all understand—that Bill 30 is considered by some of the double-hatters to be effectively an impediment to their double-hatting. I understand that. But during the course of the public hearings, we received not one legal opinion to suggest there was even anything remotely contrary to the so-called Charter of Rights and Freedoms about article 15 of the IAFF's constitution. I put to the House that it's not for the Legislature to conduct those types of legal interpretations. There was no suggestion that there was any sort of prima facie violation of the charter. If some people think there is, then it's incumbent upon those people and the people who support them to utilize the courts to determine whether or not that's the case. New Democrats see that as a rather plain, simple and obvious proposition as well.

Will there be financial hardship? Will there be immediate difficulties to those municipalities which currently use full-time firefighters, OPFFA members, in their volunteer firefighting services? Of course. That's why the OPFFA has been eager to engage in a process of negotiation with municipalities and volunteer fire companies across this province to develop a phase-out to avoid that immediate hardship which would flow from the immediate removal of professional firefighters from volunteer company services.

New Democrats were disappointed when we saw the provincial fire marshal appear at the committee after, as we understand it, but one meeting with the parties involved to indicate that somehow this process had been deemed, by him at least, a failure, and not only that he had rejected it now and wasn't prepared to pursue it any further, but that he had adopted what I consider to be a regrettable partisan position which may well make it difficult for our fire marshal and his office to maintain the trust of firefighters across this province. I regret that.

That's why New Democrats join with firefighters across Ontario in demanding that there be an audit of the fire marshal's office to determine whether or not that office has fulfilled its mandated responsibilities in a way that's responsible or meaningful, particularly around adequacy of firefighting services in municipality after municipality.

That's why New Democrats, time after time and as often as we've had the opportunity, have stood in this Legislature to indicate that it's not enough to extend platitudes to firefighters. We all wish them well. We all mourn and regret any injury to any firefighter, never mind the tragedy of a death. But we've also made it quite clear that platitudes don't cut it, nor quite frankly does this divisive issue, because this issue doesn't improve the lot of firefighting one bit here in Ontario.

New Democrats have been consistent in calling upon this government to stand up and be counted, that if this government really believes in its firefighters, this government will make sure that municipalities across this province, be they a big city like Toronto or Mississauga or be they smaller towns like the cities of Welland, Thorold, Pelham and St Catharines or be they small, small towns like the cities my colleagues Howard Hampton, Shelley Martel, Gilles Bisson and Tony Martin represent in the north, have the cash resources. That's what it comes down to: the cash resources to make sure their firefighters, be they volunteer or full-time, have the tools and the staffing to do the job they're called upon to do, to do it as safely as possible, to do it as effectively as possible.

Earlier today, medals of bravery were given downstairs, here in this assembly building, to amongst others firefighters. The tributes paid to those firefighters, who truly are courageous—and the firefighters who were receiving those medals here today are merely representative of so many of their sisters and brothers across this province—become meaningless if we don't pay tribute to them by respecting their right to conduct their own affairs in the way that they see fit.

This isn't an issue of US versus Canada. It's not an issue even of volunteer versus full-time. It's very much an issue of this province's underfunding of municipalities, of the downloading on to municipalities and the reduction in transfer payments. It's very much about this government setting standards for municipalities, then refusing to fund those municipalities when it comes to fulfilling or meeting those standards. It's very much about an anti-union mentality, an anti-union sentiment, an anti-union bias that permeates so many sectors here in this chamber.

New Democrats oppose this legislation. New Democrats stand with firefighters and New Democrats stand with the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association. We are a party of labour. We stand with those women and men, in this instance firefighters, amongst the most courageous of our population, amongst those most ready to sacrifice. Let's give them their due.

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): It's my pleasure to stand and chat about Bill 30 for a few moments. To me, it's a shame that we have to be debating a bill like this in this House, a bill that has to protect the rights of individuals. I heard the member from Thorold—sorry if I'm wrong—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Niagara Centre.

Mr Stewart: —Niagara Centre—say that they were a party of the worker, of the unionist. We are a party of the people, and these people want to make sure they can serve the people in their particular communities. I believe we have a right to protect them.

I heard some comments from the member from Brant a little while ago about how, first of all, they were in favour of unionizing the family farm, and now it appears they're in favour of unionizing volunteers. I have difficulty with that; I have a great deal of difficulty with it. I keep constantly—

Mr Bisson: Say the word.

The Acting Speaker: Order. Take your seat, please. Stop the clock. This is a controversial issue. I've ordered the member over here to be quiet and I'm going to ask you to do the same. We're going to get through this. We're going to do it civilized and everybody's rights are going to be upheld.

Sorry for the interruption. The member for Peterborough may continue.

Mr Stewart: We've certainly heard comments about funding, cash, cash-strapped and so on and so forth. This issue is not about funding. I had the pleasure of serving on the township of Otonabee council for 13 years and we had there two volunteer fire associations, two fire halls that, let me tell you this, were the finest individuals that I ever ran across. They offered protection and, in my own case, one fairly cool winter's night I had a fire in my home. I was about 10 minutes away from the fire hall and these people came and assisted me on a volunteer basis at about 11 to 12 o'clock at night, without worrying about compensation, without worrying about being an association, without worrying about funding, without worrying about anything other than volunteering to help me put out a fire in my house. Let me assure you, I have often thought about that particular evening since. My family was there; we could have been burnt, the house could have been burnt down. But these volunteers put their lives on the line to come up and assist me in getting that fire out.

These were a cross-section of farmers, mechanics, teachers—one happened to be a minister, who handed me some water because I was up in this loft area just as they arrived and I had a light bulb in my hand, which I said a couple of very derogatory words about to the minister. Anyway, he stayed around and helped fight the fire. But they were a cross-section of people from the entire community. Not only were they volunteers for the local fire department, but they were also volunteers in many things in the community. Whether it was for Santa Claus parades or food banks or teaching in the schools or whatever, they believed in assisting their community. I believe that's what this bill is about.

I don't want to use the term "double-hatters." I want to use the term "professional firefighters." In my mind, it doesn't matter to me whether you belong to an association or you're a volunteer; you are a professional firefighter. I have some good friends, both those who belong to associations and are also volunteers, and some who are just volunteers, and I commend them for that.

If you look in my particular riding, we have about seven or eight volunteer fire departments as well as Peterborough. This problem that has arisen throughout a lot of Ontario is not a problem in my riding. It hasn't been and I don't think will be because they all get along. I have difficulty when they say, "If you don't belong to our association, you can't volunteer." I would have hated it on that particular night when there was a fire in my house, that the chap that lives over the hill on the next farm to me would have said, "I can't go out and help Mr Stewart try to get his fire out in his home because I'm not allowed to do that." I have real difficulty with that.

If you talk about people doing double things, we have professional firefighters in this province who do plumbing, who do electrical work, who do carpentry, who build homes, who do all of these things, and do they have to become a member of those associations? No; they go out and do it two or three times during the week.

Mr Stewart: Well, it may be classed as that. I wouldn't want to get into that debate. All I'm saying is that they indeed do things that other people should do.

I want to support the member. I also support all the professional firefighters in this province, including the ones who are members of the association of Peterborough. They are all professional people and they also should be supported. But nobody has the right to say, "Unless you belong to my association, thou shalt not work at something else," the same as these guys doing these other extracurricular jobs.

I support the member and I support all firefighters in this province.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I want to add my comments to Bill 30. I hope that I can make it as interesting as possible for my colleague on the other side of the House when he said that he will be appreciating my comments. I hope not to disappoint him. Perhaps I should refer to the comments of my colleague the member from Brampton, who is extremely familiar with the issue and has done excellent work on behalf of both the professional full-timers and part-timers. It is very unfortunate that the House doesn't work in this particular way, that sometimes those people who are closer to the action, who are closer to the real knowledge of the issue, are not allowed to bring to the House that particular knowledge.

We are dealing with Bill 30 because the government says we have to deal with it because it is in front of us, it is in front of the people, and we have some of our forces in the House overseeing how the action really will be taking place in the House.

Let me try and address the best I can, in the brief time that I have, this very important piece of legislation. I should say at the outset, why are we dealing with this particular piece of legislation at this very—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: I'm listening carefully. I'm finding it difficult to do so. I would ask members of the third party, please, if you're going to have discussions like that, that get loud, if you could take them outside, otherwise keep it down, and the government benches over here. I don't think anyone's trying to interrupt on purpose, but that's the effect you're having. I'm asking you to please keep it a little quieter so that I and the others can hear the member. Sorry for the interruption; please continue.

Mr Sergio: Perhaps it's the time and the hour. The midnight sittings just may have an effect on the members. Let me continue on the subject of Bill 30, which deals with our volunteer firefighters. They are all firefighters. They are all professionals and I am sure that all of them want to offer the best of their profession. I believe we have a number of agencies that have an interest in this, let alone our own forces. The firefighters have this bill and the interest of the bill at heart.

We have the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association, which leads the way. We have the volunteer fire departments, we have the fire marshal's office, we have the Ontario fire chiefs, we have the Ontario municipalities and everything that encompasses the various servicing problems with municipalities, and now we have Bill 30. So you can see that you have so many parties, so many agencies involved in this one issue, and it's a very important issue.

I have to say, from what I have seen out of the House and in this House in the debate on both sides, that it has become, if my knowledge of the issue allows me to say this, very unnecessary to bring this divisive issue to the House.

My colleague the member for Brant mentioned before that this was dealt with at some length at the committee level. The member for Brant suggested a number of amendments to the bill. The member for Brant said that none of his amendments were accepted by the government members, amendments, I should say, that indeed not only would have improved the quality of the bill but would have given an opportunity to deal with this issue out of this place without creating a further, more complicated, more divisive situation.

I believe that if my colleague had the time, he would have continued saying that an opportunity was offered to both sides to delve into the real issues and deal with them. Failing that, my colleague from Brant said that maybe we should have a task force and make sure that whatever separates the two sides is dealt with very openly and in a fashion that at the end would benefit both sides.

Mr Sergio: It doesn't. I appreciate the comments from my colleague on the other side, but it doesn't address the issues on both sides, the way this bill is being presented, the way the government wants to have the bill dealt with by this House. There are some serious issues, and now I have to say that it doesn't really matter which way we go; we will be upsetting one or the other side.

The unfortunate thing is that it's not we in this House who are caught in the middle. When we go home to our own areas, joining the people out there, those are the people who ultimately will be affected, the people in the various communities.

Why are we having difficulties with this bill? Why do the members of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association have a problem with this bill? It is because of the way the bill has been introduced and pushed through the various committee stages, and now the way it is in front of us. It is a comprehensive piece of legislation and it does not have any regard for how it affects the various municipalities throughout Ontario, large and small. Indeed there are municipalities that, especially on this important issue, meaning fire protection, should have dealt with it on their own, on a one-to-one basis, on an individual basis. Unfortunately the passage of this bill would not allow that. Sure, the government always reserves the right to say, "We will deal at some point in time with a regulation that we may change," and so forth. Why do we continue to push ahead with incomplete, unacceptable legislation when we had the time and the venue to do it right?

Are they different people, the ones who have the 48-hour-a-week professional firefighter jobs and those who are called to serve on a part-time basis, on a pay-as-you-go basis, if you will? They are all professionals. But there is more to it than that. Those who are called to serve in the smaller communities cannot, not because they don't want to, offer the quality of training, because often they are called to train other people in smaller communities or they are not up to date with either equipment, new facilities, new instructions, new programs that are not available to a full-time force. It's a 40-hour-per-week job. It's in the act that any other time after the 40 hours should not be dedicated to the work of providing fire service protection. I guess that is the main issue of Bill 30: firefighters' protection for those people.

As I was saying before, why are we here? Again, it's because of the downloading of this government on the various municipalities; not only the amalgamation of a number of municipalities, but then the downloading on top of that of other services on the local municipalities. What happens? Small municipalities don't have the resources. Please, don't let me hear from the other side, "Oh, yes they do." Let me tell you, if the small municipalities had the resources, most assuredly, Walkerton would have never happened. I cannot buy that the problem was a long-standing problem. Perhaps it was, but when you start to chop 40% off a particular budget and fire some 30% or 40% of the professional staff, don't tell me, don't let me hear from the other side, that they have all the professional equipment and training. They cannot have that.

I believe that today the government has an opportunity to say, "Well, if there is something wrong, then let's try to correct it," so that we would have a piece of legislation that ultimately would be offering every municipality in Ontario, indeed every community, the protection that they deserve.

The other thing is, I believe this government, the provincial government, has a very direct responsibility to make sure that indeed every municipality in Ontario, every community, has the same protection as any other. When we allow this particular situation to continue, I believe we will create two things: one, that many communities will not have the same protection; two, we also put in jeopardy the health and safety of our professional people and firefighters.

Why, for example, do we have an act that says, "Forty hours per week, and you cannot do any other fire protection work in other municipalities"? It becomes redundant, because they have a responsibility, health-wise, with injuries or possible death. It's considered a dangerous job almost at the same level, if not the same, as our police forces. If we're to allow, let's say, the police forces to start moonlighting here and there—we cannot call them volunteers, because they get paid as well. They do get paid; not as much—$10, $15, $20 or $30 per hour—but they do get paid, so they are not really volunteers. Are we saying that now we will start allowing our police forces to go and do volunteer work here and there at the expense of other areas? I don't think so.

I think the government must be aware of the situation they have created. Our professional firefighters didn't create this situation. We have some 10,000 professional firefighters and some 20,000, I believe if my mind serves me well, volunteers. I think the legislation affects maybe some 600, 700 or 800. It's a small portion, if you will. So why couldn't this have been corrected in time? Now we have the legislation that is a hindrance to those negotiations that should have taken place or should have continued to take place. But now we have, in the middle, a piece of legislation that has stopped every possibility of getting those sides together.

I believe the government has also seriously failed to recognize the importance of the issue when it comes to fire protection. They should have acted quite some time ago and more forcefully to get the two sides to come together. If they couldn't, then you get an intermediary, you get a task force and make sure. Since when is the government choosing sides and forcing one side against the other? Only when it suits the government.

I think the bill was introduced by Mr Arnott with some good intentions. Maybe he had some good intentions when this bill was introduced. But their mistake was that when the bill went through the motions of various committee levels, they didn't hear the professional people and they didn't hear the opposition with good, sound amendments. That is why the bill is here today the way it is.

It may be too late. But our provincial government must assume a lot of the responsibility for allowing another incomplete bill to be brought to this House, to this floor, especially dealing with such an important service.

We have said on this side of the House that if we have these problems it's because of the cuts, because of the lack of resources. Our leader, Dalton McGuinty, has said that is an area where indeed we have to help. We have to provide the service, the quality, the training and the equipment. That is why we have said that one of our priorities, as my colleague the member from Brant said, is to provide more thermal imaging equipment, and not only to provide better service but also to ensure the safety of our professional firefighters and to save lives faster, when it is required.

Municipalities can't afford that. They don't have the resources. If the government will be pushing the bill as it is, we will do nothing more than compound the problem as it is and it will get worse. The division will continue and they both will suffer. The sad thing is that, ultimately, the people will be the ones to bear the brunt of this incomplete legislation.

Those agencies that have a stake have been told, "That's it. There are no more negotiations. There is no more time to talk. There are no more possibilities of getting the sides together." Negotiations have come to an abrupt end because the government is now willing to pass this legislation and let the chips fall where they may.

It is too bad that when the government chooses to interfere it does it in the most delicate and important areas like, in this case here, providing protection to our various communities. Municipalities not only don't have the training, they don't have the resources, they don't have the manpower and they don't have the skills. They are looking to the provincial government for assistance. Is the provincial government willing to say, "Yes, we have made so many cuts, but now we are willing to put in a few million dollars toward that area," instead of absolutely wasting hundreds of millions of dollars on consultants without any benefit to the people of Ontario? I don't think they understand the difference between giving another contract to another consultant and putting some money where it is needed. Let the municipality make sure that indeed they will hire the necessary number of professional firefighters, well qualified and well trained, so they can offer to serve us in other municipalities. In many cases, when small municipalities are calling on these professional firefighters, they are not there solely to provide a fire service. They are there to train other people as well. Under what terms do they provide those particular services?

So I'm saying to the government and to the member, who I think with all good intentions has introduced this bill that has come this far, that I believe there are enough members on this side of the House to say, "Maybe we should have a second sober thought on this particular bill and get it right." This is not the first time we've told the government, "Take a breather. Take your time and get it right." Look, we said it here a couple of years ago with the amalgamation of Metro, let alone other municipalities. We said, "What's the rush? Take some time and do it right."

Folks, ministers on the government side, we are dealing with providing fire protection to the people of Ontario. This is a very serious issue. I hope the government, before going through with this bill, maybe tomorrow, will indeed have some second thoughts, come back and say, "All right, let's give these guys here a second chance. Let them get together and see if they can work things out so that indeed we can provide that quality of service and protection that the people of Ontario deserve." With that, I thank you for the time.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): As usual, I've listened to the members opposite debate this bill. Thinking specifically now of the Liberals who have spoken, the member for Brant and the member for York West, as usual we've been treated to a dose of Liberal doublespeak, where they want their cake and want to eat it too. They take both sides of the issue. I think the NDP and ourselves are sitting here wondering which way they're going to vote. They probably won't make up their minds until the day the vote is called. Then they may change their minds momentarily.

I know where the NDP is coming from; we always do. They've taken the position that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association is a union, in spite of the fact that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association does not view itself as a union.

While I will sort of compliment the member for Waterloo-Wellington for bringing the bill forward, because I know he believes very strongly in it, I am unalterably opposed to the bill and I will vote against it. I feel very strongly.

Interjection.

Mr Wettlaufer: I'm not like the Liberals. I'm saying what I mean right now. I will be here to vote against it, unlike you, some of whom probably won't even show up for the vote.

Mr Sergio: Didn't you hear what we said? Come on.

Mr Wettlaufer: I heard what you said, but I heard both sides of what you said, and so did everybody else, I say to the member for York West.

This is a situation where we know the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association is professionally trained. We know that. We also know that they are professionally trained primarily in municipalities. That's where their experience is.

Not too many years ago, I was an inspector for an insurance company. Not that many years ago, I used to go into the rural areas of this province and talk to the people who were volunteer firefighters. They used to pride themselves on the fact that they were trained as well. But they were trained to go into rural dwellings; they were trained to go into barns or rural businesses. I don't think too many professional firefighters primarily trained in urban areas know too much about fighting a fire in a barn or know the risks entailed in fighting a fire in a barn. They may know the risks of fighting a fire in a chemical institution or in urban areas where there are chemicals stored that are combustible, and even then, even with all their professional training, unfortunately sometimes they are overcome.

A friend of mine whom I went to high school with, played basketball with, played football with, died in one of those fires. He was a professional firefighter in the city of Kitchener. He was trained professionally, he was trained adequately, but he died in spite of all the best precautions. And now, because one of those firefighters thinks that he or she would like to make a few dollars extra in a rural municipality, fighting a barn fire—we want to allow him to do so? We want to subject that firefighter to the rural risk in which he or she has no exposure, no training? Are we fools?

The rural members on all three sides here are probably saying, "Well, they are trained." They may have some initial training, and it may be professional training, but they don't keep it up through constant exposure to that type of fire. The risks are far too serious. My experience in the insurance business will guarantee it. I know from personal experience that the risk is too great for those firefighters, and I do not want to subject them to it.

I am not speaking from some ideological perspective, like the NDP might. I am speaking from a right-wing perspective. I am speaking because I have a genuine concern for those firefighters, those firefighters from Kitchener who have come in and talked to me, explained their concerns. We have different equipment in the urban municipalities than in the rural municipalities. We have different risks.

I cannot support this bill, and I know a number of members in the government caucus will not support this bill. The Liberals—I don't think anybody knows where they're coming from at any given time, on any given subject, and certainly tonight is one of those. I saw some of the NDP scratching their heads when the Liberals were standing up, and we felt the same way on this side of the House. Some on this side of the House have some very definite opinions contrary to mine, but I know that others on this side of the House have some very definite opinions which agree with mine. But none of us knows where the Liberals are going, and I don't think they know where they're going on this particular issue. I think it's time that you guys stand up and be counted and take a position.

Mr Gerry Martiniuk (Cambridge): Where do you stand, Ted? Are you for it or against it?

Mr Wettlaufer: We ask the members as they're speaking, from time to time, Speaker, as you know—there's a fair amount of heckling going on. Most often it's quite good-natured. But we often say to the Liberals, "Take a position. What are you going to do on this?" They always ignore us because they haven't made up their own minds on this.

Mr Martiniuk: Ted McMeekin refused to say.

Mr Wettlaufer: Yes, Ted McMeekin, the member from that alphabet-soup riding, Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot, refuses to say. The member for York West refused to say when he was standing. It's a very simple request. Take a position: which way are you going to vote? See, they don't even want to hear that.

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): You stay in the House long enough, you'll hear it.

Mr Wettlaufer: I can't stay in the House long enough to hear what you have to say.

Anyway, Speaker, I want to thank you for allowing me these few moments to speak. I have to say that I'm very much opposed to this bill. While some may view it as an urban versus rural split and others may feel it's a very worthy piece of legislation, I feel it's wrong. I personally would like to see more consultation. The president of the firefighters association, Fred LeBlanc, has requested that there be a task force struck. Consult, take a longer period of time, find out exactly what the problems are, arrive at solutions and make some recommendations on which the government could act. Personally, I see no problem with that at all. As a result, I do have to vote against this piece of legislation. I think it's being forced in this House much too quickly, and I definitely want to see a task force and further review.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I think this bill proves it is possible to have a bad bill for a number of reasons; it's a bad bill not just for one reason. I certainly will not be voting for this bill but will be present and voting against it.

Mr Wettlaufer: You took a stand. Good.

Mr Parsons: As the other members did when they spoke. But I appreciate that you're listening to me, when you didn't listen to my colleagues. Maybe this is a role model.

This is very clearly not an anti-volunteer bill. I myself live in a rural community. I had the misfortune to have had a fire, at about 12:35 one morning; I read that time in the newspaper the next day. I phoned the volunteer fire department. I continue to be impressed that after making the phone call, I had not yet got everyone out of our house when the first volunteer firefighter came in the door. I will never forget how good Doug Detlor looked that day when he arrived to assist us with the fire.

It is a reflection that this government really likes confrontation. I know this is a private member's bill, but I also know, even though I've only been here one term, that this bill would not have got this far if the leadership of this government did not like this bill. It would have disappeared. It is clearly here, clearly a select private member's bill, because the government itself philosophically supports it.

Interestingly, they don't terrifically support volunteer firefighters. I can remember when I put forward a private member's bill that would have assisted volunteer firefighters in my community and every other community in Ontario. When volunteer firefighters raise money for something such as a fire training house—it's happened in my community. Volunteer firefighters in my community raised $50,000 for a fire safety training house to use in the community to educate school children, adults and everyone, and even to use as a command centre in a major fire. The provincial government thanked them by slapping provincial sales tax on it and forced them to go back out on the streets to doors to raise the money for provincial sales tax for it.

It didn't require a private member's bill. The Minister of Finance could have defined the fire safety house as a fire vehicle, but he refused. I brought a private member's bill here to exempt the volunteer firefighters from having to do fundraising to pay sales tax on something that was clearly for the benefit of the community. A significant number of government members voted against it.

So to say they're supportive of volunteer firefighters—actions speak louder than words. I do wish that this government demonstrated the same interest in firefighters that it has in police officers. There is an amazing number of parallels in their jobs but an amazing lack of parallels in the way the government treats the two different groups of professionals.

This government likes confrontation. When given an opportunity to negotiate, everything I've studied on the professional firefighters' side has showed that they were prepared to talk about it. They weren't going to say that every double-hatter had to quit volunteering effective today or tomorrow. They wanted to meet at a table to discuss and negotiate it. This bill curtails that; this brings in immediate action now.

I remember a couple of years ago when our leader, Dalton McGuinty, said that when the only tool you have in the toolbox is a hammer, pretty soon every problem looks like a nail. That's been your approach to every issue that has come before you: to hammer some group for it, blame someone else for it, solve it immediately and then come back next month or the month after that and fix your fix. We looked at some of the tax amendments; you've had to bring in corrections, and in fact you've had to repeal some of the bills or portions of the bills you've rammed through under time closure.

So this government would be well advised, on not just this issue but most issues, to make haste slowly. There's nothing wrong with getting it right the first time. I know you don't get as much publicity, but there's no shame in doing it right the first time. I'd like to recommend that to you.

Firefighting is hard work. There's no other way to describe it. It is hard work physically and it is hard work psychologically. I've spoken to firefighters who have described for me the trauma they have experienced, after being at some fires, after being at some motor vehicle accidents, at seeing things that have burned images into their minds that they have had to take home. Firefighters work long hours and do an extremely difficult job. I'm ashamed to say that I and many others did not realize the challenge of their profession until after 9/11. That has been an eye-opener for me, and it has caused me to find opportunities to talk to professional firefighters.

The job is brutal. There is no professional firefighter who says, "I'm going to get into this career because I'm going to make big money at it." It is a mission; it is a calling. I have said before and will say again that they become heroes, not for what they do at fires and not for what they do at accidents, but they become heroes the day they join the fire department and say, "I am prepared to put my life on the line." And the reward we're going to give them is to interfere in an operation that really wasn't broken.

Professional firefighters need some time off from firefighting. It may be a time-worn axiom to say that change is as good as a rest. Remarks have been made that there is nothing to prevent a professional firefighter from digging swimming pools in their off-hours or doing any number of jobs, but not doing professional firefighting at that time. I believe they need the ability to have some breaks. When they serve as a volunteer firefighter after having served a full shift as a full-time firefighter, it is more than just digging a swimming pool; it is taking on additional responsibilities and risks. Firefighters expose themselves to risk whether as a paid professional or as a volunteer, and there is a very real question for them and their families as to who is responsible. Firefighting presents risks that have nothing to do with digging swimming pools, with due respect to those who do.

The Belleville fire department lost a professional firefighter a couple of weeks ago, Tom Nobles, an absolutely superb individual. They did not know what was wrong with Tom. Tom was off work for about five years. Ultimately, after his death, they were able to confirm that Tom's problem and Tom's death were the result of breathing fumes in a specific chemical fire he had entered. He didn't hesitate; he went in and looked for people trapped inside there, and he paid the ultimate price for that. That took over five years to determine, and it required examination after Tom's death to confirm it. Who's liable for that? It was very clear: it was done in his line of duty while fighting a fire for the Belleville fire department.

But when dealing with the WSIB, if a case is pretty simple and clear-cut, they're still a very difficult organization to deal with. Add the complication of an individual working for two different departments and watch them try to duck responsibility. All of you on both sides of this House have staff who devote a considerable number of hours every week to trying to get answers out of WSIB. This would complicate it tremendously, and it's not comparable at all to digging a swimming pool, as was remarked earlier.

I said that I wished this government cared as much about professional firefighters as it does about police officers. I'd like to read something to you that came out as a result of an item that arose at the standing committee on justice and social policy. The research officer was asked to investigate, and there were two questions. But the question I was fascinated by was, "May a member of a police force work for another force at the same time?" I would suggest that's really the question we're dealing with here tonight, and the answer is:

"The Police Services Act deals with secondary activity in section 49, which reads, in part, as follows:

"A member of a police force shall not engage in any activity,

"(a) that interferes with or influences adversely the performance of his or her duties as a member of a police force, or is likely to do so" I would suggest that we substitute "professional firefighter" for "police officer." A professional firefighter who has worked as a volunteer and been up all night at a fire in another community—their work would adversely influence their performance.

"(b) that places him or her in a position of conflict of interest, or is likely to do so." I don't think that one particularly applies.

"(c) that would otherwise constitute full-time employment for another person; or

"(d) in which he or she has an advantage derived from employment as a member of a police force."

A professional firefighter has had access to a great deal of training, which in fact gives them an advantage over someone else wishing to volunteer in another community.

“(2) Clause (1)(d) does not prohibit a member of a police force from performing, in a private capacity, services that have been arranged through the police force.”

So police officers don't have the latitude of working as police officers during the day in one community and then working as police officers in another or working as auxiliary constables or volunteers, because I think this police act recognized that police service work is long hours, that it is dangerous, that it is important that each police officer be at their very best to assist other police officers when they respond to a call and that the community is best protected when this professional officer—and this is legislation this government has—works only as a police officer in one community.

Well, fellow members, I will tell you that being a professional firefighter involves long hours, the work is dangerous, it is vital that they be well trained, it is vital that they be well rested to assist other firefighters on the job and to assist citizens. It is in the best interests of every community that professional firefighters adhere to the standards they have now. If it's good enough for the police—and I support this for the police—then it's good enough for our firefighters.

Why a double standard? We're talking about double-hatters. We're talking about double standards. It may be tempting on your part to drive by a fire station and see a fire truck parked there and say, “Well, they're not doing anything. That's not really work.” But that would be similar to saying, on passing a police car stopped at the side of the road, “They're not doing any work.” Firefighters are there on long shifts. Let's recognize them as the professionals they are.

I am bothered by the decision on the part of this private member's bill to interfere in the constitution of a specific group. It is strange that they picked this specific group, because this is a group of professionals who say, “We believe it's in the best interests of our members and it's in the best interests of the public.” I've said it earlier—

Mr Bisson: You're voting against it.

Mr Parsons: Well, if you were listening earlier, I said I will be voting against the bill. That's a clue that I will be voting against the bill.

Mr Wettlaufer: That's assuming he doesn't change his mind.

Mr Parsons: Well, please don't judge me by your standards. Please don't do that.

There's a constitution that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association has. I know that every individual who becomes a full-time professional firefighter has access to and is aware of that constitution. If they don't agree with it, I would suggest the route is not to run to some outside body. Work within your organization if you don't like it. But you know the conditions when you take the employment, and everything has a reason. There's a reason for it being there. The reason it's there wasn't to be mean and nasty; the reason was because the professional firefighters believe the public is safest, and their members are safest and most productive, when they are focusing on just one department, one relationship among the crews, and they are working a controlled number of hours rather than responding to calls at any time of the day or night outside their regular hours. And they work long shifts.

We're doing long hours here. I would suggest for some of you the hours have been too long and you're not thinking as clearly as you could be. That's ample proof that we need to limit and control the hours.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): They don't tell us the truth about that.

Mr Parsons: Well, I'm sorry, member from Kingston and the Islands.

We have other professional bodies that set their standards because they believe it's in the best interests of the public and their members. We have the medical association, which says that even if you're trained as a doctor in another area, you can't come in and do this and do that. Do we have volunteer doctors in Ontario? I don't think so. I think we've caught and convicted those who have done it, probably. But we don't allow that. There are conditions to be a lawyer in Ontario—great conditions; I couldn't be more supportive of them. But we allow the other professional groups to determine what is in the best interests of the public and their members.

For people who are professional firefighters, it's not a hobby, it's not a game. They don't like driving the big, red trucks for fun. They have taken on a mission, and we need to respect the experience that they've had from it. We need to respect their advice, and their advice is, “Our members need to follow these guidelines, need to follow our constitution, in order to be truly effective.”

So the government doesn't belong in this. There is always a role for government in mediation and negotiation. I know that the professional firefighters don't necessarily view themselves as union, but if it at all looks like a union to this government, the attack dogs come out, unfortunately. That's fundamentally wrong.

I believe that no one would disagree if I say we have been phenomenally well served in this province by our firefighters, but we have not served them back anywhere near as well. This government should be ashamed of the money that they put into training firefighters; they should be ashamed. It's an afterthought or it's nothing. We recognize the importance of having excellent training for our police officers. We need that same excellent training, we need a number of things, to be provided for our firefighters. We need to put in place a mechanism for every firefighter that will ensure that when they arrive at a plant, they know exactly what's in there. They need to know if there are chemicals, and they need to know what those chemicals are. There is an absolute right to know. There needs to be more money going to our firefighters. Municipalities have to staff and equip fire departments with the constant downloading of this government. The quality of fire protection should not depend on the local tax base.

I am intrigued that in the last budget this government is somewhat proud, in fact I would say very proud, of the fact that if you exclude education and health, they have reduced expenditures in this province by 30% per citizen. That's not my number; that's in their budget. With some pride, they decreased spending by 30%. But I don't think the cost of fire training equipment has gone down by 30%; I don't think the cost of fire trucks has gone down. In some communities that do not have strong industrial bases, it is a great hardship for municipalities to equip and to pay fire departments. It shouldn't be. There should be an equalization that provides the funding for them.

In conclusion, this bill is simply a bad bill for a whole lot of reasons. It is a government interfering in a process that they need not have. The government actually stopped negotiations. When the member for Brant, our critic for this area, put forward amendments that would allow the parties to at least sit and meet and talk, they were voted down. This is a private member's bill that seems to have tremendous significance because it has the ability to once again use a big hammer and show the power. It is a lack of respect for our professional firefighters, not just for the association but for each and every member.

I will not be able in any way, shape or form to support this bill. I would urge the government that the thing to do is, don't put it forward and have it defeated; simply revoke it. Allow the parties to talk if they need to talk. There are solutions that can be worked out other than with your big hammer approach. Just—

Mr Parsons: I apologize for being fascinated by the discussion. I understand there is going to be a free vote on this bill, the House leader says. It doesn't change the fact that it's a bad bill. It should be withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker: The Chair will recognize the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I thought you'd enjoy that little bit of humour.

First of all, I want to say, along with all of my colleagues in the NDP caucus, we will be voting in opposition to this bill. There will not be one New Democrat who will stand in favour, because we believe as a caucus that working people have the right to determine certain items through their associations or unions and that, quite frankly, the long arm of government doesn't have any place in the union hall or being able to determine what the rules are as to how unions deal with what are basically internal matters.

Let me put this in a bit of perspective. I'm a Steelworker. I come out of the mining industry of northeastern Ontario, predominantly out of Timmins. I want to propose this to you. Where I come from, people who work in the mining industry understand that when you go to work in the morning you expect to be paid for the hours of work that you're there during the course of the day. I want to propose to the government, what would happen if I as a Steelworker were to go to work eight hours a day for one employer, then all of a sudden decide I'm going to volunteer overtime, or I'm going to volunteer to work for the mine down the street? I would argue that my union, rightfully so, would probably sanction me. By workers doing that, in our view, as a union movement, it would basically take away from the ability to negotiate decent wages and would undermine the whole purpose of a collective agreement. The emphasis is on the word "collective."

I understand full well the position that Mr Arnott wants to take on this particular bill. He wants to give professional firefighters the ability to volunteer in other fire departments that are temporary or volunteer. I just want to take it from the other perspective, because I believe that workers in a full-time job should not be in a position of having to volunteer for another employer when it comes to doing the same line of work that they're paid for. That's just the basic thing about this whole bill. For the government to try to hide behind the word—and particularly for Mr Arnott to say, "This is all about protecting volunteerism," I want to say, as a Steelworker, I don't want my members volunteering for the boss at free time. When they work, I expect them to be paid, and if they work more than 40-some-odd hours a week, depending on the collective agreement, I expect them to get time and a half. Why? Because we are all about trying to negotiate contracts to the benefit of our members. If we have people stepping outside the collective agreement, it undermines the group. It's a very simple process.

So I don't accept for one second the argument that the member puts forward, that this is all about empowering volunteerism, because it has nothing to do with that. It's about undermining the collective agreement and undermining the collective of workers who work for professional fire departments.

Is that to say that volunteers in this province don't play a key role in our fire services? No. But I want to bring another point. Yes, they volunteer a fair amount of time but they do get paid a stipend. To say that they're strictly volunteers—now, I agree that most of the work they do, they do out of love for the job, but strictly speaking, they're not volunteers from the perspective of the stipend they get. For the member to say that we've got to get into this debate because somehow or other we've got to protect volunteerism in this province—I think volunteerism is alive and well. That's most of the communities in my riding, except for Timmins, have volunteer fire departments. Even in the city of Timmins we have three volunteer firefighting halls and one professional. This bill, in my view, is not going to do anything to build the kind of relationships that we have to build within fire halls across northeastern Ontario.

So the first point I would make is that volunteerism is not dead. People will still come up to the plate in communities like Kapuskasing, Opasatika, Smooth Rock Falls or wherever it might be, and where there are volunteer fire halls people will still come forward and be willing volunteers. But to somehow bring this debate forward as this is the saving of volunteerism, I think it's a bit of a stretch. I see this as a very simple issue. We have to allow these types of arrangements, as far as the ability of full-time firefighters to volunteer in volunteer fire halls, to be dealt with in their own associations or unions. It's as simple as that. I wanted to put that, first of all, on the record.

The other thing that I said at the beginning I wanted to put on the record is that all of us as New Democrats will be standing up squarely behind the professional firefighters in this case and saying, "We're not going to vote for this legislation," for the reasons I have set out. This is unlike what we are unfortunately seeing with the Liberal caucus and the Tory caucus, which is a bit of a split. I've seen some Liberal members get up and support this bill. I've seen other members get up and speak against this bill. I want to say as a New Democrat that I'm proud to stand firmly on this bill, to take a position and clearly let the public know where we're coming from.

I want to say again that it doesn't take away from volunteerism. Volunteers are a key part of our fire-fighting services in Ontario. I think we all understand that. Volunteers will still step forward in those communities where there are volunteer fire halls. This bill in no way, shape or form is going to enhance what is going to happen with volunteers as far as what happens in those volunteer fire halls is concerned. That's the first point I would like to make.

The other thing is that the member who sponsored this bill took great pains in his opening comments to talk about the consultation he had. I listened very intently about some of the people he consulted with. He consulted with the Ontario municipal association, not exactly big union supporters, I would say, not exactly the proponents—

Mr Kormos: Not likely.

Mr Bisson: Not likely, as my good friend over here says. The Ontario municipal association represents a certain view, and that view happens to be one of trying to deliver services for the cheapest cost possible. If that means they can enhance more volunteers within a system, that is one way they're able to get to that cost. So he went out and consulted with the Ontario municipal association. Then he consulted with mayors. How likely are mayors not to want this bill passed?

Mr Kormos: The mayor of Welland.

Mr Bisson: There are mayors who don't support this. I forget the name of the mayor of Welland.

Mr Kormos: Cindy Forster.

Mr Bisson: Cindy Forster. I've met with her on a number of occasions and I know she doesn't support this bill. But a certain number of the mayors you've met with, Mr Arnott, I would say are people who support this bill.

Then he says, "I went out and spoke to councillors and to many municipalities that like this bill." I understand that. It's like my saying, "I'm going to go out and consult. I'm just going to consult with the unions on the bill. I know I'm going to get basically one view and not listen to the other." If you're going to consult, at least take the time to speak to the professional firefighters so you understand their point. You may not agree with it, but at the end of the day, bring it into the debate. To say that you only consulted with a certain group of people vis-à-vis this bill I thought was a little bit disappointing.

Mr Bisson: Yes, he spoke to a couple of firefighters, the ones who want to be volunteer firefighters. You spoke to the two-hatter professional firefighters. I understand that. What I'm saying is that when you stand up and purport that you've consulted and say, "I've consulted widely and everybody agrees with me," it's a bit of a stretch.

I've had debate on this bill in my riding and other parts of northeastern Ontario. There are some people who have supported it, namely, the fire chief, Lester Cudmore, in the city of Timmins. I like Les a lot, but on this one, he and I disagree. A few other people with the municipal council talked to me about this bill, saying, "This is not a bad thing," but by and large, everybody else was opposed.

I spoke not only to full-time firefighters, but to volunteers in South Porcupine-Whitney, and a number of the volunteers I spoke to didn't like this bill and saw this bill for what it was. I think the story is that if you go out and actually do some consulting on this, you'd find out that it's probably not supported as strongly and as widely as you would purport it to be.

I ask myself one other question: what is it that this government doesn't like about firefighters? That's just a question I ask myself. Because over the last number of years since this government was elected back in 1995, there have been numerous occasions when this government has brought in legislation that has been to the detriment of professional firefighters. I would have thought that a Conservative government, with a person like Mr Runciman who puts himself out as a proponent of—

Mr Kormos: Where is he tonight?

Mr Bisson: I was coming to that point—I would have thought as a proponent of professional firefighters, volunteer firefighters, emergency workers and police he would have been in here defending the fight that's going on here today. I think it's interesting and I ask myself the question, to come back to the original point, why is it that this government keeps on fighting firefighters on all kinds of issues? I would have thought this government, which purports to be the friend of firefighters, would try to bring in legislation that firefighters are able to support. We find ourselves yet again—I think this is the second or third bill in so many years that basically has been an attack on firefighters. I just say, where are you guys coming from? I thought you were their friends. If you're friends of the professional firefighters, I have to say to you that you have a very funny way of showing it.

The other point that I wanted to make is in regard to the approach this bill takes. I think we'd be better off to try to get the associations and the unions themselves to come up with what they think is an appropriate measure for the whole double-hatter issue. I know that the member across the way and those who support this bill are going to say, "No, that's why we need legislation, because they won't allow it." But I come back to my first point, and that is that the whole purpose of collective bargaining and forming a union is in order to protect workers from the excesses of the employer and, number two, to negotiate a fair contract when it comes to wages and benefits for its members.

This bill allows the utilization of full-time firefighters in volunteer fire halls. The effect of that is that it makes full-time firefighters less and less needed. That really is undermining the whole benefit of having a collective agreement. I would say to the member across the way that we'd be a lot better off, in my view, leaving this item in the hands of the union itself and not bringing the strong arm of government into what is basically the collective agreement.

It's interesting that we're not doing that anywhere else. We're not going in to tell, let's say, the United Steelworkers of America, and neither should we, to use volunteers for overtime or volunteers to work in the competitor's plant. We're not doing it to CAW workers, OPSEU workers, police officers, doctors or lawyers, but we're picking on firefighters. That is just a little bit disappointing, where the government is going.

I also want to say, and I raise it in the context of this particular debate, that when it comes to workers' rights and their right to bargain by way of the collective agreement, this government has used every opportunity they've had to attack those rights. If you remember, Mr Speaker, about three years ago, I believe it was, or two years ago, the government brought in amendments to the Employment Standards Act. When they brought forward those amendments, one of the amendments they were making was for greater utilization by employers in the process of overtime and being able to force employees to work overtime as much as possible.

I raise that in the context of this debate only to make a point. When the government introduced the Employment Standards Act changes that they did—I think it was a couple of years ago—they put an amendment in the legislation that basically said that an employer would be able to have a freer hand to force employees to work overtime. New Democrats here in the Legislature—I know my good friend Shelley Martel, my leader, Howard Hampton, and certainly our critic of the day, Mr Christopherson, and our current critic, Mr Kormos—said, "Don't make those kinds of changes, because employers will utilize that for their own devices. They will force workers to work overtime when they don't want to work." When we raised that a couple of years ago, the then Minister of Labour Chris Stockwell, the now House leader, said, "You guys don't know what you're talking about. You're fearmongering. You don't know what you're talking about. No, no, no, it'll never happen. Employers will never take advantage of this legislation."

Well, it's pertinent to this debate, because exactly what we said was going to happen did happen. That's in the case of Toyota. Toyota now has basically done two things. They've said that any new hires since the Employment Standards Act was changed must sign an employment contract. Within the employment contract is a clause that says, "You shall work two hours of overtime per day." There are no ifs, ands or buts about it. If a person doesn't want a new job at Toyota, all you have to do is say no to that question and you don't get the job. So the employer is utilizing, by way of the intimidation of an employment contract for new hires, its ability to get them to work longer hours and work overtime hours against their will by way of changes the government made to the Employment Standards Act.

The point I want to make is that we're saying in this bill that we're going to be lessening the reliance on full-time firefighters in Ontario. I and my colleagues don't think that's a good idea. I raise the Employment Standards Act debate in this as a comparison to say that two years ago we told you this was a bad thing. The then Minister of Labour got up and said we didn't know what we were talking about. Now we see that Toyota of Canada has basically, by way of employment contracts, rubber-stamped exactly what the government has put into the bill into its employment contracts and has said, "Employees shall work overtime, and you have no choice about it."

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: Well, this is the second part. The interesting part, and my good friend Marilyn Churley raises the point, is that in this particular case the government won't interfere. It is not willing to go to the employer and say, "Hey, listen. This is not allowed. We don't allow employers to be able to force overtime."

2100

The Minister of Labour got up today, and it was pretty interesting. When he answered his question, he tried to mix a few things. He tried to mix what happened to employees that were there prior to the employment contracts and said, "Oh yes, but they went to the appeal board." Basically, now what we've got is an appeal of the original decision from employees who were affected prior to the employment standard changes who are not signing these employment contracts. They were two different things. What's clear is, in this case, it has happened. I'm saying, in this particular case, if we allow this bill to go forward, what we're going to see over a period of time are more and more fire chiefs across this province encouraging their full-time firefighters to give up their time to be able to volunteer within fire halls.

Let me put that in the context of the community I come from. The city of Timmins has full-time firefighters. They're situated in downtown Timmins. We have the Mount Joy, Connaught, South Porcupine, Whitney and Schumacher firefighter volunteer systems. Those are all volunteer fire halls. I originally said there were three, but it's actually five. We have five volunteer fire halls within the city of Timmins and one full-time fire hall.

Now, imagine if I was the fire chief, I had this legislation and a new hire walking in the door getting a job as a full-time firefighter in the city of Timmins. One of the questions the fire chiefs ask you as you're going through the employment process is, "By the way, if I hire you as a full-time firefighter, will you be willing to volunteer some of your time in one of the volunteer fire halls so that you can use some of your experience for the volunteer firefighters?" What do you think that new, possible employee is going to say to the fire chief when he or she is going through the job interview process? He or she is going to say, just like the Toyota employees, "Yes, of course I'm willing to volunteer. Yes, Mr Fire Chief, because I want the job." As a result, what we're going to see over a period of time is that it will become almost a condition of employment in volunteer fire halls like we have in the city of Timmins where, to become a full-time firefighter, they're going to ask you: "Are you willing to volunteer?"

I'm putting on the record today that, if we allow this bill to pass, what we will see in the city of Timmins is what we're seeing in the Toyota plant here in Ontario. It will become a condition of employment. The fire chief will sit down in interviews with new, potential full-time firefighters and ask that question. The question will be, "Are you prepared to volunteer in one of our volunteer fire halls?" If the answer is no, I don't think that person's going to get hired. If the answer is yes, they probably will get hired. What we're going to have, quite frankly, is the employer utilizing full-time firefighters almost for free because they get a stipend as volunteers inside the volunteer fire halls.

I say if you want to protect volunteerism, don't allow that to happen, because what you're going to end up with I think is the worst possible scenario in both cases. As we saw in the Toyota plant, where Toyota has put inside their employment contracts a stipulation that the only way you get a job there is if you agree to work overtime, you will see within full-time firefighter halls, as in the city of Timmins, the employer putting inside the contract the very simple stipulation that, "You should volunteer in one of our volunteer fire halls."

That is one of a number of reasons why we, as New Democrats, will not vote in favour of this legislation. We think this is the wrong way to do business. We think that, quite frankly, we should have a separation between full-time and volunteer firefighters when it comes to the duties they carry out. If you want to support volunteerism, I say as a government, fund them. Give them the money they need to be able to provide all the training that is necessary to be a volunteer firefighter. Make sure they've got the equipment in the communities to do their jobs, and make sure you've got the training officers in place in order to do the kind of training that you need in order to keep their skills up. If you really want to support volunteerism, that's the way you're going to do it, not by creating as a condition of employment for full-time firefighters to go work as a volunteer. Mark my words, that's exactly what's going to happen out of this legislation.

Again, I just want to say that all of my colleagues, I'm proud to say, within the New Democratic caucus here we will be voting in opposition to this bill—all nine of us. We feel strongly that this bill is a bad piece of legislation, and I'm not looking forward to the day that we vote because I suspect there are enough Liberals and Conservatives to allow this bill to pass. I think that is really a sad thing.

To the Liberal caucus, I wish you would be more on side with our line. I think it's wrong-headed to take the position of supporting this legislation. This is nothing short of union-busting. I'm just pleading to my Liberal colleagues to vote with us in order to be able to defeat this bill clearly and categorically. I welcome those few Conservative members who will vote along with us.

With that, Mr Speaker, I'd like to thank you for this time of debate.

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): I represent now the riding of Lanark-Carleton. I have represented ridings which have included both part of now the city of Ottawa and exterior parts of the city of Ottawa, the ring around the city of Ottawa, being the other parts of eastern Ontario. This particular issue has significance to a riding like Lanark-Carleton or a riding like Grenville-Carleton, which I once represented, which was, again, part of now the city of Ottawa and Grenville county. It was another area where you had two different kinds of factors playing into an issue like this particular issue.

I have no hesitation in supporting this bill as it now stands, because it is carefully drafted in a form which can in fact be put in place. Mr Arnott was careful in making certain that the bill, as drafted, could be proclaimed sometime in the future when it was feasible to do so, when people were ready for it to be proclaimed, and therefore those who would try to dodge the issue by arguing about the details of the bill quite frankly I think are going to have difficulty explaining that to their constituents.

I quite frankly think this will be a significant issue in the next general election; I really do. I think it'll be a significant issue because there is huge, huge support in the rural areas for this bill.

I want to tell you, in terms of the area I represent, how this bill means much more to the areas that are closer to the centre of Ottawa than those that are farther out from Parliament Hill. The area of West Carleton is the largest area, a former township, one of the 11 municipalities that became part of the city of Ottawa, the largest geographic area in all of the city of Ottawa. It was an amalgam of three rural townships, and that happened way back in 1974, when those three townships—Fitzroy, Huntley and Torbolton—were brought together. This particular area has a very, very strong volunteer firefighting force, but it is buttressed very, very much by double-hatters, under the definition that Mr Arnott puts forward.

As you go farther out from the centre of the city of Ottawa, the problem becomes less and less relevant to the people because there are fewer and fewer double-hatters as you go farther out because of course they're going farther away from their professional place of employment as firefighters. Perhaps the closest area to West Carleton where there would be a significant number of firefighters would be in the former city of Kanata.

Many of those firefighters are not only stationed in Kanata, but some of them are stationed in the former city of Nepean and even farther into the city of Ottawa. They have chosen to live out in the country area and have made a significant contribution. They and their families have made a significant contribution to their community through helping out the other volunteer members in the fire department. They were able to bring those skills they learned downtown out to the rural area.

The fellow who ran against me in the last provincial election, Mr—

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Dwight Eastman.

Hon Mr Sterling: —Dwight Eastman, for the Liberals, who was the mayor of West Carleton, made this particular issue very, very important to him in the last city election, when he was elected as a city councillor for that area. He was asking the provincial government to bring forward this very bill on behalf of his constituents in the area of West Carleton because he recognized how important this particular function was.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): Why didn't he win?

Hon Mr Sterling: Well, I had no trouble supporting what he was talking about at that time and continue to support it in terms of this bill.

Some of the people who have spoken from the opposition benches have somehow put forward the notion that this is a government initiative. I can assure the members opposite that that's not the case. This is an initiative of Ted Arnott because he feels strongly on the issue, and as you've heard, there are diverse opinions on this side of the floor.

One of the things we haven't talked about tonight is the whole role of the volunteer firefighters, be they in an area where you have double-hatters or in an area where they don't have double-hatters. This is a significant part of rural society in Ontario. When you are attacking the rural firefighter community, when you are saying to somebody who wants to be a double-hatter and wants to help out his or her rural community by being a double-hatter, you are attacking a significant part of the social fabric of our rural communities.

In all the time I've been elected, and that's been some 25 years, representing in large part about half urban and half rural concerns, I have observed of course the various different institutions that are there in the community and are supported by the community. I don't think there's any one institution which has established such a high degree of public acceptance as the rural volunteer firefighters in each and every municipality we have across eastern Ontario.

The bill doesn't say to a professional firefighter, "You're omitted from doing anything else." One of the anomalies I have with regard to this bill is the fact that if the rationale behind opposing this bill is that a firefighter who was out on a volunteer fire, or in most cases a lot of their duties relate to going out to Highway 7 or Highway 17 or 417 in eastern Ontario, Highway 15 going from Smiths Falls to Carleton Place, going out to these horrendous crashes that take place and providing first response in terms of medical care as well as taking care of any incidents that result from a fire out of a car or whatever, part of the rationale is that a double-hatter who went out at 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock in the morning would be too tired to do his job the next day. Well, I think each and every one of us faces those kinds of employment issues and has to make those kinds of adjustments in terms of where we go the next day. It is more serious, probably, in terms of what a firefighter must do or potentially might do the next day. I'm certain firefighting departments can make that adjustment. Of course, if somebody is sick, they have to call in somebody else. So in the case of an emergency, where a firefighter who is a double-hatter is going out on a volunteer basis in another jurisdiction, why can't the professional unit make an adjustment? I don't understand why that can't be done. I expect that in fact it probably is done today in terms of trying to make certain that a firefighter who is on duty is ready and able to perform his or her functions as they go forward.

I also am concerned with what I have heard with regard to this union coming down hard on double-hatters and trying to control their private life in terms of what they choose to do outside of their working hours. I think that's an infringement on their freedom: freedom of association, freedom to do what they choose.

In the case of Ottawa and the area of West Carleton, I am suspicious of the motives. I think the motives are not pure. I think the motives are to drive the West Carleton area out of a volunteer firefighting service and into a professional firefighting service, even though it is a rural area. If that happens, the firefighting in that area will suffer, because the city will not be able to afford the level of service that is now provided by the volunteer sector and the community will lose those volunteer institutions, which are part and parcel of being in a rural community.

So it's a double loss: it's a loss in terms of the level of service that those communities now receive, and it will be a loss in terms of the loss of a group of individuals who gather together not only to fight fires, go to emergencies and perform very valuable functions as the first response, but it will also be a huge loss with regard to the social function, the cement this group provides in a community.

I really believe that Mr Arnott has done an excellent job in putting together a rational and reasonable bill to meet this challenge. A couple of speakers from the opposite side said, "Well, let them negotiate longer, let them talk longer about what is going on." I understand that the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association has backed off at the present time, but they've backed off for one reason, and I'll tell you what the reason is. It's right there in writing. They've backed off because Ted Arnott has raised the profile of this issue in front of this Legislature, so they're in retreat at the present time.

They're saying, "Maybe we were a little too rough before, and therefore we should modify our position."

It's not always nice to come to conclusions, where parties aren't able to get together and act in a reasonable and rational way. In this case, it does very, very strongly attack a centre of rural life. For that reason, as I said before, I support Bill 30 totally and have no problem with it.

The debate on this bill is presently in the third reading stage. This debate is supposed to be, of course, on the amendments to the bill. That's normally what third reading debate, after second reading, is. As you know, there have been no amendments put to this bill, and therefore I move that the question now be put.

The Acting Speaker: I hear a point of order from the chief whip of the third party. I'll recognize it.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We have a number of members in our caucus who want to speak to this particular issue. There has not been all that much debate. We have had but one hour of debate at second reading, and we're now into maybe two hours at third reading. I would put to you that there are still members who want to speak to this. It is not a long time that we've been debating this, and I would ask you to take that into consideration.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, with respect to you, on the same point of order: This bill has been through second reading. It went to committee. As I understand, they heard deputations at committee; a number of people came to two days of committee hearings. Now we've had third reading debate on a private member's bill. Quite frankly, it's unprecedented to have third reading debate on a private member's bill. It has been vetted and it went through the process. Also, third reading debate is generally dealing with amendments to the bill. As I understand it, there were no amendments put.

Mr Arnott: There was an amendment at committee.

Hon Mr Stockwell: There was an amendment, sorry. They were speaking to that specific amendment to the bill.

As I said, it's a private member's bill. It had fulsome debate at second reading. It had committee time. It had two days, and it has had an unprecedented amount of third reading debate. I think it's reasonable to expect that you can move forward.

Mr Levac: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It was mentioned by one of the members on the other side that it wasn't amended. Quite frankly, Speaker, for your information, the amendment was so large that it actually changed the entire bill. That would give the precedent that's being asked for in terms of the amount of time being given to debate. The reality is that the first bill in question may even have been challenged under the Charter of Rights and the Constitution; that's how large it was. And the fact is that the amendment created such a change in the whole bill that it changed the whole direction. Giving the time in this debate right now is very necessary so that every member of this House has an opportunity to discuss that amended bill. I thank you for your time.

The Acting Speaker: It looks like there are going to be quite a few points of order. I want to give everybody a chance to make sure the points are made. I also want to give the sponsoring member of the bill an opportunity to say a word, but I am going to recognize at least one other representative from each of the three caucuses in addition to the sponsoring member. With that, the House leader for the third party now has the floor.

Mr Kormos: Thank you kindly, Speaker. First, Speaker, I'd ask you to note that there has not yet been even three hours of third reading debate. That's number one.

Number two, this is a private member's bill. That means it was allowed a maximum, as the standing orders provide, of one hour for second reading debate. I want to emphasize that. If the Speaker—if you, sir—were disposed to put the question to the chamber, notwithstanding the points of order, it's my submission, first, that the Speaker would be opening the floodgates for a process whereby governments could introduce what in effect are really government bills via private members' avenue—it would open the doors; it would open the floodgates—which means that there would be but one hour of debate on what could be a government bill wherein the government utilizes one of its backbenchers via private members' public business. One hour of second reading debate? They wouldn't need time allocation. To then accede to a request to put the question after not even three hours I submit would open the door to all sorts of abuse.

Second, I put to you this: this bill clearly, unlike others that have been before this chamber, I acknowledge, has not only generated different views from the NDP versus the other two parties, but clearly, even on the basis of the speakers during this brief period of time, there is disagreement within those two other parties. I put to you that the nature of the debate, not just the length but the nature of the debate, and the degree of intensity of debate—I'm not just talking about polarization but about the exchange of views—should also be taken into consideration.

(1) There's the prospect of opening the doors to an abuse of process by the government if this is granted, if the question is put; that it would identify private members' public business as being a very speedy conduit for the government agenda. (2) Having listened to the debate to date, I point out that it's not inappropriate that the leader of the third party, the leader of the New Democratic Party—he's here. I want to tell you, he does plan to speak to it and we expect him to be able to speak to it on the next rotation. I submit that under those circumstances, precedent is not applicable, because here we are dealing with but one hour of debate on second reading; in most other cases, you've heard at least, oh, three days of debate on second reading before time allocation is permitted. Certainly the period during which such a question could be put on second reading debate would not happen after one hour, as it is in private members' public business where the question is put by virtue of the standing orders.

So I'm suggesting two very sound bases here upon which to accede to the point of order and permit further debate. You may well have the call for the question further in the debate. You'd have to reconsider the matter then. But I think you have two very important areas of consideration.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the member for London West.

Mr Bob Wood (London West): Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. Because the government House leader has very commendably called a controversial private member's public bill for third reading, the decision you have to make tonight is something more than an ordinary decision. This is going to set something of a precedent for what I hope will be a number of controversial private members' public bills that come before this House.

I personally am opposed to the bill. I hope in due course I'll have an opportunity to speak on third reading. As you consider this, which I would submit to you is very important—and I know my friend the government House leader is going to call more controversial private members' public bills; that's good, that's democracy, and it's going to work. As you consider this rather important decision, there are two things I think you should keep in mind in particular. One is that because it's a private member's public bill, it's only had one hour's debate on second reading, and that's as it should be, and that's a good standing order of the House. However, taking that into consideration, that orients, I think, toward more time for debate on third reading on the floor of the House.

The second thing I think you should take into consideration is that there were quite substantial amendments made in committee. This is a significantly different bill, although the same in principle, as was before the House on second reading. I think that orients toward more time for debate.

So as you consider this very important question, which I think is setting something of a precedent, I hope you'll take those two factors into serious consideration. Whatever decision you make on that point will commend itself as a consideration to Speakers in the future when they have to make what I hope are many similar decisions, because the government House leader is absolutely right in bringing this bill forward. I commend him for that. I invite you to consider the importance of what you're about to decide.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the member for Essex.

Mr Crozier: In addition to the points that have been made, I make the point that we are prepared to debate this bill till midnight tonight. I thought—and I could stand to be corrected—that there was agreement that this bill would be debated—

Hon Mr Stockwell: No.

Mr Crozier: The House leader said there was no agreement. It was my understanding that there would be no vote on this bill tonight. We have four speakers who still want to stand and speak to this bill. If you, Speaker, feel that the weight of this bill, the importance of this bill, deserves that kind of consideration, and in fact if the proponent of this bill, the member who introduced this bill, who's going to be given the opportunity to speak, feels this bill is that important, I suggest that we should continue debate on this bill until the clock runs out this evening. There is lots to be said. There are views on all sides of the issue to be heard. I think it's important enough, Speaker, that we should continue debate on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: I appreciate the input from all the caucuses. I'll give the last word to the sponsoring member, the honourable member from Waterloo-Wellington.

Mr Arnott: I've listened with interest to the debate that's taken place in this House. I think we've now debated this for about two and a half hours at third reading. As some of the members on our side have said, it has been an interesting debate. I've heard previously many of the comments that members who oppose my bill have brought forward tonight in the two meetings I had with firefighters' union representatives, one shortly after the bill was introduced for first reading, if my memory is correct, before second reading debate took place, and also when the professional firefighters had their lobby day.

I did listen to the two days of public hearings we held at the standing committee on justice and social policy. In fact, at the subcommittee meeting I proposed that three days of public hearings take place. I recall that the member for Niagara Centre did not support me in that request. He thought two days were sufficient. So we had two days of hearings.

Mr Kormos: You've got the majority on the committee, Ted.

Mr Arnott: Well, I was looking to you for support, and I was surprised you didn't support a third day of public hearings, because I was for public hearings. I was certainly prepared to have groups that were opposed to the bill come forward and speak to it, and I wanted to—

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I want to say to the House leader of the third party that I made sure this House was dead silent when you spoke, given the importance. Now you're going to do the same thing for this honourable member. Please keep your remarks—no, you don't have a point of order. Take your seat.

Mr Kormos: I apologize.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for responding in that fashion. I know I won't have to get up again. Sorry for the interruption.

Mr Arnott: It is correct that there was an amendment when we did clause-by-clause on the bill. The amendment was in order in the sense that it was entirely consistent with the purpose, the thrust and the general principle of the bill. It captured the very same end result, which is what I'm trying to do, which is to provide employment protection for double-hatter firefighters, those being full-time professional firefighters who also wish to provide their volunteer services, in most cases typically in a small town in which they live nearby.

I would submit to you, Mr Speaker, that there has been considerable debate here, two and a half hours of debate. I think all three parties have had an opportunity to engage in that debate. We've heard from members of our caucus who don't support the bill. I certainly haven't stood in the way of their desire and interest to have the chance to speak to the issue. My good friend the member for Kitchener Centre spoke to the issue and said he kind of complimented me. I really appreciated that, because that is better than no compliment at all.

The member for London Centre has at least had the opportunity to speak to this. He has an interest in speaking to the bill, but he wants to be in a situation where he can perhaps register his vote. That's what we're working toward at this point: getting to the point where there will be a vote. I think perhaps it's time. I'm not sure what more I can add to this, but I'm certainly prepared to vote on this bill, as I have been since the beginning of the night.

The other point I should add is that the bill is two pages, if you include the English and the French translation—two pages. It's pretty straightforward, and I think all the members have had a fair chance to take a look at it and understand its contents.

The Acting Speaker: Unless you have something urgently new and earth-shattering for me to consider, which of course you would think it is—what a silly way for me to put it. I'll give you a moment to make the point.

Mr Crozier: And I'll be very brief.

You know, I thought there was honour in this place. I may be naive, but I really did believe we were going to debate this through the rest of the evening. It's 9:30 in the evening. There are members of this House who are all over this city, God knows where, and all of a sudden the minister calls a vote on this. Frankly, I think the honour in this place has gone down a notch if that's what we're going to deal with tonight.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. I know emotions are running strong, but this place is going to operate the way it should.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. It's my understanding—

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: Do you know what? If you say one more word, you're leaving.

It's my understanding that there is not a lot of precedent with regard to this kind of motion as it affects private members. I take the point that the member from London West has made that there may be a little more weight than usual to this particular ruling. Giving due regard to that, I would like to take a 10-minute recess to review the points that have been made, and I will return with a ruling. Therefore this House will recess for 10 minutes.

The House recessed from 2135 to 2147.

The Acting Speaker: First of all, let me thank all the members for their interest and providing me with their thoughts.

I realize that the rules don't really provide for whether or not there's a free vote. Technically and philosophically, every vote in this place is a free vote, but it has been declared as such. We haven't done that an awful lot. I've allowed that to weigh in my decision to some degree.

The test is meant to be whether or not the rights of the minority are being denied in allowing such a motion to be put. The difficulty in this case is that because it's a free vote, we not only have division of opinion and thinking from all caucuses but from within all of the caucuses and, quite frankly, it's virtually impossible to identify where the majority is, to then be able to determine who is the minority and whether or not their rights are being infringed or not.

I also take into account the fact that this is an extremely controversial issue. There have been a little less than three hours and only nine out of 103 members have yet had a chance to speak.

Therefore, at this point it is my ruling that the motion will not be put and I'm going to rule it out of order. Debate will continue. The floor is now open.

Mr McMeekin: Mr Speaker, let me first of all compliment you on your ruling. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this bill.

At the outset, notwithstanding what happens to the bill, I want to applaud all members of this House who from time to time bring private members' business here, and in this case particularly my colleague opposite from Waterloo-Wellington.

I want to make it clear also from the outset that I'm not here to demonize or to blame anyone. I'm certainly not here to cast any bad light on full-time professional brothers and sisters, nor part-time professional volunteers, nor the fire marshal, nor municipalities. In fact, I want to say that I respect the training and the expertise and the courage and the commitment that all firefighters display every single day as they put themselves in harm's way.

That said, as a former mayor of a great municipality that experienced, unfortunately, the rigors of an all too anxious government wanting to move forward on amalgamation, I wish it hadn't come to this. This wasn't a problem before amalgamation occurred, and it's become a significant problem, as my colleague from Brant indicated, since.

I want to say also that while no one is particularly guilty, everybody is responsible for the mess that we're in. I also want to say, by way of backdrop, that I appreciate the fact that in the two years I've been here, this is probably the first issue that we've had any real debate on. We use closure so often around this place, one would almost be led to the belief that everyone has sort of sanitized views on everything.

This is a complex, emotional issue. I know that when I was growing up mom used to always say that "decisions between good and evil are easy" and I suppose in today's context, were she still here, she might say—if I can get my own colleagues' attention, that will be helpful—that except for the Oklahoma bomber, we all want to be on the side of the angels. She always went on to say that it's decisions between competing goods that are difficult, and in this case perhaps competing rights.

This issue involves public safety, it involves individual rights, it involves union rights and, I suppose, potential changes to the way labour relations are done in this province.

Historically, volunteer firefighters have played a vital role in the delivery of fire protection services in Ontario, especially in rural areas. In fact, I don't know if you know this, Mr Speaker, but 95% of Ontario fire departments are either volunteer departments or have a volunteer component. So it pains me somewhat personally, having served as the mayor of the wonderful town of Flamborough and having seen full-timers, two-hatters, whatever you want to call them, and committed people, along with committed volunteers, working so well together, to see this sort of thing happen.

You know, we in the town of Flamborough had a wonderful situation going. I can tell you that when we did the task force on comparative municipal taxation, we looked at nine different municipalities in our area and 16 different services. I'm disappointed to say that the city of Hamilton and those who were pushing amalgamation might want to just make a note of this: in every single case, the city of Hamilton, as I recall, had the highest per capita cost for each and every one of those services except one, and that service was firefighting in the wonderful town of Flamborough, which scored the least cost per capita, and I would argue the best investment any municipality of the nine had made.

I suppose when all is said and done there's no service that's more important to municipal ratepayers than the assurance—and I think my colleague from Ottawa spoke to this quite eloquently a few moments ago—the assurance that their homes, their property and their loved ones are properly protected. In Flamborough that wasn't a problem. We had a nice arrangement. In urban areas that were growing fast we brought in a full-time complement, and in rural areas we had the composite department, which included some of the two-hatters. We never, ever wanted to put ourselves in the position where somebody with the training and the expertise would have to stand at the end of a neighbour's driveway and say, "I'm sorry I can't help put out that fire or save somebody in that house because I've got a union problem." You know? That didn't happen as long as we were on our own.

I've heard a lot of arguments here. It's almost like pointing the finger at who to blame. You know, blame municipalities, blame the fire marshal, what have you. I want to say for the record that some of us have been working at trying to get this issue resolved for well over a year without success. I'm not surprised that the fire marshal, who had a lot to say about this, had difficulty getting it resolved. By the way, for the record, the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs also noted that they didn't think there was a resolution. The firefighters' association said they didn't think there was a resolution. The Association of Municipalities of Ontario also joined in saying that this was a non-resolvable issue that required a legislative response. The honourable member opposite who is sponsoring this bill has heard that and brought that properly forward.

This issue of rights keeps coming up. I believe that unions have certain rights. Mr Speaker, we've grown up together in that wonderful labour town of Hamilton. I don't have a problem with that, but I do have a difficulty with the idea that in every case there's a sacrosanct right as contrasted with other rights. I think individuals have rights. John Stewart Mill, the father of ancient and modern-day liberalism, spoke and wrote eloquently about individuals having certain inalienable rights. The right to make choices would have been one of those. So I would point that out to some of my colleagues.

Municipalities have rights. They have collective rights. I want to suggest that virtually every group in this province that represents municipalities, from AMO to ROMA, the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, to OSUM, Ontario Small Urban Municipalities, have all come out very strongly in favour of this bill, as have the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs, which, I want to note, represents the full-time composite and volunteer administrative levels of the Ontario fire service from the fire protection and prevention education management perspective. Currently, the OAFS has approximately 600 members representing over 400 fire service organization across the province. Their membership is comprised of full-time departments protecting some 55% of Ontario's population; composite fire department—a combination of full-time and volunteer members, protecting some 30% of the population; and solely volunteer fire departments, representing approximately 15% of the population.

The Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs was one of the stakeholders looking seriously at the issues that came forward, and this includes big city chiefs, little city chiefs—big chief, little chief, right?—from all over the province. Their board was unanimous in support of Bill 30. To their credit, they didn't feel it went far enough. They felt that this was such an important issue that they actually called a general membership meeting, which occurred recently, because they were so concerned about the public safety aspect related to this bill. Let there be no mistake: there are significant public safety aspects here. They had a vote, and the vote was—and I confirmed this today after speaking to the president of the group—126 to 4 in favour of moving forward with this bill. Some of the fire chiefs who voted in favour of this represent the city of Toronto, the city of Mississauga and, I understand, the city of Hamilton. I stand to be corrected if that's not the case, but I'm told it is.

I think the concern centred to a large extent on the fact that two-hatters, who play such a significant role particularly in smaller communities, aren't just people who pour water on fires, as important as that is; they're people who, because of their training and expertise, have a very special role to play as people involved in trying to make a difference in their own communities with being training officers and, if I dare say it, confidence builders for some of the others out there who maybe are just wanting to get the training so they can be full-time firefighting professionals some day; I don't know.

But I know that in our municipality they were always people who, until recently, were looked up to and revered. That was a mutual feeling between the full-timers or so-called two-hatters and those dedicated other volunteers who serve.

The association of fire chiefs is one—the Association of Municipalities of Ontario strongly support Bill 30. I spoke with Pat Vianni this afternoon about this, particularly with respect to the rural communities that they and ROMA represent. I was told today—I didn't know this. Maybe the member from Waterloo-Wellington didn't know it either; I don't know. There's not much he doesn't know about this; apparently there are four times as many volunteer firefighters in the province as there are full-time professional firefighters—four times as many.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario see this very much as a right-to-work issue; they pointed that out. They've said, "You know, we've had promises, promises, promises about working this issue out and we just haven't seen the results." If we don't get it resolved, they believe, in this legislative framework that has been presented, very soon we're "going to have a much, much bigger problem on our hands." That's from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario.

For those who are standing up and quoting all this stuff about municipalities, you might want to bear in mind that AMO, virtually without any opposition, supports this, as does ROMA. Jean-Marc, you know all about the ROMA group.

The Ontario Small Urban Municipalities association feel that this particular bill is actually critical to municipalities, taxpayers and residents. They lament profoundly the resignations that they feel have been forced from many of the two-hatters, and they note with some real concern that the lifting of the moratorium on charges by the IAFF really didn't help matters. They suggest in a letter that was sent, I believe, to all members of this Legislative Assembly that it could literally cost millions of dollars to replace the expertise that will be lost unless we get this issue handled. They fear, I think quite legitimately, that public safety will be compromised if well-trained and experienced professional firefighters who want to make a difference in their own local communities don't have a chance to do that. I share that concern. We've received letters from some of the groups that I've mentioned.

In addition to that, the Ontario fire marshal, who is the chief fire officer for the province of Ontario, as I understand it, and who is responsible for ensuring that things are in place to protect communities and lives, has spoken out very, very strongly, as it turns out, in favour of Bill 30. He notes in his presentation to the committee which reviewed this that there was a long and very complicated consultation process. Yes, there was one official meeting that brought all the stakeholders together, but there was a lot of consultation before that with respect to prohibiting career firefighters from serving as volunteer firefighters. He noted that he didn't feel a negotiated settlement of the dispute was going to happen. In fact, I would say as an aside, obviously the professional association must have felt the same way, because they lifted their moratorium on charges. If you want to negotiate for an official negotiating task force of some sort to resolve it, the best way to show that isn't to go out and lay a whole bunch of charges. He notes that, and he notes a number of other things. He suggested in his presentation that no mechanism currently exists to allow any of the parties to bind their membership. AMO said this. They said, "We could make an undertaking, but we can't bind individual municipalities." The Ontario association of professional firefighters said the same thing: "We could make an undertaking, but we can't bind our locals." They couldn't guarantee their members would adhere to any particular arrangement.

He noted that things were very polarized and that there was no common ground—his words—for a non-legislated solution. He concludes, and my colleague from Brant made some passing reference to this, "The sudden or phased withdrawal of two-hatters from communities dependent on volunteer fire departments could significantly impact on their ability to provide an adequate level of fire protection and may in some cases pose a potential serious threat to public safety...."

Why? He pointed out several reasons. "There would be a loss of experience, leadership and expertise...." He noted, as the member for Wellington noted, that even one two-hatter can often make a difference in a small rural community. "There may be a reduced capacity for providing adequate emergency responses...." Potentially it would require increased response time, including the time to recruit and train either full-time or part-time new firefighters.

He noted that if this bill were to fail, not only would it "create a potential serious threat to public safety," but, he said, "There is a provincial and public interest in protecting two-hatters who wish to serve as volunteer firefighters. We do not believe that a non-legislated solution is achievable or enforceable. As a result, without a legislated solution, the existing tensions and uncertainty in the fire service community will continue, and the high potential for two-hatters to resign as a result of OPFFA constitutional enforcement activities could well result in significant public safety concerns arising."

This is our fire marshal. He says it's his "understanding that such protection is not uncommon in most jurisdictions in Canada and the United States," another interesting tidbit of information that I think we should remember. He says in closing that he supports "first and foremost the need to develop a legislated solution"—I'm assuming because of his previous statement about the impossibility of finding a resolution to the presenting problems—"that clearly protects the interests of public safety. It is important that career firefighters who wish to serve as part-time or volunteer firefighters in their home communities are permitted to do so without fear of loss of employment."

In conclusion, I've had a great deal of difficulty finding a lot of people, other than a few union leaders, who actually oppose this bill. AMO supports it, ROMA supports it, OSUM supports it, the Ontario association of police chiefs supports it, the Ontario fire marshal supports it and most of the public I speak to in my riding support it. Both local newspapers—the Hamilton Spectator and the Brabant chain—have written editorials in support of it. As I've spoken to full-time firefighters in the various departments in my riding, many of them shook their heads. So I intend to support this bill and do so—

Mr Kormos: How come Mr Levac doesn't support it?

Mr McMeekin: You'll have to ask Mr Levac that. I intend to support the bill and I do so because of a long tradition of standing in affirmation of individual human rights and the Constitution we have in this country.

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): I'm pleased to participate in this debate. I want to say at the outset that I too regret the fact that we're debating this bill, because I certainly would have preferred to see a negotiated resolution of this. I am fully convinced that had the matter been handled differently from the outset we wouldn't be here today talking about a piece of legislation that effectively is going to force the rights of individuals in this province to prevail, and that is to do with one's own time what one chooses. In this particular case, it's to serve a community as a firefighter.

I think where the matter went wrong was when letters started to go to people in my riding who were serving in the capacity of a volunteer firefighter. When these letters were brought to my attention, I was shocked. I could not believe that in the province of Ontario individuals were being threatened with the loss of their permanent employment because of an activity they chose to participate in, in their community, as volunteer firefighters. I just could not believe that in Ontario we would have people worried about their livelihood, that they would lose sleep, that their families would be upset that the breadwinner of that home would perhaps lose their job or have to resign from something they feel compelled to do to serve their community.

I first saw those letters before I ever heard from my colleague with regard to this bill. I took the matter up with Bob Runciman, the Solicitor General at the time. I said to him, "Something is very wrong. I can't believe this is really happening. Is it happening? Tell me, is this happening elsewhere?"

Eventually I found out that in fact this was a province-wide concern. My immediate reaction was that there has to be something wrong here, that we must already have something in legislation in this province that would prevent this from happening. I could not believe there wasn't already some form of legislative protection in regard to this kind of intimidation taking place.

What I found out was that every other profession in the province indeed does have that kind of protection, but firefighters don't. So once again I thought, how could previous legislation not have covered this off?

I continue to get calls from constituents. My riding takes in Richmond Hill, the town of Whitchurch-Stouffville and part of the town of Markham. We have a unique situation in that community, where Whitchurch-Stouffville is largely dependent on volunteer firefighters. Interestingly enough, the town of Markham at one time was fully looked after by volunteer firefighters as well. As the town of Markham grew, as the tax base expanded, there was a need for full-time firefighters, and the town of Markham is now fully full-time firefighters.

I think there's a natural evolution that is taking place in our province and it's taking place in most of our communities, and that is, as the community grows, as the tax base expands, as there is the economic ability to put in place permanent and full-time firefighters, the municipalities do so, and they do so because they know it's the right thing, the responsible thing to do.

I think what's happened in this particular situation is that the association has somehow got ahead of that natural evolution that is taking place, and for their own reasons, which I frankly believe are misguided, have taken it upon themselves to try to accelerate that natural process that allows municipalities to put in place a full-time firefighting unit. I believe that we have a responsibility in this Legislature to take a time-out here and say, "Wait a minute. We're not going to allow this to happen to people in our province, to men and women who want to make a choice to participate, to support, to help their communities through their part-time activities." For that reason, I will be supporting this legislation.

When the firefighters were here, two weeks ago now—we have many of them here, and I'm glad they are, because I think it's important that they hear this debate. I think it's important that they understand what motivates some of us, and I trust at the end of the day the majority of us, to vote for this legislation. In the discussion that I had with the firefighters who came to see me I explained to them that I'd prefer that this happen some other way, that there would have been a more appropriate way of dealing with this, but I also explained to them at the time that there's still room, I believe, for this matter to be resolved. I hope that we can.

A proposal that I put forward at the time was that if in fact the bill comes to the House, I will vote for it, and if it does get passed, which I believe it will, there is still an opportunity for our government to deal with this negotiating process that is being suggested. My advice was not to proclaim the bill and allow for some time for the parties to come back to the table to work out a resolution. If in fact that doesn't happen, and if we can see that there is a standoff, that for some reason the matter can't be resolved that way, then the government has the ability to proclaim the bill and legislate the resolution.

From that standpoint, I'm saying I will vote for this bill, because I don't believe that we as legislators can stand by and have individuals in our communities in any way threatened. I've seen the letters, and so for someone to say that this isn't about threatening—I'm sorry, it's in black and white. I don't believe that as legislators we have the right to allow that to happen. I will support the bill, but again I say that I think there's some opportunity here for the parties to come to a resolution. I think it's important that they see that this government will not allow the kind of intimidation to continue. That's a signal: get on with doing the job of negotiating an appropriate settlement. But in the context of that settlement, what we have to understand is the rights of individuals, is the need of communities across the province. Honourable members have made reference to that, that not every community in this province can afford to take on full-time firefighters and that there is a role that individuals can play.

With regard to some of the rationale, some of the reasons that have been given me as to why firefighters shouldn't be performing volunteer work—that they're too tired, that it's inappropriate after working a shift that they would go elsewhere and perform some of these services—the reason those do not ring very true to me is that I personally know a number of firefighters in my community, in my riding, and I know they carry on other part-time occupations. That's just a fact. I suppose if that is the rationale firefighters are using to say their colleagues should not participate in other part-time activities as a firefighter, then perhaps what they should also be prepared to do is to say that from this point on in time no firefighter will have any other engagement—no other part-time jobs, no other part-time businesses—because they won't be in any condition to work if they happen to do some other form of business.

Mr Levac: It's not the same.

Hon Mr Klees: The honourable member across the way says that it's not the same. Well, let me tell you that I don't know if it's not the same, because whether you're building a deck or whether you're putting on an addition or whether you're working in carpentry or whether you're cleaning driveways with your front-end loader, these are all things that take time; these are all things that you have to be awake to do, my friend. If you have the ability to do other part-time jobs, why not do something that you have been trained to do, that you have the ability to do, that you can show leadership in doing? Many of these firefighters take the time to train individuals, other volunteers, within the community.

I was at a function in Whitchurch-Stouffville where we were honouring volunteer firefighters in the community. There were young people there who were volunteers. They were being trained to be volunteer firefighters within their community. I spoke to two young men who got their start in the volunteer firefighting capacity in Stouffville being trained by so-called double-hatters who have now gone on to be full-time firefighters in the town of Richmond Hill.

I spoke earlier about a natural evolution that takes place. Tell me what's wrong with that. I think it make ultimate sense. And what we have to do in this place, I think, is just understand. We have to understand that perhaps when this debate began there was much more to it than simply ensuring that people are awake when they get on the job and that perhaps it's too hard on them to carry on as volunteer firefighters. I really believe there was more to it than that. I'm confused at the same time by some of the debate that has gone on this evening.

I've heard from members of my own caucus who are arguing against this bill, and what confuses me is that some of that debate—I won't make a specific reference, but anyone wanting to look up Hansard would know that there are individuals who are arguing in favour of this bill who quite frankly at some other time and place in this very Legislature have stood up and have argued and debated in favour of a so-called right-to-work bill that was tabled here in this place, which, by the way, I supported as well. There's a principle at stake here, and the principle that is at stake here in this debate is, do people in this province have the right to work at a job that they choose to work at without intimidation by a union, by an organization, whether that be a political party, whether that be a labour union, whether that be an association? I happen to be in favour of the right to work, and I'd prefer we were debating a right-to-work piece of legislation in this place.

Hon Mr Klees: I knew that would evoke some form of reaction from members opposite. I fully appreciate the NDP, because philosophically that's where they stand and they have never wavered from that.

I happen to believe that in a free society we should have, as men, women, young people, residents, citizens of this province, the right to do as we choose without intimidation. And at the core, I believe, of this legislation is that principle. Had the members of the association of firefighters taken, as I said at the outset when I began this debate, the approach on this in a much more logical and rational and I believe civil way, then individuals like myself would actually be taking a different position here, because I would believe that they intend to resolve this issue. Having said that, I believe I have to take a stand on behalf of the constituency that I represent. I was approached by the mayor of the town of Whitchurch-Stouffville, I was approached by firefighters from the town of Whitchurch-Stouffville and I was approached by firefighters from other jurisdictions who expressed to me that they feel that in the province of Ontario they have lost some of their freedom. That's a sad commentary for our society. I don't believe that anyone in this place would want to stand by and allow that to be said about this province. I honestly believe that upon reflection the firefighters in this province also don't want to go down that road. I would think that upon reflection they would want to be sure we had a settlement of this matter, that they can work side-by-side with their colleagues, that they can look at each other and respect each other for the choices they make. That's what this is really about. I respect you as a brother or a sister, and I respect you for who you are as a professional. I respect you so much that I believe you have the ability to say, "I can do this. I'm prepared to put in another three or four hours for my community, and I'll make the decision, in the interest of my community and in the interest of my fellow firefighters, that I will ensure, when I do show up to my permanent job, that I'm in a condition to do so, and I'll conduct myself accordingly."

Let's not rob individuals in this province of their own self-respect. That's effectively what we're doing when we're telling our firefighters, when we're telling our neighbours, that they can't make those choices. It's about making choices. It's about doing the right thing. It's about respecting each other. It's about ensuring that in our communities we understand the limitations that communities have. It's about understanding that eventually many of the communities that are in this fight right now will have full-time firefighters because of the natural growth of those communities. But in the meantime, between now and then, let's ensure that we are working harmoniously together. Let's ensure that we understand what is truly at issue here. I believe that at the end of the day, by passing this legislation, we will send a signal to both parties that in this province we have choices, we have freedoms and we respect each other. That's really what it's all about.

We've had the opportunity to debate this bill. I want to commend my colleague for bringing it forward. We've had the opportunity to debate this at some length—unique, in the sense that as a private member's bill we have had some three and a half hours of debate. I believe it's in the interest of the people of this province that we all have an opportunity to cast our vote, and I would ask that the question now be put.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Interjection.

The Speaker: I believe it's back to the Liberals in the rotation, and then you.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I'm really happy to have the opportunity to debate this bill this evening, because there's some question about how much debate we should be having. I am especially happy to have this chance, first of all, to talk about firefighters. When I think of firefighters, I usually don't distinguish between firefighters who would be volunteers in communities and firefighters who are full-time firefighters, because in my mind there's really no distinction. These are men, and in some cases women, who put their lives at risk every day, and they do so to keep all of us safe and to protect us. In my opinion, they deserve the greatest respect and consideration. I've thought about this particular issue at great length and tried to consider as many as possible of the issues that have been presented to me, both by constituents—people within my riding—and by people within the profession for whom I have the greatest of respect.

I want to make reference to a comment that was made by the Minister of Tourism. He indicated it was his hope that there could have been a negotiated solution to this issue. I think many members on all sides of this House want the same. Ideally, rather than have an issue that pits one good group against another, we would like to see the two sides come together and work out an agreement. This legislation will prevent that from happening. Sadly, it will create a rift within our communities, a soreness that need not be there.

I also want to mention the fact that when this bill was at committee, my colleague Dave Levac, the member for Brant, put an amendment. I have a copy of the amendment here. It basically stated that before the bill was proclaimed, a committee of representatives of both volunteer and full-time firefighters would be struck, and they would meet on a regular basis to debate and discuss the outstanding issues. Sadly, and for me quite puzzling, this amendment was defeated by government members. In my opinion, it speaks to the point that was raised by the Minister of Tourism. It would have provided a vehicle for both parties to come together to try to hammer out a resolution.

One of the comments made in the debate this evening was around the issue that volunteer firefighters who were full-time firefighters and would be volunteering their services received letters that made very clear to them that if they were to continue doing what they were doing, that would put their job at risk. They were worried about their livelihood, and I'm sure that is not to be desired. However, I would remind the members of this Legislature that, yes, they're worried about their livelihood. But I have had the opportunity to speak to firefighters, and they tell me that their issues are equally, if not more, serious, because they're worried about their lives. They're worried that they're going to get called to a fire and that the person in front of them or behind them or beside them, someone they're depending on to assist them in this very, very dangerous role, may have been volunteering in their community and came to work after that activity and was not really able to give the 110% that every firefighter in this province gives when he goes on a call. That's what I heard from firefighters, and I think it's a fair concern to be worried about their lives.

I spoke with a gentleman who came to my office, and I visit a number of volunteer fire services in my riding. The equipment alone that they wear can weigh over 80 pounds. I can't imagine that if you were out on a volunteer experience—in my riding, volunteer services are now out fighting forest fires, something they didn't do before, and they're fighting day and night. If a firefighter has been involved in that kind of activity and then gets called in to work, carrying this 80 pounds of equipment, I think it's a legitimate concern that these people may not be at their best, at their peak, where they need to be for the other people on their team who are working with them.

I was also very interested—I listened very intently—when the member sponsoring this private member's bill asked a question in question period of Mr Runciman, the Minister of Public Safety and Security. Mr Arnott asked the minister, "Will you support this bill?" I did want to understand from the minister what his position would be on this matter. Surprisingly, and I invite all members in this Legislature to review Hansard, I don't believe the minister supported it. He didn't not support it, but when a government member asks a minister a question, I believe that if the minister wanted to say he supported it, he would have on that occasion. Whether or not the minister will support it I think is a question, and it gives me cause to wonder if this is good legislation when the minister would have some problem giving it an unequivocal vote of confidence, and I know there are other members of the government as well.

It's not a partisan issue, and I don't think it's a rural-urban issue. From my perspective, it's about public safety. I know some of the members this evening have talked about the many groups that have supported the bill. One of the groups is AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, certainly a group to be respected. But I couldn't help but note in one of the more recent communiqués they have sent to their members that their concern is that if Bill 30 is not passed, there could be a significant cost impact on municipalities across the province, as many may be expected to replace two-hatters with full-time firefighters. What disappoints me about this communiqué is that I have not read anything that speaks to public safety and what must be considered to ensure that the public is safe, and not just the public but that our firefighters are safe as well when they execute their jobs. For me, that is something worth noting.

I want to talk about my riding, Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, and the kind of fire services we have there. We have literally hundreds of volunteer firefighters, who do an excellent job. I've witnessed their dedication and their ability first-hand. There isn't anything like a fire to attract people, to draw a crowd; if people see smoke and fire, they come to the fire. I have always been impressed with how well served we are by volunteer firefighters in rural Ontario and most definitely in Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. I have only one full-time service in my riding, and that is in the community of Napanee. Also, because of the nature of this issue, I thought it was important that I understand, that I investigate, how many two-hatters are in my riding. If this bill passes or fails, it's important for me to understand the impact it will have locally. I have to say that I was surprised—not necessarily disappointed and not necessarily delighted, but just surprised—that of the hundreds of firefighters in my riding there is one two-hatter. I'm given to understand that this two-hatter has a very good working relationship and an understanding of what's at stake with this very bill.

I also think it's very important to remind ourselves here and to have it stated in the record—I think it has been already, but even for those people who would be listening to the debate this evening—that when we talk about volunteer services, I think people have an idea in their minds about what a volunteer is in our communities. If you volunteer for the Canadian Cancer Society, the Kiwanis Club, the Rotary Club, it means you spend a great deal of time and put forward effort in very valuable areas, and you don't get paid to do that; you do that out of the goodness of your heart because you want to assist your community. When we see our neighbours or friends or people in our community in a situation where they need help, our immediate reaction is to go and do what we can to help them. I think initially volunteer firefighters were just that: they were volunteers. They were not paid for their efforts. However, today in Ontario that is not the case. I am not in any way suggesting it's not appropriate that volunteer firefighters be compensated for putting their life at risk to save my property and my life; I'm not suggesting that at all. But I think it's important to note that when we speak of volunteer firefighters, they are compensated; there is compensation for what they do.

We then have to consider how many other workplaces would allow their employees with whom they have a contract to go out and do the same kind of work for another company. In the public sector, for example, I know that many school boards have in their collective agreements that if you are a teacher with a board, you are not allowed to go out and teach for another board or another private company. That would not be accepted. Here we have a case in point where full-time firefighters who are paid for that also go to another service and volunteer but are paid for that work. That does bring about an inconsistency in terms of application of our labour laws. Should the bill pass, what's appropriate in one labour setting will not be consistent in another labour setting. In fairness to all the workers in the province of Ontario, we need to pay some attention to that particular issue.

With regard to where we go from here, I continue to maintain that the best solution for this issue is for the minister to strike a task force to bring all parties of this debate together at a table and have them hash it out: "What are all the issues?" "What are your suggestions?" "What are yours?" "How can we make this work in the province of Ontario?"

I believe the amount of goodwill on both sides of this issue is immeasurable. However, this kind of resolution is certainly a weighted consideration, where it would appear that one side is going to come out the winner and the other side is going to come out with less than what they had before. I can't think of a group who deserves that less than our firefighters.

I have actually written to the minister on this very issue and have asked him, given the very divisive nature of this bill, to consider establishing a task force. I think it's absolutely essential that we try to work collaboratively, that we show the people in our communities that we believe that's the best way to achieve a resolution to a very complex issue. I certainly hope the minister will exercise the regard that he has at his cabinet table. He is certainly a veteran of this Legislature. I know he is very respected by members on this side of the House; absolutely he is on his side of the House. I hope the minister will take the opportunity that I believe is before him right now on this issue to set up such a task force and invite both parties—both full-time firefighters and volunteer firefighters—to the table to talk about ways that their outstanding issue can be addressed.

I want to commend all of the people who have written to me, to my office, to explain both sides of the issue. Families and friends and members of our communities have taken great interest in this and have taken a great deal of time to have everyone here understand how important it is. They have done a very good job to educate the people in this place. Sometimes I think we are really quite isolated here. While we do a lot of reading and think we have a lot of the background, it really isn't until we read the letters and meet people face to face that we gain a real appreciation for the issue.

For me, this is not a rural-urban issue. It's not a partisan issue. It's about what you think is the right thing to do. For me personally, while I appreciate that two-hatters do provide benefits to the communities they serve—the benefit of their knowledge, the benefit of their expertise at bargain-basement prices, as it were—I also appreciate and understand how for municipalities this is a good deal they have going and don't want to lose it. On the other hand, the important issue for me is the safety and well-being of professional firefighters, a group of people that I think—in fact, I can't think of a profession that is held in any higher regard.

If, with the position I hold and why I am here, I could leave this debate with an image of why I will be proud to go back to my riding and say, "This is how I voted on Bill 30"—we all remember the horrible images of September 11; we will all have those etched in our minds. For me, one of the most poignant is the story of those people who escaped the tragedy. They talk about running down the stairs and the difficulty they had running down because the firemen were running up the stairs. They were running toward the danger; they were running to help people without regard for their own well-being. That's the image I have of professional firefighters. They are the people who have come to me and have said that this bill could have an impact on safety in their workplace. So I'm very proud this evening to say that I will stand for those people, for the men and women like the people who were running up the stairs in New York.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Oh my God.

Mrs Dombrowsky: I really thank the Minister of the Environment for his—it sounded like a note of approval there.

In any case, I am delighted that I've had this opportunity to make my point around Bill 30. I certainly hope that whatever the outcome is, the two communities will be able to come together eventually and live with the decision that's made in this Legislature.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I'm pleased to be able to participate in this debate because this is quite controversial legislation, legislation that, were it to pass into law and be implemented, would I believe create an even more difficult situation out there in many communities across the province.

Let me say at the outset that I think there are a number of myths that need to be exposed with respect to this legislation. You might know, Speaker, that earlier in the year I spent some time travelling from community to community in a bus talking about hydro. But sometimes, when you got to communities, members of the municipal council would want to come and talk about some of the other issues that were on their mind. This was one of them. So while I was travelling around out there, across Ontario, there were a couple of myths I heard associated with this legislation that I immediately want to dispel.

I had some municipal representatives say to me that if this legislation does not pass, it will mean the end of volunteer firefighting. To those people out there who are under that impression, let me say clearly and categorically that that is completely false. This legislation will not do anything for volunteer firefighting, and if this legislation fails, it will not hinder volunteer firefighting in any way. In fact, professional firefighters across this province support volunteer firefighting and have been very supportive of volunteer fire departments.

The other myth out there is—as you know, some firefighting services across the province are composite. You'll have some members of the firefighting service who are full-time firefighters and then you will have, working alongside them, the volunteers. I had some people say to me, "If this legislation doesn't pass, it will be the end of composite fire services." That is also false. I say to those government members who want to propagate that myth, go out and engage in some of the discussions, because this legislation will do nothing for composite services, and if this legislation fails, which I believe it should, it will not in any way negatively affect composite fire services either.

What is really the issue here, from the prospective of New Democrats, first and foremost is this: some government legislation mandates that there needs to be a certain level of fire service provided. One would think that if the government mandates certain levels of fire service, the government would then step into the responsibility and ensure that adequate funding is provided so that municipalities, no matter where they are, can provide that level of fire service. Alas, that is not happening across Ontario, and that is a big part of the problem here.

What has many of us concerned, and it concerns us more and more all the time is that this is very dangerous work, as we all know, maybe some of the most dangerous work people undertake in the province, so we want to ensure that we take every measure to ensure that the members of fire services are adequately protected in terms of health and safety while they work, but we also want to ensure that a community can depend upon the fire service they're purported to receive.

I want to deal with a historical example, the very serious ice storm in eastern Ontario a few years ago. The city of Kingston has a professional fire service. Many of the rural municipalities surrounding Kingston do not have a professional fire service; they have volunteer services. Many of those surrounding municipalities in fact were using double-hatters. Firefighters who were employed on a full-time basis with the city of Kingston fire service would then work as double-hatters with some of the surrounding municipalities. The ice storm strikes, creates major chaos across eastern Ontario. What does the city of Kingston do and what does the city of Kingston fire service do when faced with a very serious problem—electrical lines down, trees falling down etc? They recall and bring into service all of their trained, professional firefighters: "We've got an emergency situation here. We need you on the job." That was good for the city of Kingston and that was good for the people of city of Kingston, that they were able to assemble all of those professional firefighters to do the work necessary.

But in the context, what happened to the surrounding rural municipalities when suddenly some of those double-hatters that they were depending on weren't available? What happens to the level of their fire service? What happens to the quality of their fire service? What happens to the protection of life, limb and property in those surrounding rural municipalities? To the degree that double-hatters were depended upon to provide the leadership and to provide the direction for volunteers in those surrounding municipal fire services, to what degree was the health and safety of those volunteers who no longer had the double-hatters there—because they had all been recalled by the city of Kingston—compromised?

That I think is a very serious historical issue. And before any government or private member puts forward legislation, I think we would want to have a very thorough examination of the kinds of scenarios that happened in Kingston and the surrounding municipal areas, because if you're purporting that a given rural municipality or small urban municipality is going to have a certain level of fire service by using double-hatters, but then we get a very serious fire in the immediately adjoining urban area and all the double-hatters are recalled and are not available, then really aren't we telling people a bit of a fib in terms of the quality of their fire service? Aren't we putting them at risk?

We're telling them, "Oh, don't worry. You've got a fire service here," but as soon as an emergency happens in the adjoining urban municipality, that fire service in that rural area is suddenly full of all kinds of holes and cracks. Does anybody in this Legislature think that would be acceptable, to tell people, "We believe you've got this level of fire service, but gee, if an emergency does happen in the adjoining urban area and all of the doublehatters are recalled, I guess you don't really have that quality of fire service"? In fact, not only do you not have that quality, but you don't have the numbers either, and you don't have the expertise. I would think that before anyone here entertains voting for legislation which could be the accomplice to that kind of situation, we'd want to think about it very, very carefully indeed. I believe quite strongly that there ought to be a deeper analysis of what's going on here.

Think about it from another perspective. Imagine if it's a small rural municipality adjoining, say, a city like Toronto or Hamilton or London, and a full-time firefighter who happens to be a double-hatter spends a great deal of time fighting a very serious fire in the urban area, but then immediately, when he or she goes home, is called out to work as a double-hatter because a situation has arisen in the rural municipality. He or she is tired, stressed, quite possibly exhausted from having undertaken the duties which are part of their responsible professional job, but now they're purportedly going to exercise professional judgment or the required statutory judgment in fighting something else. That's a health-and-safety risk to their colleagues, not to mention once again putting the life, security and property of those people in that rural municipality at risk.

Or the reverse example: someone who is a double-hatter is called to a fire situation in a rural community or a small town where they work as a double-hatter and they work for many hours, but then they're called in to an emergency situation where they also work as a full-time professional firefighter. It's a very serious and dangerous situation. What about all of their colleagues who need to depend upon them in that very critical situation? What about all of their colleagues who need to know that they're at the top of their effort, that they're well rested, that they're able to work and to provide a service and can be counted on at a certain level? Isn't that putting their health and safety at risk and potentially putting the lives, the security and the property of citizens who may be depending upon them at risk?

I've heard some of the government members talk about this as freedom, simply a case of freedom. Well, I've been around long enough to know that freedom carries with it some responsibility, and if someone signs on to do a full-time professional job where other people's lives and security are at risk, not to mention the colleagues they work with—their health and safety is at risk—then there is some responsibility that comes along with that job and that undertaking. People, the citizens, have a right to expect that that responsibility will be met, not just some of the time or not just at this level, but all the time and at the appropriate level. That's really what is at stake here. I don't believe we can go around the province and say to people who live in smaller towns or in rural municipalities, "Oh, you're going to get this level of fire service. Don't worry; this level of fire service will be provided, and it will be provided through the utilization of double-hatters," and then see all too often the kind of situation that happened in Kingston, where because of the severity of the ice storm the double-hatters aren't available and too many people are left with what is in effect a skeleton fire service that cannot provide the level of protection, that cannot provide the level of security and cannot ensure the health and safety, never mind of citizens but of other volunteer firefighters who have to be called into the breach.

This legislation is not going to do anything in terms of protecting or enabling volunteer fire services. It's not going to do anything in terms of protecting or enabling or enhancing composite fire services. And I don't think it's really going to do anything to address the kind of scenario that we saw happening in Kingston or that we could see happening in a number of urban and rural or urban and semi-urban regions around the province. The problem is really much deeper than that.

As the professional firefighters' association has said, they approached the Minister of Public Safety and Security and asked that an independently facilitated task force be established to investigate the impact of two-hatters within fire services, to look at what was the impact in Kingston. Has the government studied that? Did the government look at, for example, how people in those rural areas that suddenly were deprived of a number of the firefighters that they believed they could count on—did the government look at the public reaction, how the public felt? Has the government looked at those scenarios where a firefighter who has a full-time professional job, after working in that job and perhaps answering a fire call, then has to answer in another emergency situation with the volunteer service in very close timeline proximity? These are real issues, and they're real issues that affect people's lives, could essentially be potential life-and-death issues that affect the working health and safety of other firefighters. I would think that the government would want to address this issue very seriously in terms of looking at the actual real-life situations, in terms of looking at the potential conflicts and in terms of looking at how serious some of these outcomes could be. I would think that would be a government responsibility. For a private member to advance a bill without having any of that evidence, without having any of that analysis, I think is really an even more serious problem.

So I know I speak for all of my colleagues here. We cannot and will not support this legislation. There is too much at stake, far too much at stake. A number of issues here need to be thoroughly examined through a task force or through a commission. A number of issues here, after thorough examination, need to be discussed from the perspective of what needs to be provided for smaller towns in semi-rural areas, what level of resourcing, what level of training, what level of expertise. To offer up that somehow allowing double-hatters is the solution to all the issues that need to be addressed, the questions that need to be asked and the scenarios that need to be analyzed is giving very short shrift to, as I say, some very, very serious problems.

So we will be opposing this legislation, we'll be voting against it, and I would urge a number of the colleagues here from the Liberal Party to oppose it as well. I know some members of the Conservative caucus are going to oppose it, again for many of the reasons I've had this opportunity to speak about this evening.

I just want to say a few more words about the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association and the international. We had a number of meetings with representatives of the professional firefighters, who said to us that there is a number of ways this could be approached. If the government simply parked this legislation and brought forward the study and did the kind of analysis that a task force would be prepared to do, that would be a very good step forward. Then there would at least be an opportunity to debate, to discuss the real issues in terms of, how do you best protect the health and safety of firefighters, not just professional firefighters but volunteer firefighters? How do you ensure that not only rural areas that have a full-time professional firefighting service receive the quality of fire protection they need but also that the smaller towns and surrounding rural areas receive adequate protection as well?

That's what the professional firefighters are actually asking for, that instead of what they see as a hot-button, venerated attempt to cover over the issue, there really needs to be that thoughtful analysis, that thoughtful examination. If that thoughtful analysis and examination that could happen through a task force were to occur, then some real solutions and some real possibilities in terms of solutions could be brought forward.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I have watched most of the debate tonight on this bill, Bill 30, and I have to say from the beginning and the outset that it's a very, very difficult and complex issue. It has been described on each side as being kind of a rural-urban issue, it has been described as an issue of union versus non-union, and it's anything but. In my view, it really is the case—I have to relate it. I think each member here, regardless of which party they're affiliated with, has to represent the needs of their community. I've met with the chiefs, I've met with regular forces in the professional firefighters, some who are at this time double-hatters, some who are opposed, against. Even when I read more recent communications from the current president, Fred LeBlanc, I see that he has wrestled with the issue as well. I have to quote a memo from October 1, 2002.

"Attention all members of the OPFFA re: moratorium on secondary employment charges." Fred goes on to say in the memo:

"I must commend all our affiliates, as collectively we have acted in good faith and with the utmost professionalism.

"Past president Henry Watson, in February of this year, requested that our locals respect a 'moratorium' for any new charges regarding our members who were two-hatters.

"I supported past president Watson's position at that time and carried that same position and request upon my induction into the presidency of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association (OPFFA).

"We have attempted since February to have serious and thorough discussions on the reliance of two-hatters within Ontario's fire service with all stakeholders. These discussions were intended to identify how many two-hatters there are, where they are located and if there was a serious threat to public safety upon their withdrawal of service."

I can't help but think of small towns throughout Ontario, and most of Ontario is small-town. Clearly it's no problem in larger urban centres like the cities of Toronto, London, Ottawa, Hamilton, indeed Oshawa in my own area. It's clear that they have the resources to grow to be a full-time complement, as they should be and as everyone would want. That would not say for one moment that any of the volunteers—I believe they're mandated to have a certain level of training in safety and rescue and other procedures with respect to the very, very difficult work they do.

I can't help but think, and I want to put it on the record, that in my riding of Durham, I have part of the city of Oshawa, I have the municipality of Clarington, and I have the township of Scugog; the most prominent city there, of course, is Port Perry. When listening tonight to all sides—very objectively, I might add—I can't help but say that I think most clearly of the difficult but necessary decisions that Doug Moffatt, the mayor of Scugog, has to make. I can tell you, the town of Port Perry is a beautiful town that has a very large rural area, is what I would say a very assessment-poor community in terms of having any large industry. It's mainly dependent on small business and on rural farm businesses. I think of Ken Carruthers. I also think of other town councillors. I know personally that one of them is or was a volunteer. I also think of the municipality of Clarington, with Mayor John Mutton; I might say that I was at the council meeting earlier this evening. The regional councillors there of course are Jim Schell and Charlie Trim, and I know they, like me, are concerned that the level of service that we have in our community is very much dependent on volunteers.

I can say to you, without any reliance on input from others, that Bill 30 has caused me a great deal of anguish, because I really believe that at the end of the day it's about a level of service. In fact, it's our own government that prescribed certain levels of service. That 10 in 10 issue hasn't really come up directly, but there are a couple of regulations that we're responsible for implementing and strengthening the requirement to have 10 people in 10 minutes. That's the fundamental issue here. The fundamental issue is that fire service is paid from the local tax base.

I think of firefighters, whatever their definition is—professional firefighters, whether they volunteer in their off time or not—as real people. I think of them as my neighbours. So it is a really gut-wrenching kind of decision.

It's very healthy for us in public office to be forthright with our constituents. I could avoid the discussion totally, but I think it's important for us to be honest with the people we try to represent fairly.

I've listened to the leader of the third party. I understand that the code name for the NDP is the union government, and I don't try to describe that as a negative. I think it's important for people to have rights and protection of those rights.

In this case, I think of the case a lot of speakers have mentioned: September 11 in the United States. Professional firefighters, trained people, were more than anxious to go and try to provide support, volunteer, if you will, because they're called to it, as one of the speakers said earlier. I believe there is a part of this where by the very nature of risk and reward they are called to it. I really believe there are those who have been in for a few years who may not have that engendered in their character, that they seem to be the first people on the scene, the first people to render support, and I commend them for that.

In any of my remarks, I have nothing but the highest regard for any of those persons who put themselves at risk, who put the community or the individual before themselves. I can't say enough about that. I think of them very much like my son, who served in the armed forces as a captain on the Sea King helicopters. Much of what he did was volunteering, to the extent that it was duty first. But they put country before self, and in this case firefighters put the community before themselves. So in any of my remarks I would not cast a disparaging remark. I support volunteer firefighters.

The issue here is, what's volunteer? Is that paid service or does it mean you have "professional training" and you work somewhere else? That's a very complicated issue.

I want to be on the record as supporting the professional firefighters. I support professional firefighters like Doug Tennant. Doug is in the chamber here. He's the vice-president of the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs. Doug of course is the vice-president to Fred LeBlanc, who is in the same memo that was quoted here earlier from the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association. So I know how they've wrestled with it.

I'm quite surprised, actually, when I've listened to the speeches all night—in fact, I made a deliberate effort to come back tonight to participate—by the member from Prince Edward-Hastings because, not unlike my own riding, he would have what I would describe, without being disparaging, as an assessment-poor area, by and large, with the exception of maybe Belleville, where they probably would have a full-time fire complement and they would be supplemented by volunteers who have other jobs. That could be anything from working in one of the local companies or indeed working in the capacity of a firefighter in some other community.

I drive this down to real people I've met more recently, on the last couple of Fridays, in my constituency office. Graydon Brown is one example of a fellow who has I think 25 or 30 years of service as a captain, a professional firefighter.

Mr O'Toole: Where does he volunteer? He volunteers in Newcastle; he volunteers in Orono; he volunteers where his neighbours live.

If it's so prescriptive by some constitutional issue with their contract that they can't volunteer, what is that really saying about the whole thrust I described earlier, as these people are drawn to a very high-risk profession and they have the training to help their neighbour? I think it would be dreadful if somehow, politically, we disengaged them from that innate desire to volunteer. If they don't want to volunteer, no one is forcing anyone to volunteer. That contradicts the description of a volunteer.

So I would really like to say that I would prefer that we have a negotiated solution. In my area, I know that the call-back issue—I support that as the first response. I know that our mayor of Clarington, John Mutton, has recently put an ad out and put in his budget that he's going to have enough money set aside to train the volunteers who may not have the training that double-hatters would. Obviously they wouldn't have the training. They'd need to have not just CPR and all of the other rescue and jaws of life and all of the things they do, and the training and equipment they need to know how to handle to work effectively as a team, to not put their peers at risk. I support that as a solution.

I would prefer that the association was able to find a negotiated solution. I can only say that this can be voted on as third reading and not be proclaimed law, which would give them time to come forward and remove those parts that are going to disadvantage the current full-time members of their dutiful employment. For members who have been professional firefighters for a number of years, it's a tragedy to think that they would have to give up their profession, let alone work in some irritating way with their peers.

Even in Whitby, in Oshawa and in Clarington, many of the people, I said earlier, from Port Perry—Port Perry's fire service is completely volunteer, and I commend them. Many of them are volunteers who work at other things, but many of them are volunteers who work for York and other areas. Now they're being put at risk because of some—pardon my hard edge here—kind of union language. That's the only problem I have. I think people need protection. The Employment Standards Act and other acts should provide those assurances that people have a balanced relationship with the employer—in this case, it's the municipality. The real employer is the taxpayer.

I have to say that in my riding—it's about 50% rural, 50% urban—I can't think for one moment how they could instantly ramp up to providing a complete full-time fire service. It's my understanding that if it's a 10-people-in-10-minutes rule, that to have 10 full-time positions, you would need, to my understanding, 50 people, because for seven days a week, 24 hours a day at 365 days a year, it takes five people for every full-time position. To man a truck with four on it, do the numbers:

it's $100,000 for one truck. If it's 10 employees, that's $500,000, and on the tax base, that's a 5% or 10% tax increase.

Mr O'Toole: Ask the taxpayers in your community, I would say to the member from Brant. This isn't strictly about that. I think it's clearly a case of providing opportunities first for volunteers and secondly for other people who choose to do it without someone intruding into their personal decision. I believe that they do work hard and in a dangerous environment. I would prefer that at the end of the day, people have free choice without having to be fired. I would prefer that people not be pressured in some way to exercise anything more than their contract of employment requires them to do.

I think that the municipal councils try to match their deployment of resources with the resources available. Again, I think it's unfair to try and characterize this as a comparison between Port Perry and the city of Toronto.

I would like to repeat myself a little bit by saying that it goes back to the very fundamentals of the free spirit, the individual person, with the right, and anything I can do to engage the freedom of the individual is extremely important. I think, Mr Arnott, perhaps this has become probably one of the more difficult issues that most people have dealt with in this House. I don't think there's much pressure on the NDP. Clearly, Wayne Samuelson gives them a call and says, "That's how you vote." But on the Liberal side I know there's a lot of anguish. I know there'll be a bloc vote over there. You mention the word "union," and finished—that's the end of the question.

What we're trying to find is a reasonable solution to a very difficult human problem.

Mr Parsons: Then let them find it.

Mr O'Toole: Really, I'm surprised as I speak that the member for Prince Edward-Hastings—I'm almost embarrassed for him actually, because I think that if he thought about his community first—that's the people who elected him to speak for them. I think he's being whipped on this vote by Dalton McGuinty. I honestly do. I feel that clearly the people on the other side—I think the member from Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington—a relative of mine in part of her riding, Bancroft, called me on the weekend and said they were just absolutely amazed. This is a fact. I'm trying to give you fair warning to vote with your heart. Vote with the people that sent you here. This is not about voting against firefighters. There's no one in this chamber that would vote against firefighters. I want to bring some reason to the debate. I believe, and do support, that municipalities at the end of the day and the elected councillors who pay the bill are in the best position to make the decision.

Mr Parsons: Because you're not paying a penny.

Mr O'Toole: The member from Prince Edward-Hastings has absolutely no clue. I listened to him earlier tonight about the training and the commitment to the college. He is actually doing his community a disservice. In fact, for those who are up this late at night, people like James Gilchrist from Peterborough, perhaps, a fellow I've spoken to recently—I believe that the members on the other side and this side should vote how their communities are trying to send them.

Interjection.

Mr O'Toole: Yes, Mr Mazzilli would like to have a word, if that's possible, under this rotation.

Interjections.

Mr O'Toole: Well, they don't want him to have any word because the member from London-Fanshawe is very concerned on this issue, having served as a police officer for some 20 years, I believe, before he came here.

I don't want to leave on a negative note. I believe in the principle of a free vote. I think it's causing many members—and I don't mean it disparagingly—on both sides of the House, with the exception of the NDP; Wayne Samuelson made up their mind for them. I think the key here is, let's have the vote but let's keep in mind that I want the professional firefighters to resolve this issue internally. It's been in their constitution for 20 years. I can't understand for one moment why they are listening to the larger international union, which is trying to make this into an issue.

Give the member for London-Fanshawe a chance to speak. He needs to be on the record. I've got a minute left and I'd be happy to share it with him.

Mr O'Toole: They won't permit him to speak. They've shut him down, which is something I've been trying to do for years.

I go back to the basics of the right for people to make choices, the right for volunteers to not feel intimidated. I can only say that we need volunteer firefighters in our communities so that we have the level of service that people expect. I know how difficult it is for municipal people to make the decisions, to make sure they have the level of service they need. I don't see this as in any way a political juggernaut on either side, but I do believe a free vote will certainly be an interesting vote. I myself have been anguishing on this because I know people who are concerned about it on both sides of the issue. But I think that at the end of the day I'm voting with my municipality and I'm voting with the people of Ontario. I believe it's the right thing to do—support Mr Arnott—and, Mr Speaker, I think this debate has been beneficial, although it is getting quite late.

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I'm pleased to participate in this debate. We wouldn't be debating this bill if someone or some municipal fire department hadn't tried to discriminate toward firemen who try to render service to a rural community. At the present time, we have what we call in the rural sector "mutual aid." If this bill doesn't go through, I'm afraid that the mutual aid will close, that it won't be in operation any more.

Mutual aid was put in place to try and help out municipalities in the rural sector, such as whenever there's a major fire in a neighbouring municipality, firemen from the next municipality would go out and help those people. They would make sure they kept at least two firemen at the fire stations from which the fire brigades had gone to the next, neighbouring community to help out with a major fire.

When I look at this bill, I just can't understand why at the present time we're trying to eliminate those firemen who go out in the rural sector. Most of the time those firemen live in a small rural community. They have a full-time job. In my area, the Ottawa region, Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, I have 10 fire brigades or departments—I am not including the city of Ottawa—that are part of my riding. In most of those municipalities that I approached—I talked to every fire department and they told me, and I have the letters of support here, "Jean-Marc, this bill has to go through; otherwise we will be in deep trouble." Why are they saying this? Because at the present time small rural municipalities cannot afford to have full-time firemen.

I have one letter that comes from the township of North Glengarry: "As mayor of the township of North Glengarry, I strongly urge you, on behalf of council and the entire community, to give your full support to the above-noted legislation." That's Bill 30.

Next I've got the township of Alfred and Plantagenet: "Please be advised that the council of the township of Alfred and Plantagenet, at its meeting held on November 18, adopted resolution number 2002-425 to voice its support of the adoption of Bill 30." That is one.

The next one is the Ontario Small Urban Municipalities Association. They're asking us to support the bill. Then I've got, "I am writing to you in my position as captain of the Kemptville fire department to request your support for Bill 30, the Volunteer Firefighters Employment Protection Act." That's another municipality.

The town of Petawawa, which is not in my riding: "Whereas the town of Petawawa and many small municipalities who cannot afford a full-time professional fire department are the beneficiaries of the expertise and these same professional firefighters are at an affordable cost; and...."

I have many of those letters. At one time, when I was mayor of the town of Rockland and the population was 8,000, the services those firemen were rendering to the community were irreplaceable. I remember one night, New Year's Eve, we couldn't find the problem. Only the firefighters were able to find the problem. Otherwise we would have been in a crisis position.

At the present time, all the municipalities surrounding the city of Ottawa have professional firefighters working full-time in Ottawa. They are the ones who offered us the service. In return, the municipality said, "We need you in our community. You people have got the proper training, training you received while being a permanent firefighter. This could render a lot of service to our community." Also, those firefighters working full-time for the city of Ottawa come down and work in the rural sector. Let's say, if we have a barn fire, then that is experience they would acquire working in the rural sector. Ottawa is the city with the largest number of rural and agricultural areas, and we need those professional firefighters in those agricultural areas.

When I look at all the notes I received from different fire departments, I can tell you that at the present time, with the downloading we have experienced, there is no way we could afford to have full-time firemen. This is the beginning. By having this bill defeated, it would turn around and say that from now on—I remember when I was the mayor. The fire marshal used to come to my place and say, “Mr Lalonde, I think you need full-time firemen for a population of 8,000.” No, we didn’t need it. We had good, trained professional firefighters as volunteer firefighters.

Do you know how much those volunteer firefighters are getting paid? All they’re getting is $14 or $16 an hour. This is reported on their T-4. Those firefighters working full-time very often have a side job, and it’s paid under the table. I’ve seen this many times. When they say it is risky to work for another fire department, let me tell you, when I see a fireman working in Ottawa full-time coming down to spray your lawn with pesticide, isn’t that dangerous for the health of this firefighter?

Also, in most of the small municipalities, most of the time it’s 25 volunteer firefighters; they make sure they have at least 20 of their firefighters working locally. Let’s say there’s a major disaster in Ottawa and they are called in to go and help their colleagues in Ottawa, they would let them go. They still have 20 firemen down there to do the work as firemen. I’ve been trying to find out, when do we get a major disaster in a major municipality that would say that all the firemen, even those off-duty, would be called in? Probably during the ice storm we had to get them all in. But try to tell me when this would happen. We have enough firemen in every fire station to cover off, and even those who are off-duty could be called back in. If one of their firefighters is working in a small rural municipality, let me tell you, they have a professional job to do and they would go and help out their colleagues in Ottawa.

At the present time, how many of them declare sick one morning because they were working on a side job and couldn’t report for their regular duties? That would never happen. The same thing as this gentlemen who came to me: he got a six-month suspension, working for a major company. I asked, “Why were you suspended?” “Well,” he said, “I was scheduled to start at 8 o’clock. I reported I was sick and they caught me working for a mover.” He got a six-month suspension. It should be the same for the firefighters. If you’re not there on your regular duty and you perform other duties in other municipalities, any other type of duties, if you don’t report for your regular shift, you should be disciplined because of not reporting properly.

I can’t believe this Legislative Assembly cannot support this bill. Let me tell you, in my own town, the volunteer firefighters were getting the same benefits as the regular employees. They were part of the union. They were part of the insurance plan. I strongly believe that anyone who is working as a volunteer or as a full-time firefighter should be covered by health insurance. They should have special coverage because they’re performing firefighter duties. They should also have a pension plan at any time. No matter the number of hours that they’re working, they should be part of a pension plan.

While I was the mayor of the town of Rockland for 15 years, I sat on the AMO board of directors for 11 years, nine years of which I was on the municipal development committee. On that committee, we had the services of professionals from the cities of Ottawa and Toronto who could come down and help out the small municipalities. That’s what this bill is saying. The firefighters from major municipalities would be allowed to continue, as they do at the present time, doing some volunteer work in their own communities. It’s because they enjoy living in that community and they want to render a lot of services to the community.

Just to come back to mutual aid, I remember a few years ago, going back probably 10 or 12 years, one fire department from a municipality didn’t want to go to the neighbouring community because they had said that this community had not contributed to mutual aid. But, again, they proved that all municipalities in eastern Ontario should be part of mutual aid because we could not afford to have full-time firemen. Also, by adding this mutual aid agreement, we could expect to receive those services from the neighbouring municipality.

But, again, I will definitely continue supporting this bill. I also have a letter here from AMO. AMO is saying, “These two-hatters, as they are sometimes called, provide leadership and experience to rural and remote communities who rely on their skills and expertise to supplement local departments. Without these skilled and dedicated volunteers, municipalities would be forced to hire new workers with less experience and training. The estimated property tax increase would be in the area of 16% to 20%. We cannot afford this type of increase in our municipal taxes.”

Mr Speaker, going back about three months ago, I read in the Ottawa Citizen that the little village of Osgoode was short of firefighters for a major fire. I don’t know if it is your riding or John Baird’s riding.

Interjection: John’s.

Mr Lalonde: John Baird’s. When I read this story, immediately I got back to my office I noticed why they could not find enough firemen to respond to the major fire they had within the municipality. It’s because they had some firefighters who were working for the city of Ottawa and they were told that if they were going to give that service as volunteers in their own communities, they would be suspended and probably lose their jobs.

Hon Mr Klees: That’s shameful.

Mr Lalonde: It’s a real shame, yes.

I’d just like to read the contents of the bill in French:

« Pas de représailles à l’encontre des pompiers volontaires

« 56.1(1) Nulle association de pompiers ne peut prendre de mesures disciplinaires à l’encontre d’un

membre qui est employé contre rémunération dans un service d'incendie au seul motif qu'il travaille également en tant que pompier volontaire.

« (2) Nulle association de pompiers ne peut refuser de représenter une personne qui est employée contre rémunération dans un service d'incendie ou de lui délivrer le statut de membre au seul motif qu'elle travaille également en tant que pompier volontaire.

« Protection des pompiers volontaires

« 56.1(1) Malgré toute autre disposition de la présente loi ou toute convention collective, nulle association de pompiers ne doit, directement ou indirectement, exiger qu'un employeur prenne une des mesures suivantes pour un motif énoncé au paragraphe (3) :

« 1. Refuser d'employer quiconque en tant que pompier.

« 2. Licencier quiconque en tant que pompier.

« 3. Refuser d'affecter quiconque à la fourniture des services de protection contre les incendies en application de la présente partie. »

This is why at the present time we are debating this bill. We know that there are some municipalities that have told their firefighters, "If you do work as a volunteer firefighter, you are subject to suspension and to disciplinary action. This would mean if that neighbouring municipality needs some additional help, you're not allowed to go. You could let the house burn completely and we won't allow you to go and render that service." I wonder, if the volunteer firefighters were doing it as free, whether the action would be the same.

At the present time, once again, I do believe in a pension plan. I do believe in a union for firefighters. But in this case we are trying to allow volunteer and permanent firefighters to come and help out small communities. Again, I will support this bill.

Mr Kormos: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Can we have unanimous consent for that same member to have another 20 minutes?

The Speaker: There are two up there. The Minister of Northern Development.

Interjection.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): No.

Mr Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity. I know other colleagues wanted to speak—

Mr Frank Mazzilli (London-Fanshawe): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Since I didn't have any time to speak, I want to make it clear that I will be opposing this bill for many different reasons.

The Speaker: I thank the member, but the Minister of Northern Development has the floor.

Hon Mr Wilson: I do appreciate the opportunity. I thank the member for London-Fanshawe for allowing me a very few moments to speak.

This is a very important bill for my riding, even with those fire departments that are mixed full-time and part-time, like Wasaga Beach. I was asked by the chief and a number of firefighters on Friday night at a public function in front of a lot of people to support Bill 30. I want to thank Ted Arnott, the member for Waterloo-Wellington, for really a number of months now of hard work in bringing this bill forward. He's been tenacious and he's to be congratulated. No matter what side of the issue you're on, Ted has done a great job in bringing this to this point.

To me the issue is an issue of freedom. I don't think any of us have the right to tell people what to do on their days off. When I first heard of the bill, I didn't know much about the issue, but the fact of the matter is that the principle hit me right away. I didn't take a lot of time deciding this. I think it's the best bill that I've had an opportunity to vote on. It truly shows that I'm a Conservative. I believe in freedom. If firefighters and everyone in this country and province aren't fighting for freedom, I don't know what they're fighting for.

The fact of the matter is that people have to be free to do what they want on their days off. No association, no government, no one should have the right to say what to do outside their normal working conditions. I wouldn't want anyone telling me what to do in my life in that sense, and I don't think others would either. I can't believe that all full-time firefighters who are members of the association now are in any way totally opposed to this bill. Many independent thinkers must see some relief in this bill that the union can't tell them what to do outside their regular working hours.

Firefighters are responsible people. They've been in this practice, in volunteer service or working full-time, in our case in a more urban setting, and then helping out when needed in their communities, helping out with training and fighting the fires and adding a level of expertise to our volunteer forces that is appreciated. It's not always needed, because we have very professional volunteer forces that are well trained, but it is appreciated and they bring an expertise to the table that wouldn't be there in some cases.

Recently we opened an extension of the Markdale fire hall. Again, the chief from Durham came over. That's not even in my riding, but he made a special trip to make sure that I was on side with Bill 30. As I've said to them all from the very beginning, "It's not a big problem for me, in that it's a question of freedom, a question of your rights as an individual in this society." At the end of the day, if this bill doesn't pass, I can't believe that this won't be resolved by the courts anyway. I just can't believe any association can tell you what to do. If you've got five days on and five days off, no one can tell you what to do in those five days off, as long as you are fit and ready for work when you are supposed to be at work and you live up to your collective agreement.

I have a mixed riding, in that I have a full-time fire department in Collingwood, and I've not heard from them on this issue. I've heard from every other municipality in my riding, whether it be Clearview, which is the former township of Nottawasaga, Sunnidale township, Stayner and Creemore. Great pride is taken in Clearview by that fire department. We just opened, a couple of years ago, a new station for them. If you look at Clearview or New Tecumseth—and by the way, the chief of New Tecumseth, which is Alliston, Tottenham, Beeton and the former Tecumseth township, spoke to me on Sunday. He's a fellow I went to high school with, Dan Heydon. He's the only full-time employee, and he was just hired full-time this year; there's a lot of administrative work as chief of New Tecumseth so the municipality hired him full-time. He's already told me that because of this kerfuffle and this nonsense that's going on, he has already lost two or three and could be losing his fourth firefighter, because they're people who work in the city now in their full-time job and then volunteer in Alliston and Tottenham and Tecumseth township and Beeton.

So it's already having an effect, and I hope this bill passes so it will put an end to it. I hope the parties come together too. Obviously there's some healing to do. I hope goodwill comes and that everybody is friends in the end, as we say. But my municipalities, with the exception of Collingwood, have all asked for me to support this bill. I have no problem in doing so.

Our firefighters in rural and small-town Ontario aren't just professional in what they do in fighting fires but are literally the lifeblood of our communities. They run our baseball, our hockey, our soccer—most of our recreational activities. They fundraise for numerous causes. They're there when you need them for all kinds of things, even Remembrance Day. I don't have Legions in some of my small towns, so it's the fire brigade that comes out and provides the parade and marches the colours with great pride. When they march those colours, they're marching for freedom.

Freedom is I why I ran for politics. Freedom is why we all should be here. It is why our ancestors and our relatives and our grandparents and our grandfathers died and fought in the wars. Our charter, which was brought in by another party than my own at the federal level, upholds freedom as its most valued principle in society. I think that has to be upheld in everything we do, whether it's in the workplace or our days off. As I said at the beginning, I don't think anybody has the right to tell you what to do.

Everybody has a second job in these days. I mean, there are lots of police officers in my riding—

Interjections.

Mr Arnott: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm about four seats down from the honourable member, my colleague. I can't really hear what he is saying because of the interjections from the opposition. Could you ask them to behave themselves?

The Speaker: Thanks. I appreciate that. The member is sitting very close. I've allowed some leeway. I would ask all members to—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Just a second; let me finish up. We'll allow the honourable member to continue.

Mr Mazzilli: On a point of order, Speaker: I would ask for unanimous consent to have one minute before turning it back over to the minister.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the member for London-Fanshawe to speak for one minute? OK. Then it goes back to the minister.

Mr Mazzilli: I want to thank all sides for the one minute.

There's a lot more to this issue between volunteers and professionals. The professional firefighters have never opposed volunteers. In fact, this is about part-time firefighters, and we have to understand that. When you belong to a professional association and you've been trained by a professional association, if you get in trouble and there's an inquest, who is going to represent you, the professional association or the volunteer one, with no backup support if you get in trouble? This is the difficulty we have with this kind of system.

I suggest that the municipalities in difficulty get together with the municipalities with professional firefighters and have hire-on rates, like police officers, where you hire on, through that municipality, the professional firefighters, and they are covered both through—

The Speaker: The member's time is up. The Minister of Northern Development and Mines.

Mr Bisson: Mr Speaker, on a point of order: It's rather sad, but I'd like to move unanimous consent to give Frank another two minutes. I know he had other things he wanted to say. He's been trying to get into this debate. Unfortunately, his members have not allowed him to speak.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? No. The Minister of Northern Development and Mines.

Hon Mr Wilson: I said no this time, Mr Speaker, because I would like an opportunity to speak myself. I'm a member of this Legislature too. As a minister, frankly, we don't get to speak out that often, and this is a wonderful opportunity to put something on the record that I strongly believe in. These guys get to speak all the time.

I will say to the member from London-Fanshawe that I'm sure the associations do a great job for their members. They are there to back them up, as is the police association, of which he was a former member, and that's great. Again, I don't think they have the right—they have to earn the right, if anything—to do that in our areas, where the association isn't prevalent now. Our firefighters are fully backed up by their municipalities. We went through that last year or the year before with an adjustment we had to make to one of our workers' compensation bills. We sat down with our firefighters and learned—I knew, because I've been around so long—that the municipalities back them up.

All I can say is that I haven't had firefighters come to me in my riding over the years saying they don't like the relationship with the municipality. They obviously have confidence in the people they work with and the people who try and provide them with the resources to do their job.

Our communities simply aren't going to survive without these people, and we should be upholding them. Causes like muscular dystrophy—

Interjection: Oh, come on.

Hon Mr Wilson: Well, if you live in my community, as I said, even on Remembrance Day parades have to be done by the firefighters, and they do it joyfully. They never complain. They don't come running to their MPPs about every little issue they have. They are professionals, professional in their daily lives. And you're damn glad to see them: there have been a lot of fires in my farm area, in my farm family, over the years and you're damn glad to see them when they show up. We should support them every step of the way and we should allow them to do what they want to do.

Mr Kormos: Mr Speaker, on a point of order: Children down in my constituency are watching this. Can he please watch his language?

The Speaker: I thank the member for his help. The Minister of Northern Development and Mines, please.

Hon Mr Wilson: I'm going nowhere fast here, at 12 o'clock at night. I appreciate the opportunity and I appreciate the hard work the member for Waterloo-Wellington has done. I hope members spend the next few hours not just sleeping but thinking about this issue, thinking about the fact that it is freedom and about the fact that—

Mr Kormos: Mr Speaker, on a point of order: I would like to draw your attention to the fact that it is 12 of the clock.

The Speaker: It isn't quite. We go by that watch. I'm a little bit ahead. It is not quite 12 o'clock.

Mr Bisson: Mr Speaker, on a point of order: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the great number of people in the gallery today.

The Speaker: Don't waste our time doing that. The Minister of Northern Development and Mines has the floor.

Hon Mr Wilson: It's just getting rude, is what it is.

Mr Kormos: I apologize.

Hon Mr Wilson: Thank you very much. Mr Speaker, it being 12 of the clock, I adjourn the debate.

The Speaker: This House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 2400.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Tonight at a meeting, the hand-picked supervisor of Elizabeth Witmer and Ernie Eves is going to recommend the closure of up to 11 schools in the city of Hamilton. This is in view of the fact that as we speak here today, a report is being released that is going to deal with the funding formula. It is the height of irresponsibility and arrogance for this government and for their hand-picked supervisor to go ahead with school closures while a funding formula that could fundamentally change the way we fund education in Ontario and possibly save those schools—I'm asking the government, through the minister today, to direct her supervisor not to proceed with these school closures until the funding formula has been put in place and the recommendations have been implemented.

Particularly affected, among others, is Lloyd George school in my riding, a small school in an industrial neighbourhood on Beach Road. This is not simply a school where kids go during the day; it's a community centre. It's a place where people meet at night; it's a gathering point. It is the heart of this community. I tell this government that if you close Lloyd George school, you'll rip the heart out of this neighbourhood, a neighbourhood that takes pride in itself. It's a small neighbourhood right in the shadow of the steel mills, but it's a neighbourhood that cares. Kids care about each other. The parents care about each other. It is a school where the community comes together. It will be absolutely disgraceful if this government, through their hand-picked supervisor tonight, recommends the closure of Lloyd George school and the other schools in the city of Hamilton.

You're not closing schools; you're destroying communities. I ask you to wait. Wait until the funding formula is in place and make recommendations based on that. Don't do the irresponsible thing.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): It is an honour to invite all Ontarians to celebrate International Human Rights Day. Fifty-four years ago, the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Ontario has a proud record of leadership in protecting human rights. In fact, this year marks the 40th anniversary of the Ontario Human Rights Code, the first of its kind in Canada. The Ontario Human Rights Code mirrors the universal values of equality, dignity, tolerance and non-discrimination. Our respect for human rights underlies Ontario's success as a diverse, peaceful and prosperous society.

Governments have a clear responsibility to protect human rights. But for human rights to flourish, people must accept individual responsibility to uphold human rights in their communities.

This morning, Lieutenant Governor James K. Bartleman awarded the Lincoln M. Alexander Awards for 2002 to two outstanding young people for their leadership in eliminating racial discrimination: Bikramjit Nahal of Dundas and Tamara McDonald of Thunder Bay. It's especially appropriate that this year's recipients be honoured on International Human Rights Day.

The dedication of these two people shows the ideals of human rights advocacy in action. Ontarians support a society where every human being is treated with dignity and respect. Let us continue to work together so that this new century will truly be an age of universal human rights.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): A major new crisis is beginning to confront the health care field, and that crisis revolves around the skyrocketing costs of insurance and the availability of insurance coverage in certain categories.

A prime example of this problem is being confronted by respite care workers in the Niagara Region, and likely in the rest of the province, who deliver this service in the homes of their clients. Last year, the service providers paid $52 each in insurance premiums to receive coverage. This year, it has been increasingly difficult for these independent workers to obtain coverage, and if such coverage were to be available, it would likely be at a cost ten times higher than that charged last year. Since those who hold these positions receive only a modest income, huge increases in insurance costs cannot be afforded by the workers.

Since the workers cannot be expected to absorb this dramatic rise in insurance premiums and the clients cannot sustain an increase in the fees they pay, both are looking to the Ontario Ministry of Health to increase its funding to this service to reflect these additional burdensome costs.

I urge the Ministry of Health to move immediately to provide appropriate funding increases and to work with the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services to enlist insurance coverage at an affordable rate for the workers affected. People in a vulnerable position look to the Ontario government to assist them when the need is great and their own ability to meet this genuine need is beyond their personal reach. I believe they need and deserve this helping hand from their provincial government.

BOWMANVILLE SANTA CLAUSE PARADE

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I am pleased to rise in the House today to pay tribute to one of Bowmanville's most enduring traditions, our Santa Claus parade. Whether it's a church group, a service club, a marching band, a business or a youth organization, they all come together every year for the parade.

These volunteers from across our community create an event that has delighted generations of children, as well as their parents, grandparents and indeed families throughout the municipality of Clarington in my riding of Durham. I should add that this is a non-commercial parade. You won't find advertising, even on my own float, and banners, because the objective is to create an event that is strictly for the community, with the possible exception of my Liberal federal member. Nevertheless, over 100 businesses are among the strong and proud supporters of the parade.

I can assure you the response each year is tremendous. Well over 10,000 visitors crowd the downtown streets to watch and cheer on their friends and neighbours in the procession. This year, our 41st annual parade was held November 16. It included close to 60 floats, bands and other entries. The theme was "Kids Are Christmas."

I would like to pay tribute to all those who made the event possible either by attending or by participating. Since it wouldn't be possible to name all the people, although I'd like the time, they include Valerie Gardiner, Sharon Smith, Roger Leetooze, Susan St. John, Valerie McCormick, Stacy Belanger, Greg Belanger, Betty Irving, Rob Flynn, Tammy Johnson, Terry Tzikas, Sheri Lusted and Marie Hammond. As usual, they did an outstanding job.

The Bowmanville Santa Claus parade unites our community like no other event. It shows that the community spirit is a very close neighbour of the spirit of Christmas. I'm pleased to say you'll find all of these spirits always in my riding of Durham.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): As my party's human rights critic, I am pleased and honoured to be able to rise today to say a few words on this, the 54th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Passed by the United Nations on December 10, 1948, 54 years ago the world gathered together to make a profound commitment to the equality of every human being in the world. This is a living document and is the first pillar of the 20th century's human rights laws and the cornerstone of the universal human rights movement.

1340

For all the changes the world has seen, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights remains at least as relevant and fundamentally important as it was on the day it was adopted 54 years ago. Its principles provide for all governments an ultimate standard, a measure of their legitimacy and their effectiveness in serving the best interests of their citizens.

Let us not think that the battle to protect and enhance human rights in Ontario is over. We have much to do for communities that historically have been on the margin and have suffered the tyranny of the majority in Ontario.

The quest for human rights and justice is a noble cause in its own right. But it is even more, for it embodies all the basic purposes of the United Nations: peace, justice and prosperity for all. I invite all my friends in this Legislature to celebrate our undying commitment to human rights for all.

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Over the last seven years, we've seen how the Tory obsession with tax cuts has steadily eroded the services we most value in our communities. Gutting services to give tax cuts to the wealthy has hurt many of Hamilton's most vulnerable citizens, especially those with developmental disabilities.

Contact Hamilton was created by the Ministry of Community and Social Services as the single point of service access for persons with developmental disabilities. They have over 100 children and adults on wait lists who need developmental services, including accommodation, respite care, vocational services and day supports. When future planning needs are included, the numbers rise to more than 500 people who need these services.

The biggest problem, apart from the lack of services, has been the complete lack of designated beds in Hamilton for those with developmental disabilities. This has hurt individuals like Joey, a young person with developmental disabilities who lives in our community. Back in October, when the government refused to recognize the shortage of educational assistants in Hamilton, Joey's caregivers were forced to try to find a respite bed for him. At that time, there were no respite beds allocated for adults with developmental disabilities, and Joey was bounced around from facility to facility because they could not meet his needs.

Hundreds more children and adults are not getting the help they need. If this government were to spend half the money on community services that it spends on consultants, this rapidly growing crisis would not exist. When will you stop hurting our most vulnerable citizens and allocate adequate funding for more beds and programs? It's time you treated those with developmental disabilities with the respect they deserve and the services they need.

DECORUM IN CHAMBER

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): As we approach the end of this session, it is appropriate to reflect on what it means to have the privilege of serving in this House.

In all Parliaments, we will always have different opinions, but we should be able to show consideration for different points of view. Healthy debate is a good thing. In recent weeks, though, there has been an appalling lack of respect for each other in this place. In my 18 years here, I don't recall ever having witnessed such an absence of decorum. Our poor behaviour is an insult to the public who are our guests when our actions go beyond different partisan opinions into personal attacks and poor language.

There are, of course, times when we do put partisan differences aside and come together with a consensus; for instance, on the reports of the alternative fuels and Legislative Assembly committees. When we speak with one voice, our collegiality is heartwarming. For instance, I wish to tell you how much it meant to my husband, Ken, and to me when all members rose last month to recognize our 45th wedding anniversary. May I thank you all for that; it was deeply appreciated.

I truly believe it is a privilege to serve our electorate and to act in a way that makes them proud of us. We should be demonstrating the respect and dignity that this hallowed chamber represents.

I would also like to convey my appreciation to the staff who support us: parking and security, maintenance, the table staff, Hansard, committees, broadcast and interpretation, library and research, administration and information systems, interparliamentary and public relations, and our personal and caucus staff. Without you, we could not do our work. Thank you and may God bless you all this Christmas and throughout the year ahead.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I arrived in my office yesterday to find another example of what I call the urban myth that the Conservatives are good managers. Amazingly, here we are almost at the end of the year, and what do we get but the government's business plans delivered to us. Frankly, if it were a company, it would be laughable. Here they are with three weeks to go in the year and they finally deliver the business plans.

Last week, the auditor—if it wasn't so serious, it would be funny—pointed out that many of the consultants they hired haven't even paid their back taxes. Half the corporations in Ontario not only are not paying their taxes, they're not filing their income taxes.

We found that the government laid off 40 people and within days hired them back at twice the rate. There was a consultant paid $725 a day in April, $1,800 a day in May and $2,100 a day in September. In four months, it went from $725 a day to $2,100.

The government tabled its economic outlook here. The interest cost right now is $700 million more than when they took over, in spite of interest rates dropping.

I say to the public of Ontario, another urban myth, that the Conservatives can manage the finances and the economy, is not true. Here we are, the business plans being presented to us virtually weeks before the year ends; the debt going up; the auditor almost laughing at the government, as I say, if it wasn't so serious. Again, it's another urban myth that needs to be dispelled.

BUSINESS AWARDS

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I rise today to highlight a special event held recently in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. On Saturday, November 30, more than 200 people gathered at the Jolly Roger hotel just outside of Parry Sound to celebrate the 105th annual general meeting and gala evening of the Parry Sound and Area Chamber of Commerce.

It was a great honour to participate in the annual business awards ceremony and to be on hand as the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, the Honourable Jim Wilson, delivered the keynote speech.

As a testament to the honour of receiving one of these awards, I would like to point out that there were so many nominations in some categories that the judges decided on a tie.

This was the case with the Entrepreneur of the Year award, which I had the privilege of presenting to two worthy recipients. The first winner of this prestigious award was Murray Orr of Orr's Fine Meats. The second recipients of the Entrepreneur of the Year award were Ted and Jocelyn Shipman, owners of E.A. Shipman Electric.

I would like to recognize all of the businesses that received awards at this year's ceremony. Ms Miranda Chivers received the President's Award for her work on various volunteer committees. The Whitestone Lake Resort owners and operators, George and Joey Deadman and Les and Pauline Love, received the Tourism Award for their outstanding efforts in growing tourism in the Whitestone Lake area. Mr Peter Kropf of Kropf Industrial Inc received the Industry Award for his commitment to the local economy.

I would ask that all members of the House join me in congratulating all the recipients of this year's awards for the dedication and hard work they provide to their communities.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before we begin, we have a special guest in the Speaker's gallery. Joining us today is Monsieur Jean-Louis Hérivault, Chef de Poste of the Bureau de Québec in Toronto. Please join me in welcoming our special guest.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ESTIMATES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Standing order 62(a) provides that the standing committee on estimates shall present one report with respect to all of the estimates and supplementary estimates considered pursuant to standing orders 59 and 61 no later than the third Thursday in November of each calendar year.

The House not having received a report from the standing committee on estimates for certain ministries on Thursday, November 21, 2002, as required by the standing orders of this House, pursuant to standing order 62(b), the supplementary estimates before the committee of the Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services, the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, and the Ministry of Training, Colleges and Universities are deemed to be passed by the committee and are deemed to be reported to and received by the House.

M. Gilles Bisson (Timmins-Baie James): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Monsieur le Président, je demanderais le consentement unanime de l'assemblée aujourd'hui pour passer en deuxième et troisième lecture le projet de loi que j'ai intitulé projet de loi 202 sur le traitement partiel des rapports officiels en deux langues. Comme vous le savez, il n'est pas toujours évident que les rapports qui sont écrits par les commissions sont donnés ici en français en même temps. J'aimerais être capable de rectifier ce problème en passant cette loi, et je demanderais le consentement unanime pour être capable de passer cette loi cet après-midi.

The Speaker: The member will know—I believe this is relating to the two languages in committee?

Mr Bisson: Unfortunately, far too often you have to do it in both languages to clearly get people to understand what you're doing. As you know, currently in the province of Ontario this Legislature operates in both official languages when it comes to laws and other documents that we deal with here in the Legislature. The problem we have is that it's not evident when it comes to commissioned reports that those commissioned reports are being tabled at the same time in both French and English. I have a law that I brought here to the Legislature earlier that basically would make it obligatory for commissions and other documents that report in the Legislature to report both French and English at the same time, and I ask for unanimous consent for that law to be passed here today, this afternoon.

Interjection: It was the wrong bill number.

The Speaker: Je comprends. The problem wasn't with the French; it was with the bill that you asked for. You asked for a bill?

M. Bisson: C'est pour avoir des rapports officiels en deux langues—202.

The Speaker: We're having trouble with that bill. That's the problem, not the language.

M. Bisson: L'habileté d'introduire et passer cette loi cet après-midi—c'est bien clair ?

The Speaker: If you're asking for unanimous consent, we need to—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Which bill? Quel numéro ? You don't know the number. Well, we can't very well ask, regardless of the language—

Interjections.

The Speaker: We'll continue; we'll try to work it out. Reports by committees?

STANDING COMMITTEE
ON ESTIMATES

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on estimates.

Interjection: What does the report say?

Mr Curling: Dispense.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Dispense. No further action is required.

VISITORS

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm sure all members would like to join me in welcoming the Barrett family, the parents of one of our pages, Michael Barrett, today in the gallery.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our guests.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CONDOMINIUM AMENDMENT ACT
(TRANSIENT TENANCIES), 2002
LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES CONDOMINIUMS
(LOCATIONS TEMPORAIRES)

Mr Smitherman moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 224, An Act to amend the Condominium Act, 1998 to limit the use of condominiums by transient tenants / Projet de loi 224, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1998 sur les condominiums afin de limiter l'usage des condominiums par des locataires de passage.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): The lack of clarity by members indicates that I should say this would not affect your right as parliamentarians to lease on a longer-term basis a condominium in downtown Toronto. But this bill does seek to limit a circumstance occurring whereby condominium owners, some of whom are in the gallery today, are living in their condominium units and the unit right next door is being operated with a different person in it every night, just like a hotel. This seeks to limit that practice.

M. Gilles Bisson (Timmins-Baie James): Sur un point d'ordre, monsieur le Président : Pour une raison ou une autre la table n'a pas ramassé la Loi 145, selon ce Feuilleton. So it's Bill 145, as printed in the Orders and Notices paper that is before us now.

The Speaker: The member is asking to proceed for second and third reading of Bill 145, An Act to amend the French Language Services Act to provide for the availability of certain reports in both English and French at the same time.

Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

ELECTRICITY AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'ÉLECTRICITÉ

Mr Lalonde moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 225, An Act to amend the Electricity Act, 1998 / Projet de loi 225, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1998 sur l'électricité.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): This bill amends the Electricity Act, 1998, to give municipal electricity utilities the right to purchase the distribution and retail operations of Hydro One within their municipal boundaries. Municipal corporations are also given the right of first refusal to purchase another municipality's electricity utility if the other municipality decides to dispose of its electricity utility.

Because of recent amalgamations of municipalities in Ontario, many hydro consumers in rural areas such as Ottawa, Hamilton, Sudbury and many others, are faced with higher electricity bills than those in urban areas. This bill will create a fair environment for all hydro consumers.

JAY LAWRENCE AND BART MACKEY MEMORIAL ACT (HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT), 2002

LOI DE 2002 COMMÉMORANT JAY LAWRENCE ET BART MACKEY (MODIFICATION DU CODE DE LA ROUTE)

Mr McDonald moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 226, An Act in memory of Jay Lawrence and Bart Mackey to amend the Highway Traffic Act / Projet de loi 226, Loi modifiant le Code de la route à la mémoire de Jay Lawrence et Bart Mackey.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I believe this bill will help save our youth from possible injury and death. I look forward to speedy passage of this bill.

FOOD SAFETY AND QUALITY AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA QUALITÉ ET LA SALUBRITÉ DES ALIMENTS

Mr Peters moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 227, An Act to amend the Food Safety and Quality Act, 2001 / Projet de loi 227, Loi modifiant la Loi de 2001 sur la qualité et la salubrité des aliments.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): This amendment to the Food Safety and Quality Act will allow the province to make good on its promise to the dairy farmers of Ontario more than a year ago. The repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act is set to take place in June 2003. Dairy farmers are prepared to accept the act's repeal with an extension to ensure that all regulatory frameworks are in place. The former minister, Mr Coburn, acknowledged the concerns of the dairy farmers regarding the lack of federal safeguards to ensure that products are labelled properly. The minister plans to remove reference to the June 2003 repeal. By moving the repeal deadline to June 2005, all stakeholders in the industry will have the necessary time to collaboratively ensure that regulations are in place that adequately protect not only the dairy industry but consumers as well as stakeholders from the edible oils industry.

Mr Speaker, I seek unanimous consent that this bill be called for second and third reading.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Yesterday it was brought to our attention that the sensitive lists for tax assessments that were made available to us for Toronto and Windsor are now not available for the other regions in Ontario. We're requesting that the government table those lists today.

The Speaker: That's not a point of order, but I appreciate your help.

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that notwithstanding the motion passed by the House on Monday, November 18, 2002, pursuant to standing order 9(c)(ii), the House shall meet from 6:45 pm to midnight on Tuesday, December 10, 2002, Wednesday, December 11, 2002, and Thursday, December 12, 2002, for the purpose of considering government business.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Stockwell moves that notwithstanding the motion passed by the House on Monday, November 18, 2002—dispense? No, they want to hear it—pursuant to standing order 9(c)(ii), the House shall meet from 6:45 pm to midnight on Tuesday, December 10, 2002, Wednesday, December 11, 2002, and Thursday, December 12, 2002, for the purpose of considering government business.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1403 to 1408.

The Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

2010 COMMONWEALTH GAMES

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): I seek unanimous consent move a motion relating to the 2010 Commonwealth Games.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Hon Mr Klees: This motion is seconded by the member from Hamilton East and the member from Hamilton West, I believe. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Hamilton bid for the 2010 Commonwealth Games has received the support of the Premier of Ontario, the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, the leader of the official opposition, the leader of the third party, and all Hamilton MPPs;

"Therefore, let it be resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario endorse and support the city of Hamilton's bid for the 2010 Commonwealth Games."

VISITORS

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I know that all members of the House will want to join me in welcoming our visitor in the gallery, the former mayor of Ottawa, Jim Watson.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I am pleased to welcome the members of ONEIA, the Ontario Environment Industry Association, to Queen's Park. I would also like to inform everyone that today is Environment Industry Day, and we are invited to a reception they are hosting between 5 and 7 today in rooms 228 and 230. I thank you for coming and I welcome you to Queen's Park.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Attorney General. Minister, you are no doubt familiar with the case of Gillian Hadley, the Pickering woman shot dead by her estranged husband, who was in violation of his bail conditions. An inquest into her death came back with some very specific recommendations. You have ignored most of them.

The jury specifically told you to keep those who are accused of violating their bail or probation conditions behind bars until trial. Today we learned that in more than half the cases, 58% of the time in Toronto alone, you are letting these men out to roam freely and potentially stalk, abuse and kill their partners.

Minister, spousal homicides in Ontario are on the rise. Instead of getting tough on these violent offenders, you are letting them walk away with a slap on the wrist. Why have you ignored most of the Hadley inquest jury recom-mentations and why have you abandoned victims of domestic violence?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I thank the member opposite for raising this important issue. Let me begin by saying that our hearts and our thoughts go out to the victims of these terrible crimes, and of course to the families, who continue to suffer each day.

We find ourselves in a situation, when these occurrences take place, where we do understand that we must do more. Indeed, what occurs when these terrible tragedies take place is that our resolve strengthens. We are very proud of the fact that as a government we have done more than our predecessors in Ontario and indeed we've done more than any other provincial government. But the fact that we are spending $145 million each and every year isn't enough. We understand that there have to be some changes made, and that's why we've called on our federal colleagues, the Liberals in Ottawa, to amend the Criminal Code to ensure that if an individual breaches their bail in a domestic violence case, they go to jail. I hope you will join us in calling on the federal Liberals to make that change.

Mrs Bountrogianni: We are the provincial government and we have responsibilities for the province of Ontario. If your definition of strengthening your resolve is cutting funding to second-stage housing, that's not much of a resolve, Minister.

Your record on domestic violence is one of abandonment and neglect. A study by the Women Abuse Council of Toronto shows just how little you care about standing up for victims for crime. Of those convicted of domestic abuse, 37% got conditional discharges, 25% had their sentences suspended and another 7% got off with some house arrest. Under your watch, only 20% of abusers serve any time in jail. That's your record on crime: 20% in jail. The rest just walk away.

We know from the Provincial Auditor's report that when criminals are let loose on the streets in Ontario you don't keep track of them. You don't enforce court orders. You just turn the other way. Minister, stand up and tell the women who are terrified for their lives why you refuse to protect them and put their abusers behind bars.

Hon Mr Young: Let me just comment on the questioner's statement that this is a provincial issue. When it comes to matters that are provincial issues, we're prepared to do whatever we can. The member's quite right to be asking questions about this serious issue, but by the same token, she must acknowledge that there are some issues that are within the provincial domain and some within the federal domain. She knows that when it comes to amending the Criminal Code, that is something that only the federal government can do. Instead of being partisan on this issue, she should join with us in asking the federal government to amend the Criminal Code in the way I suggested. That's the only point.

Now, in terms of provincial initiatives, I'm very proud of the fact that as a government we have implemented or are in the process of implementing in excess of 90% of the recommendations that came from the May-Iles inquest. We heard what the jury had to say. We are thankful for their assistance in this regard, and we are acting.

Mrs Bountrogianni: Minister, with all due respect, involving the federal government is not the only point.

With respect to the Hadley recommendations, a search on the Web site doesn't show anything in your women's directorate about any Hadley recommendations. All your talk won't protect a single woman from being abused. That will take real action. You've abandoned victims of crime in Ontario. You stand by and do nothing while convicted criminals roam our streets.

One way to protect women who have fled abuse is through second-stage housing, but you eliminated all of the funding for counselling and support services in second-stage housing that abused women relied on. You abandon the victims and take away their programs and you side with the criminals and let them roam free.

Dalton McGuinty has a plan to get tough on crime. He'll restore funding to second-stage housing and he'll make sure abusers stay where they belong, behind bars. We have a real plan to protect women across Ontario. If you won't stand up for victims of crime, then get out of the way and let Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals do the job.

Hon Mr Young: Rather than try and treat this very important issue as a political football, I would suggest that the member opposite work with us and try to encourage all involved in the system to do better. That's what we're doing, and we are listening to what the Hadley inquest and the jury recommended.

We have acted, Mr Speaker, and with your permission I'll review, cite the particular recommendation number. We have enhanced bail training for crown attorneys in matters related to domestic violence; that was recommendation number 8. Recommendation number 50 was for local domestic violence coordinating committees to be established; we have acted in that regard. We have acted in relation to recommendation number 10: we have asked the federal Minister of Justice to amend the Criminal Code so that there is a reverse onus in place for domestic violence cases where there is a breach of bail. We've acted in relation to recommendation 38; that relates to a $5-million enhancement to safety and security and accountability when it comes to shelters for abused women and children. We've acted in relation to recommendations 46 and 47, which is a $5-million dollar allocation for a public—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the time is up, Minister.

LOBBYISTS

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Minister of Energy. This morning the Premier told reporters that anyone doing business with the government was required to disclose to the government "anything that even resembles a potential conflict."

Minister, was your government aware that Hugh Mackenzie's company was lobbying on behalf of Direct Energy and National Grid when it was paying the same company $600,000 to work with the Ministry of Energy on electricity restructuring?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): It was this government that brought in legislation with respect to the Lobbyists Registration Act. It was this government that brought in practices that require conflict-of-interest rules for all contracts. We did that back in 1997. Those things were the right things to do.

At no time did Enterprise Canada, with respect to the numbers you've talked about, engage in any public policy work for the government of Ontario. You said, in a letter released yesterday, "A consultant should not be allowed to lobby the very ministry they are consulting for." I agree.

Mr Duncan: My question wasn't answered. I want to go back to the minister on the question of standards of integrity. There were flaws in the bill you passed in this House. We felt at the time it didn't go far enough.

Your government paid a company whose president is a good friend and trusted campaign adviser over $3 million. At the same time, the same firm was getting paid by private interests to lobby you and your government. On several occasions, they were lobbying the same ministries they were advising.

The Premier has asked you and the Minister of Health to investigate the government's dealings with Enterprise Canada. We on this side of the House don't believe that's good enough. We believe you ought to release the contracts—all of the contracts. You need to disclose exactly what they were paid $3 million to do. Anything less, Minister, would not provide this House with an accurate and adequate accounting. Will you, on behalf of your ministry, on behalf of other ministries that are affected, commit today to release all those contracts to the members of this assembly?

Hon Mr Baird: Of course all government documents are available for public examination. There is a process to do that and we certainly would respect any part of that process. Enterprise Canada is a vendor of record. They had gone through a public process back in the year 2000 to deal with communications. The type of work they did for my ministry included a public education strategy with respect to the market opening, with respect to research, with respect to news conferences, with respect to stakeholder management, town hall logistics, and putting together pamphlets and various advertising programs. All the work they did at our ministry was about public policy decisions that had already been taken. I think the member opposite should be careful not to besmirch the reputation of good, hard-working people in Ontario.

Mr Duncan: What's at stake here is the reputation of a government. I'd like to know, Minister: yesterday you confirmed, and you just reconfirmed, that Enterprise Canada was hired specifically to help with, and I quote from you yesterday, "electricity restructuring." That's the very issue Direct Energy and National Grid hired them to lobby your government on. In our view, it gets worse. According to you again, one of the specific things that company was hired by the Ministry of Energy to do was to organize town hall meetings. The filing with the lobby registry is also clear. While they were organizing town hall meetings for you, Direct Energy paid them to organize grassroots communications on energy restructuring with your government. You also confirmed that in addition to setting up these meetings, taxpayers paid Enterprise Canada to research and sell electricity restructuring.

Again, Minister, will you release the contracts? Will you release the rules they were operating under, or are you simply to going to let this thing hang out there without an adequate opportunity to discuss and see—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon Mr Baird: In the province of Ontario we have an open process with respect to awarding contracts. We have additional measures that allow these documents to be made public and will certainly respect all those rules. The Provincial Auditor, a good friend of the taxpayer, brought forward some concerns with respect to the use of consultants in the province. The Premier immediately said he wanted to adopt that and even directed the Chair of Management Board and the secretary of cabinet on a process that would go even farther than the Provincial Auditor raised.

PRIVATE HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Deputy Premier. This spring we asked the Premier if his decision to introduce for-profit MRIs had anything to do with ties of his staff to for-profit health care companies. He said, "I don't have any ties to private sector for-profit health care clinics."

We reminded him about a company called Endopis Medical Inc, and that prior to being hired as his chief of staff, Steve Pengelly was a paid lobbyist for that company. We have obtained a confidential document outlining the proposal by this same company to provide MRIs and CAT scans across the province. It reveals that the company began meeting with the Ministry of Health about this matter as early as May, 2001. We know that the Premier's chief of staff was representing the company at this time. Deputy Premier, you must understand how bad this looks. Will you now cancel this RFP process and put the brakes on for-profit health care?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I would just remind the member opposite of the fact that it was our government which actually undertook to introduce, in 1997, some very strong, government-wide conflict-of-interest rules for all contracts. In fact, we were the very first government to do that, and I can tell you that prior to 1997 the rules were very inconsistent and there was no government standard for each ministry. As you know, these contracts explicitly banned conflicts of interest and every firm is required to declare their conflict.

Ms Martel: Deputy Premier, I asked you if you would cancel this RFP process because it's not just the conflict of interest that concerns us. The deadline for the proposals for this process is December 24 at noon. To date, over 500 questions have been submitted about this RFP process; many involve conflict-of-interest guidelines. Ministry staff have been unable to tell those who have written the questions when they will respond to them.

Secondly, we also know that the College of Physicians and Surgeons is setting the standards for these new MRI and CT clinics. We also know that as late as yesterday afternoon a college committee was still meeting and making major changes to those standards. The version attached to the RFP is only a draft.

Deputy Premier, you're moving forward with this plan before the necessary standards are even in place. What is motivating your government to rush for-profit MRI clinics?

Hon Mrs Witmer: All of the contracts were chosen through the government's competitive selection process with regard to the issue of the bidding process for clinics to run MRIs and CT scanners. The accusation that Enterprise is lobbying this government is completely false. The RFP process prohibits interaction between minister and ministry staff. As you know, the only communication allowed is questions requiring answering by the potential bidder and these are sent to an RFP coordinator.

We have, as I said before, the highest standards possible in place to ensure that there is a competitive bidding process. The RFP is completely fair, it is above-board and it is transparent.

Ms Martel: Deputy Premier, the question was: what's motivating you to rush this for-profit MRI process? You see, I think this process is tainted by the appearance of conflict of interest. It is also tainted by your drive to proceed even though adequate standards are not in place. It is further tainted by the hundreds of questions, serious questions, that have been raised that remain unanswered. Further, you should know that at the ministry information session that was held two weeks ago behind closed doors Ministry of Health officials let it slip that the minister has already given approval for two for-profit, mobile MRI units even though radiologists have expressed serious concerns about patient safety when these carefully calibrated machines are out on the road.

Minister, your government can't guarantee patient safety when you can't even put an RFP together. Put the brakes on this tainted process and put patient care ahead of profits. Will you do that?

Hon Mrs Witmer: Speaker, I'll refer that to the minister for the—

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): The honourable member wants to know what is motivating the government of Ontario. I'll tell you what's motivating the government of Ontario: accessibility for the patients of Ontario, better health care, more health care, more accessibility to diagnostics, better patient care, better health care for the people of Ontario. That's what's motivating this side of the House. We are proud to be on the side of the people of Ontario. Better access to diagnostics: that's what it's all about. We will continue to fight for the patients of Ontario, because that's what a good government does.

FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): We know what motivates this government, and that's helping its friends on Bay Street, not the patients.

My question is to the Minister of Natural Resources. Yesterday my colleague from Sault Ste Marie asked you about the closing of the Domtar mill in Sault Ste Marie. In response, you told him you are going to let Domtar continue harvesting wood off their licence and send it anywhere they want in Ontario for processing, to the detriment of the community of Sault Ste Marie.

Let's be clear: when the sustainable forestry development act was passed by this Parliament, under the leadership of Howard Hampton, it was the intent of that legislation that the licence was tied to the mill and that the mill was there for the benefit of the community. What you are announcing is a clear reversal of that policy.

I'm saying, Minister, that it's clear where you're going with this whole thing. Your intent is on clear-cutting communities across northern Ontario rather than protecting them and the jobs in those communities. Will you reverse your policy and go back to what we put in place, which was the protection of those communities when it came to those licences?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): First of all, I find it interesting that the member from Sault Ste Marie can't even ask the same question on behalf of his community; he has to have somebody else speak about it.

Not only that, but when you talk about communities such as Temagami and the other mills up in Kenogami, what happened up there? The mayor came down and specifically asked us to keep those workers working in that community. What the member is asking me to do is shut down all the work in that mill in Sault Ste Marie. We intend to keep as many people as possible employed in the forest industry in Ontario.

Mr Bisson: First of all, you're full of it. I'm the critic for MNR, and I'm working along with my colleague Tony Martin and any other northern member across this province who is seeing their community devastated by what you're doing.

The issue here is clear: we have allowed amalgamation and we have allowed companies across northern Ontario such as Domtar and Tembec to group together under one banner. What they're saying is, "These are our licences; we can do what we want," to the detriment of Kirkland Lake, of Sault Ste Marie and of Sturgeon Falls.

What I'm calling on you to do is something real simple: honour the legislation we put in place in this province, which says the licence is tied to those mills and those communities. Will you reverse your policy, or will you see every worker in those communities put at risk?

Hon Mr Ouellette: Very clearly, what the member is asking for is to make sure those workers who are in the forest in northern Ontario are not working. I will make sure that when the mayors come forward, whether it's Kirkland Lake or Sault Ste Marie, if we can keep people employed in the north, we will do so, and the fibre will remain in the province of Ontario, as much as the Ministry of Natural Resources can accommodate.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question, the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): Any time you want to go head-to-head, let me know.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I would ask all members' cooperation. The member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke has the floor.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation is out and the member for Sault Ste Marie is out as well. I name both of you. I ask Mr Sterling to leave, and I ask the member for Sault Ste Marie to leave as well. Carry on outside. If you want to yell at each other, do it all afternoon if you like. Congratulations to all of you. I think we've now hit 40.

Mr Sterling and Mr Martin were escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: The member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke has the floor.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO SAVINGS OFFICE

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Minister of Finance. In last week's Economic Outlook and Fiscal Review which you presented to the province, you make plain that in the next couple of months you and your government are going to have to get busy with the sale of assets or rental of government properties, because, according to your fiscal plan, you're going to require something in the neighbourhood of $2 billion in the sale or rental of government assets and properties to make your budget numbers add up.

Against that backdrop, I'd like to ask you the following question: can you confirm that your government is now just days away from finalizing the sale of the Province of Ontario Savings Office, and can you further explain to this Legislature how the sale of the Province of Ontario Savings Office is going to serve the broad public interest in Ontario?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): First of all, as the honourable member will know, this spring we laid out a budget plan. We had revenue forecasts and expenditure forecasts, as is the normal course of things. We provided flexibility for in-year changes, which happen from time to time as governments seek to be responsive to the needs of their people. That is as it has been for every budget and we are following that plan.

As it comes to referring to POSO, the Province of Ontario Savings Office, as the honourable member should know, we announced over a year ago that the government would be seeking a financial institution better qualified to run a bank than the government is, and we are following through with that process.

Mr Conway: Well, in communities like Pembroke, Woodstock, Owen Sound, Aylmer, St Marys and many others across the province, many communities that are not particularly well served by the traditional financial services sector, the very reason that 80 years ago the government of Ontario established the Province of Ontario Savings Office, in communities like Pembroke and Seaford and St Marys tens of thousands of Ontarians who have made something like $3 billion available to Her Majesty's provincial government on deposit—those depositors, to say nothing of the hard-working men and women who provide such excellent service in this provincial savings office, want to know two things: how is your sale of this valuable public asset, about to be announced in the next very few days, going to protect and enhance the public interest, and perhaps even more importantly, how is it going to protect and serve the interests of those very happy Ontarians who for decades, in communities like Pembroke and St Marys and Seaford, have been well served by the Province of Ontario Savings Office and almost to a person do not want that savings office closed down in their community or sold off?

Hon Mrs Ecker: I'm sure the honourable member would agree that the appropriate organization to be providing banking services to citizens is not the government for a small little group of citizens; it should be a regulated financial institution with the knowledge, the qualifications, the financial backup to have expanded services for folks who need those services in communities. I agree that many of those POSO operations are in smaller communities. That's one of the reasons—and I'm surprised the honourable member is not aware of this—that we have put in the request for bids specific restrictions on staffing, on locations, on trying to maintain or expand service hours for communities, because we think that's an appropriate thing to do for the residents in those communities.

AGRICULTURE INDUSTRY

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Minister, you've visited my riding of Durham a number of times. You know it's a rich, diversified and very successful part of Ontario agriculture. Last week I was surprised when the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Mr Peters, issued a news release regarding our government's commitment to supply management. Minister, could you provide not just me and the farmers in the riding of Durham but indeed all Ontario with a clear explanation of our government's position on the important future of this issue?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food):

I was at the federal-provincial-territorial meeting last week, and when I came back I was surprised to see that the member from Elgin-Middlesex-London had sent out a press release saying that this government had a qualified and hesitant support of supply management. I want to quote to you the letter I had sent out:

"I assure you that the Ontario government, including the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, continues to strongly support supply management. Supply management has worked well for the dairy, egg, broiler hatching egg, chicken, turkey and flue-cured tobacco industries in the province." Does that sound like qualified support? I've got to say, I was pretty surprised.

Furthermore, the member is somewhat dismayed that I have said, "It is important that supply-managed commodities continue to evolve in order to respond to the changing environment in which they operate."

I'd like to refer everyone to the Web site of the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, where they state, "Working with farmers across Canada, DFO is positioned to respond to new trade rules and the realities of a changing market"—exactly the same thing. I think the member opposite was making a mountain—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Mr O'Toole: I know agribusiness in my sector is ready to meet change and the challenge of change, and certainly I know you're working closely with them. I'm almost embarrassed to admit that the member from London-Middlesex should apologize to you.

Minister, you mentioned the importance of systems and programs that work well for Ontario farmers. There is no doubt that our government has compiled an outstanding record of consulting with farmers on their priority issues and acting, I might say, decisively to address those issues. Can you further describe how our government has relentlessly addressed some of the important agricultural policy areas, as opposed to the Liberals' reaction to such events as you've described?

Hon Mrs Johns: I would like to thank the member from Durham for his question. I would also like to say that he has worked very hard with his agricultural community and I am most impressed with the record he has.

I'd like to say that we have conducted a series of public consultations. One that the Liberals would be most interested in is the passage of the Agricultural Employees Protection Act. We heard from farmers that they needed protection from potentially devastating labour disputes at harvest or planting, and to our surprise, right after the Liberals voted for this bill, the party president, the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora, suggested that ultimately they would repeal the legislation, a remark made right after they voted. So you have to wonder about the logic and the consultation that's going on on the other side.

I also have to say that we've been consulting on regulations under the Nutrient Management Act. Our meetings are all across the province in the months of December and January. So on this side of the House, the members will be working very hard—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up.

WORKPLACE SAFETY AND INSURANCE APPEALS TRIBUNAL

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): I have a question to the Minister of Labour. I want to talk to you today about your incompetent management of the injured worker system in Ontario.

As you know, the Workplace Safety and Insurance Appeals Tribunal is the final level of appeal for injured workers and employers in this province. Workers' lives are in suspension while these cases are being deliberated. Minister, you and your predecessors have made $90,000-a-year appointments that are inappropriate and costly. Case in point: Ken Dechert, brother of Bob Dechert, friend of Mike Harris, first appointed in June 1997 and reappointed in August 2000. In 2000, assignments decided by each of the other vice-chairs on the tribunal averaged around 80 cases in that year. The assignments decided by Ken Dechert were zero in that year. That's $90,000 for nothing. There is also a 120-day rule to make decisions after hearing work is completed. For the 18-month period ending July of this year, his average decision time was 608 days.

Minister, injured workers and employers are waiting for these decisions. Dollars are being wasted and lives are on hold. Stop playing politics with workers' lives. Why don't you ensure that the appointments to this tribunal are appropriate so that employers, who pay for this, get value and injured workers get timely justice?

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): First of all, I would like to thank the member for the question. We can state very unequivocally here that we have improved the WSIB and WSIAT significantly since we took office in 1995. We're down to $5 billion in the unfunded liability. Injuries in the workplace have dropped 30%, which is significant. We have increased inspections by 25%. We have had significant increases in terms of fines.

As for the approval rating for the WSIB—staggering: 70% for the employers and 68% for the employees. So when you consider all of that, clearly WSIAT and the WSIB are doing the job. They're doing more work than ever before and they're getting the job done.

Mr Ramsay: Minister, another example of appointment recklessness was the appointment of John Koutoulakis, a car salesman with no legal or medical expertise, as a part-time vice-chair by then-minister and good friend Chris Stockwell. Mr Koutoulakis also struggled in his job. Shortly after being appointed Minister of the Environment, Mr Stockwell rescued his friend and appointed him as a special assistant. But reversing this inappropriate appointment meant that 20 cases Koutoulakis was working on were suspended until the parties could agree on how to proceed. Again, 20 lives were put on hold and thousands of dollars wasted while reckless political appointments were being made.

Minister, when are you going to clean up this system and ensure that for these important decisions, for important positions such as these, you appoint qualified and competent people?

Hon Mr Clark: When you consider the record of the government and when you consider the decisions that have been made at WSIAT, the backlogs have been virtually cleared. If the member wants to point out specific anomalies here or there, the reality is that overall the program is working extremely well. We're appointing people to the boards who have the experience and the ability to do the job. It's based on merit, not partisan politics.

Laughter.

Hon Mr Clark: They can laugh. I could pull out numerous records from when you guys were in office and made partisan appointments. The list is extremely long. But on this side, when I took the position I took, I made it abundantly clear that we were going to have unbiased, impartial, unprejudiced members on all our arbitrations, all our tribunals, to ensure they're doing the right thing based on the facts that are presented to them. That's what we're doing. If they're not doing the job, then they'll be removed from the position. We want, very clearly, people who understand the job and are doing the job.

RESEARCH STUDY

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. A McMaster University research team has been granted access to private children's aid society files in search of underaged girls whose background is that of personal abuse. They wish to subject them to a series of stressful research tests on depression.

These vulnerable crown wards have no parents to protect their privacy rights, and yet three children's aid societies agreed to subject them to a series of on-going stressful tests without any follow-up treatment should they require it. To be fair, the CAS actually rejected a more invasive protocol involving injections and blood samples that was approved by the university's research ethics board. Minister, can you advise us when you first learned this research team was reviewing confidential CAS files of abused children in Hamilton and Halton?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I want to thank my colleague from Burlington for this question. My colleague has brought up a very complex issue. I want to be very clear that as a government we take our job very seriously to protect all children in Ontario, but we feel we have a special obligation particularly to those children who are crown wards through the children's aid. I recently learned of this study. I am informed it's been going on for about two and a half years. In this case, I'm informed the girls are asked to listen to the beginning of a story and finish it, but it is part of a study to study the effects of stress.

I will say to my colleague that when this was brought to my attention, it did raise some issues of concern for me. I think we would all agree there is no way we want children to be allowed to be exploited in any way, but we also don't want to deprive children who may have special needs who could benefit from certain kinds of studies. So I say to my colleague, I've instructed my staff to look into this matter, to give me advice on how we think we should proceed on this, and of course with our first and foremost interest to protect the needs of our children.

Mr Jackson: Minister, the Child and Family Services Act that governs the children's aid society is there to protect crown wards and their confidential records. However, it has come to my attention that part VIII of that bill, the section dealing with disclosure on confidentiality and access to records, was never proclaimed when it was gazetted in October 1985. It would appear, therefore, that access to confidential CAS files is being given by children's aid societies without the legal protection of the act.

Minister, I have serious concerns about this issue generally, and specifically about this oversight and the growing practice of recruiting vulnerable people as research subjects. These people are not mice in a maze. These are our most vulnerable people in Ontario. They are persons with developmental disabilities, the elderly, child victims of abuse and persons in psychiatric care.

Minister, will you undertake a full review of all and any research projects that are currently occurring in our province that have access to confidential files, and will you investigate why the sections of this act were never proclaimed?

Hon Mrs Elliott: I thank my colleague again for bringing this matter to my attention and to the attention of the House. The interests of the children, particularly those who are crown wards in the province of Ontario, are very important to me. I have asked my staff to come forward to give me advice. I will take all the notes that my colleague offers as additional suggestions into account as we look at this particular topic.

I think it's important that whatever standards we have, they are very clear and very high, with the first and foremost objective to protect the interests of the children. I invite advice on this matter from any of my colleagues here in the Legislature, and particularly from the member for Burlington. I intend to speak to the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies, as well as consult with the privacy commissioner on this particular topic.

Again, to my colleagues, I seek your advice on this matter. I will be looking into this with the interests of the children at heart, first and foremost.

BORDER CROSSING AT WINDSOR

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): My question is for the Deputy Premier. For decades, the people of Windsor have suffered traffic, noise, congestion and all that's related to that at the border crossings. Earlier this year there was a glimmer of hope. Your government and the government of Canada said they were willing to spend some $300 million to look at the problem of cross-border traffic and congestion. However, after some 60 days of study and no public consultation, a secret report has now been developed that no one has seen, particularly the people of Windsor. They have had absolutely no input to that report.

Madam Deputy Premier, will you give a commitment to sit down with the people of Windsor and find out what they want before you release the results of that secret report, and actually consult with them on what is best for their community?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): If the member opposite is asking if there will be further consultation, I can certainly say that our government has always indicated its willingness to work with the city of Windsor and the federal government and make sure that whatever action is taken is responsive to the needs of that particular community.

Mr Prue: The problem is that there has not been any consultation in the first 60 days of this secret report. What is worse is not only that there's no consultation, but the recommendations remain secret. What is being hidden here? What are you and the federal Liberals trying to hide? Why is this report still a secret? Why has no one seen it? When will you go public and involve the people and work with them to find a solution to what has been ongoing in their neighbourhoods that is acceptable to the people of Windsor?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I would just repeat what I said to the member opposite. We have always said we want to work with and make sure we consult with the federal government and the people of Windsor. I can assure you that as actions are taken, as planning starts to proceed, there will be ample opportunity for further discussion and consultation.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): My question is for the Minister of Health. The auditor's report that was released last week contains a damning indictment of your government's lack of concern for people suffering from mental illness. The auditor tells us there has been no increase in base funding to mental health agencies in the last 10 years. He notes that over the last years there have been cuts in services to those with serious mental illnesses because of this lack of funding. These cuts happened after your government claimed it was absolutely committed to providing community mental health services. You have been quick to decide to shut down beds in psychiatric hospitals, and you are ready to pass a law making it easier to force people into treatment. But you have done virtually nothing to make that treatment available. In fact, Minister, in the last two years you underspent the budget for community mental health by millions of dollars, despite the acute needs that you knew were there.

After starving community mental health services for the seven years of your government, after underspending the community mental health budget last year and the year before, will you now finally keep your commitment to community mental health and provide more funding in the next budget?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I would like to thank the honourable member for her question. I hope she shares my and this government's commitment to better mental health services, particularly community mental health services. The fact of the matter is that when you factor in all the new services that we as a government have funded since 1995, we have increased spending in the whole area by about 27%; we've invested more than $380 million in new dollars since 1995.

The issue is, of course, that we want to start focusing that money, as she so rightly put it, on community mental health. I'm waiting with as much patience as I can muster for the mental health implementation task forces. They will be a way to guide us to the best way to make public investments in community mental health because that's what we want to do as a government and that's what society needs as well.

Mrs McLeod: Facts, not words: no increase in base budgets to community mental health agencies for the past 10 years. It's $14 million underspent in the current year's budget for community mental health, and $57 million underspent in the year before that for community mental health. The auditor tells us you have no idea what the needs are. He says your ministry doesn't know how many people are waiting for treatment or how long they are waiting. He says you have no standards for community mental health and you have no idea what level of services are needed. The Community Mental Health Association estimates that 50% of people with mental illness who need help are not getting it. What we know, fact, is that more and more people with mental illness are in jail because there is no other place for them to go.

Last weekend, Leslie Ann Trussler died in a fire in London, Ontario. Leslie Ann was the 38-year-old mother of a five-year-old daughter. She had been released into the community from a Sault Ste Marie hospital on a community treatment order, but the supports that should have been in place weren't there. In Leslie's name, I ask: this time, will you do more than talk about your commitment to community mental health?

Hon Mr Clement: With the greatest of respect to the honourable member, there are some inaccuracies in what she's saying. The fact of the matter is we've added $45 million for supportive housing for those with mental illness; $8 million for 30 children's mental health beds in Toronto alone; 56 assertive community treatment teams delivering community-based mental health services; and $15.8 million announced just last year for the first stage of implementing Brian's Law, a law of which we are particularly proud. I want to put those on the record so that honourable members know we have been there.

The fact of the matter is, though, that we should wait for the mental health implementation task forces. I think the honourable member would be the first to criticize us if we acted before we heard from the consultation, if we made decisions before we heard from the mental health community, both mental health survivors as well as those who are active in the community. That's exactly what we're doing. That should not be seen as a lack of commitment to mental health; in fact, it should be seen as an absolute commitment to better mental health in our province.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): My question is for the Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Of course I'm talking about the energetic, hard-working, committed Daniel Newman, representing Scarborough Southwest.

Interjections.

Mr Johnson: Every member of the House knows how important it is to meet the long-term care needs of Ontario's growing and aging population, especially in Windsor. You should listen and hear. This will help you in Windsor as well. This challenge is faced across the province, including my great riding of Perth-Middlesex. According to the census, Perth-Middlesex has an overabundance of mature citizens. I'm proud to be part of a government that's meeting the challenge and providing even better care for Ontario's seniors.

As of 2002, and as it's coming to a close, I'd like to ask the associate minister if he could provide an update in this House to my constituents on the status of long-term care in this province.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the honourable member for his question. It's always my pleasure to respond to the energetic, hard-working and committed member for Perth-Middlesex.

I am very pleased to say that long-term-care services in Ontario are in excellent shape as the year draws to a close, far better shape than they were in when we were first elected in 1995.

The Ernie Eves government is taking the necessary steps to provide even better care to Ontario seniors and those others who require long-term care. In fact, this year we announced $100 million in new money for better nursing and personal care. Our inspections are on target for this year and we've taken action against facilities that don't comply with our high requirements for residents. Our focus is on providing even better care for residents, and that's exactly what we're doing.

It's coming to the end of 2002, and I'm proud to say that long-term-care services in Ontario are in far better shape than they were in 1995.

Mr Johnson: I'd like to thank the minister for that response. I'm pleased to hear that our government's commitment to long-term care is making a difference in the lives of my constituents and the lives of residents in facilities across Ontario, including my riding of Perth-Middlesex, which, as I said, has a great need for care and long-term services. I'll be sitting on the step of the associate minister to get those services. Indeed, if I were closer to him in this House, I'd probably be at his side every day.

I know that our government's historic $1.2-billion investment toward even better long-term-care services in Ontario is making a real difference for even better care across the province. I'd like to ask the associate minister if he could please update my constituents and this House on this unprecedented long-term-care initiative.

Hon Mr Newman: I once again thank the honourable member for Perth-Middlesex for his question. I'm very pleased to say that our government is keeping our promise of adding 20,000 new beds and 16,000 redeveloped beds to the long-term-care system though the $1.2-billion investment that we announced in 1998. This includes 256 redeveloped beds in the honourable member's own riding. The fact is that it was our government that fixed the problems that the Liberals and NDP created when it comes to long-term care in Ontario.

Before our 1998 announcement to add tens of thousands of new and redeveloped beds to the system, no new long-term-care beds had been added since 1988. That's an unbelievable fact. Both the Liberals and the NDP knew that the need for better long-term-care services in our province was inevitable, but they chose not to take action and they put it off until another day. But our government took action and that's why long-term care is far better off today than it was in 1995, when we were first elected by the people of Ontario.

FETAL ALCOHOL SYNDROME

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. As I'm sure you know, fetal alcohol syndrome is the only preventable form of mental retardation. It is caused by a birth mother consuming alcohol during pregnancy. I think it's fair to say that there aren't individuals with FAS; there are families with FAS. FAS greatly reduces an individual's ability to make decisions or to understand consequences for actions. They require a very high degree of supervision and support.

Over 40% of individuals in our jails and in prisons have FAS. Others end up just out on the street. It's ironic that we have no money for shelters for them but we always have $80,000 to lock them up in a jail or prison. They don't deserve to be locked up; they deserve better than that.

Families need more than the special services at home funding which you provide. They need the ability to do long-term planning for their children. Minister, I would ask that you not answer my question in terms of dollars but in terms of services. What are you doing for families with fetal alcohol syndrome in Ontario?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague opposite for the question. I think he comes to this House with a very heartfelt concern about funding services for children, which we share on this side of the House. This is a particular form of illness that he asked me for specifics on. We have a number of programs. You've mentioned the special services at home. I would like to have the opportunity to go back and think about the very specific things and give you a much more detailed response on this particular topic.

Mr Parsons: I appreciate that answer. My wife and I have a son with fetal alcohol syndrome. He has made our life more interesting than we ever planned it to be, but we are very proud of him. Not a day goes by that we do not worry about what will happen to him when we're gone. The thought of him being abandoned on the streets is intolerable to us and to thousands of other parents. Studies done indicate that for FAS victims, residence in a specialized group home with special supports enables many, if not all, of them to contribute positively to society.

There is a group in Ontario that has come together provincially to look at long-term solutions for victims of FAS. They are based in Belleville. Minister, they would very much like to meet with you to explore the options. So the question is simple: will you personally meet with this FAS group to explore options that can be developed for victims of FAS?

Hon Mrs Elliott: I thank my colleague across the way. We come to this place very often as parents, and when he says as a good parent that this child makes his life interesting, that's probably a sign of a very good parent who is trying to do his best.

In my own community of Guelph-Wellington I know the organization FASAT, which has been working to help parents and children who struggle with fetal alcohol syndrome. Certainly in my discussions with ministers across the country as Community, Family and Children's Services minister, fetal alcohol syndrome is a serious problem, particularly in the western part of Canada.

I would be more than happy to meet with the colleagues that you would like me to speak with. I'll be pleased to do that at my earliest convenience.

BEREAVEMENT SERVICES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question is for the hard-working Minister of Consumer and Business Services.

Minister, anyone who has lost a loved one knows how difficult the grieving period can be. Add to this the difficulty of arranging a funeral, and a distressing situation can be made even worse. I know that the vast majority of businesses in this industry are good operators, but there are a few bad operators that aren't completely up front with families and loved ones when they require their services.

Today, Minister, your bereavement legislation passed third reading and is just steps away from becoming the law. Minister, could you please let the people from my great riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale and of Ontario know how this new legislation will improve consumer protection in this industry?

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): I appreciate the question from my colleague. He's absolutely right and I'm very pleased that Bills 209 and 180 passed third reading in the Legislature today, part of a package of probably the greatest advancement in consumer protection in the history of this province. As part of this powerful package on behalf of people at a very sensitive time with respect to bereavement services, I'll name five of the consumer protections: full ownership disclosure so you know who you're dealing with; an ability to attack tied selling, a reprehensible practice that limits consumer options; clear price lists that are constant so that you know what you are buying, whether it's a budget or a higher-priced item; an industry-funded compensation fund to protect consumers; and also a code of ethics that goes throughout the bereavement industry, to name but five.

It's great to hear that this new legislation will bring in so many comprehensive new protections for individuals going through this difficult time. Clear price lists, cracking down on tied selling and mandatory informational pamphlets will give people the tools to easily make informed decisions.

Having said that, I've heard some criticism during debate that this bill will pose problems for small businesses. Specifically, concerns have been raised that allowing combinations such as cemeteries having funeral homes will push the little guy out of business. But we are the government of small businesses and I know that we wouldn't press forward with any plan that could compromise small businesses in the province.

Minister, how would this legislation affect small businesses?

Hon Mr Hudak: The member is right. We, the Ernie Eves government, are proud to be the government of small businesses to help job growth in that sector. I can say with certainty that while that kind of accusation could be part of the political rhetoric, it is groundless. In fact, currently all other provinces but Ontario and PEI have this type of legislation, and 42 of 50 US states. The small family-run funeral service industry is still very alive and well in those provinces and in the states.

Similarly, it levels the playing field. If a small, family-owned funeral parlour is facing competition from a municipal or a faith-based cemetery and visitation centre that is tax-free currently, this will level the playing field so that taxes are paid equally.

To quote a couple of small funeral operators, one Laurie Cole of Cole Funeral Services in Carp, Ontario, says, "As you know, the industry has been seeking changes to existing legislation for some time now and, speaking for my own company, supports your efforts entirely." Brent Irvine, of Irvine Funeral Home and Chapel in Brockville, Ontario, says, "This new legislation will pave the way for expanded opportunities for firms such as ours to more effectively serve Ontario consumers."

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services.

Minister, yesterday my colleague from Hamilton East asked you a question about subsidized housing for the disabled and mentally ill in Hamilton. We got less than a satisfactory answer.

Lest there be a concern that you think that was a partisan matter, I'm asking the question today also and I want to read something to you by way of this question.

"Hamilton, now $300,000 over budget in its subsidy program, has had to not only slam on the brakes, but throw it into reverse. Next month, the maximum number of subsidized beds will drop to 869 from 915.

"That's shameful—but the fault is not Hamilton's. Responsibility for a program such as this cannot be thrown onto cities. Smaller municipalities don't offer subsidized housing for mentally ill people. Hamilton, like other large centres, does—not because of a provincial mandate but because it has taken on the role of a centre for mental health services."

Minister, these beds are being cut because you've capped the subsidies. We need you to provide the subsidies so our community can provide these beds, these facilities for people who stand a risk of freezing to death in the dark. Minister, stand—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way for the question.

Yesterday I answered a question from another colleague from the geographic area of Hamilton. It was unclear to me what he was searching for, and I was answering him with regard to the per diems that we have increased for domiciliary hostels over the last little while.

The question is about homes in the Hamilton area. Hamilton has asked the province for one-time increased funding of $240,000 for the domiciliary hostel program. It's my understanding that the city of Hamilton has actually decided to go forward and offer more homes than we had originally planned. I can say to my colleagues across the way that we are looking into this, and certainly we'll be interested in talking to them.

But if my colleague the Minister of Health were answering this question, he would also tell you that we are very interested in finding out the information that will come from the task force on mental health. We believe there's very good—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up.

Mr Christopherson: Minister, the quote I was reading to you didn't come from a Liberal document or an NDP document; that was today's Spectator, a Hamilton editorial.

The fact of the matter is, we're having some trouble getting you to focus on the issue at hand. This is about providing beds for people who have nowhere else to go—nowhere. The city of Hamilton has been doing your job. We've been picking up the extra. That's the $240,000 you refer to. Because of the other downloading you've done, the city can't continue to do that. But our Hamilton city council doesn't want to say no to people who are on the streets, and I'm assuming you don't either. Therefore we desperately need a commitment from you now that you'll provide the money necessary so that those beds will be there for people when the temperature drops below freezing and lives are at risk. Minister, on behalf of all Hamiltonians, I'm asking you: make the commitment today so that our council and this government can do the right thing for those people in Hamilton who are in need.

Hon Mrs Elliott: I thank my colleague across the way. In my ministry, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing and the Ministry of Health, we have a number of programs all designed to address the issues of housing of various kinds throughout the province. I have committed to you today that I will work further on this to find some solutions. I have indicated that we on this side of the House would like to receive the report from the task force on mental health so that we can make a broader decision on the next steps for future planning.

VISITOR

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to welcome this afternoon, in the members' east gallery, the former member for Wentworth North and a graduate of Nelson High School in Burlington, along with myself, Eric Cunningham.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent for second and third reading of the bill I introduced today to amend the Food Safety and Quality Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Peters has asked—I heard a no.

PETITIONS

HIGHWAY 407

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition that reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas motorists using Highway 407 are being gouged with charges that are far beyond what is reasonable and justified;

"Whereas billing errors are forcing motorists to spend hours on the telephone trying to have such errors corrected;

"Whereas some motorists in frustration and exasperation are paying charges they did not incur for the use of Highway 407;

"Whereas the government of Ontario acts as an enforcer for the Highway 407 Corp and is, in our view, complicit in the collection of questionable charges;

"Whereas the Eves-Harris government sold Highway 407 to a buyer who has increased charges well beyond what the government promised;

"We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly to condemn the Conservative government of Ontario for selling Highway 407 to private interests and for permitting the Highway 407 Corp to raise charges for the use of the highway and other administrative charges that cannot be justified."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement with this petition.

CHILD CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have petitions that come to me from McMurrich Sprouts child care centre in Toronto and Jubilee Heritage Family Resources in Sudbury. They read as follows:

"Whereas 70% of Ontario women with children under age 12 are in the paid workforce;

"Whereas high-quality, safe, affordable child care is critical to them and their families;

"Whereas the Early Years Study done for the Conservative government by Dr Fraser Mustard and the Honourable Margaret McCain concluded quality child care enhances early childhood development;

"Whereas this government has cut funding for regulated child care instead of supporting Ontario families by investing in early learning and care;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Ontario government adopt the NDP's $10-a-day child care plan and begin implementation by reducing full child care fees to $10 a day for children aged two to five currently enrolled in regulated child care by providing capital funds to expand existing child care centres and build new ones, by funding proxy pay equity for staff and by creating new $10-a-day child care spaces in the province."

I agree with the petitioners. I have affixed my signature to this.

CAT SCANNER

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care.

"We, the undersigned, request approval for installation of a CAT scanner at the Woodstock General Hospital. It is an essential piece of equipment for the practice of modern medicine. The arrangements to go to London for a CAT scan are unsatisfactory, cumbersome and cause unnecessary delay. It is standard equipment for a hospital of this size in North America. All counties in south-western Ontario have at least one CAT scanner except Oxford county."

The petition is signed by many of the residents in and around the city of Woodstock, and I add my signature to the petition as I support it.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totaling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act"—which they can do—"disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive rate increases."

This comes to me from Mrs Christina Korotki in Thunder Bay. I'm grateful to her and I will be very happy to sign my name to the petition as well.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Recently my colleague Marie Bountrogianni from Hamilton Mountain and I attended a news conference sponsored by the Community Coalition for Public Education, a newly formed group co-chaired by Jessica Brennan and Jeff Moore. They gave us 1,200—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): What we need is for you just to read the petition and not editorialize. Thank you.

Mr Christopherson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the parents of Hamilton understand that adequate funding for our children's education is the responsibility of the government of the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas we don't believe that the current funding benchmarks are reflective of current costs; and

"Whereas we want the education funding gap addressed immediately;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We oppose the serious underfunding of our children's education and demand that the government of Ontario reinstate adequate funding to the Hamilton-Wentworth District School Board so that our children receive the quality education they deserve."

I have 1,200 postcards to back that up, and add my name.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): My petition is to the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas animal abusers are not currently subject to any provincial penalties;

"Whereas it is currently impossible for a judge to ban puppy and kitten mill operators from owning animals for the rest of their lives;

"Whereas Ontario SPCA investigators need to act on instances of cruelty to animals in a more timely fashion, thereby lessening the animals' suffering;

"Whereas it is currently not an offence to train an animal to fight another animal; and

"Whereas Ontario's animals are not adequately protected by the current law;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To pass the amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act developed by a governmental working group (which included the Ontario SPCA) and submitted to the office of the Solicitor General of Ontario in June of 2001, so that the above conditions, among others, will be properly addressed."

This represents over 200,000 people in the province of Ontario who support this petition.

ALUMINUM SMELTER

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Regarding the cleanup of the abandoned smelter site in Georgina:

"Whereas the abandoned aluminum smelter located on Warden Avenue in the town of Georgina has been deemed to have heavy metals exceeding Ministry of the Environment guidelines; and

"Whereas the site is adjacent to a wetland that leads to the Maskinonge River feeding into Lake Simcoe;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to direct the Ministry of the Environment" to do its job and "conduct a full environmental assessment of this site, followed by a cleanup of" this toxic smelter site in Georgina.

I affix my name to this petition, which I support.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I have a petition signed by 288 people that reads as follows:

"To the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas the city of Toronto, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and other organizations across the nation have recognized that homelessness is a national disaster and called on the federal government to develop and implement a national housing strategy; and

"Whereas communities across Canada are in the midst of an affordable housing crisis and it is important for all levels of government, organizations and communities to work together to provide adequate and affordable housing that will make a real difference in the lives of many men, women and children who require shelter; and

"Whereas thousands of people in Ontario are without housing, the Ontario government needs to match the level of participation of the federal government with regards to the national housing program. Housing is a human right and a basic need;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario as follows:

"Commit in full to the agreed-upon action to conclude an affordable housing deal which was set out by the federal government. Ontario needs permanent, affordable housing. Emergency shelters are not permanent solutions."

I am in agreement and will affix my signature thereto.

PENSION PLANS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'm pleased to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the citizens of Ontario are concerned over the implications of part XXV of Bill 198 as it affects pensioners and employees contributing to a pension plan; and

"Whereas we would like to bring this issue to the attention of John O'Toole, our member of provincial Parliament for Durham, and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Minister of Finance comprehensively review all sections of Bill 198 dealing with amendments to the Pension Benefits Act to ensure all current and former pension plan members are in no way disadvantaged. And we request that our Durham MPP, Mr John O'Toole, and all members of the Legislature not support any legislation that would reduce pension plan benefits."

I am pleased to inform the House that part XXV has indeed been removed from that section of the bill, and I support and work with my constituents as always.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas average tuition fees in Ontario are the second-highest in Canada; and

"Whereas average undergraduate tuition fees in Ontario have more than doubled in the past 10 years; and

"Whereas tuition fees for deregulated programs have, in certain cases, doubled and tripled; and

"Whereas Statistics Canada has documented a link between increasing tuition fees and diminishing access to post-secondary education; and

"Whereas four other provincial governments have taken a leadership role by freezing and reducing tuition fees;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Freeze tuition fees for all programs at their current levels, and

"Take steps to reduce the tuition fees of all graduate programs, post-diploma programs and professional programs for which tuition fees have been deregulated since 1998."

This is signed by hundreds more students from Lakehead University. I'm pleased to affix my signature, in full agreement with their concerns, and to give it to Michael Schonberger from Sudbury to take to the table.

MEDICAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the OHIP schedule of benefits is often unclear about its definitions of good medical practice for many serious medical conditions: general checkups, rechecks, psychotherapy counselling and often major illness care by specialists;

"The medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons has been aggressively 'clawing back' payments to hard-working, conscientious doctors on the basis of these flawed definitions and skewed statistical analyses;

"We, the undersigned, request the Minister of Health to suspend further reviews by the medical review committee, return the monies with its penalties, pending a negotiated agreement of an unambiguous schedule of benefits with representatives of affected practising physicians."

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas animal abusers are not currently subject to any provincial penalties;

"Whereas it is currently impossible for a judge to ban puppy and kitten mill operators from owning animals for the rest of their lives; and

"Whereas Ontario SPCA investigators need to act on instances of cruelty to animals in a more timely fashion, thereby lessening the animals' suffering;

"Whereas it is currently not an offence to train an animal to fight another animal; and

"Whereas Ontario's animals are not adequately protected by the current law;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To pass the amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act developed by a governmental working group (which included the Ontario SPCA) and submitted to the office of the Solicitor General of Ontario in June 2001, so that the above conditions, among others, will be properly addressed."

It is signed by a great number of citizens of Ontario who have great concern for the welfare of the animals in our province.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas CleanHarbors, the former Safety-Kleen, is trucking in highly toxic sludge from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Ontario;

"Whereas the CleanHarbors, formerly Safety-Kleen, hazardous landfill and incinerator is the only facility on the North American continent that has a permit to landfill untreated hazardous waste;

"Whereas Ontario has become the dumping ground and haven for toxic hazardous waste;

"Whereas it is not in the best interest of the people of Ontario to import hazardous waste;

"Whereas this CleanHarbors site near Bridgen will have long-term consequences to the environment, to human health and eventually contaminate the ground-water;

"We, the undersigned, petition the government of Ontario to stop the landfilling and disposing of untreated hazardous waste in Ontario and stop the shipment to Ontario from the Domtar tank in Sydney, Nova Scotia."

There are thousands of signatures, and I affix my signature to this petition. I'm going to ask Brian from Sarnia-Lambton to bring down the petitions.

EDUCATION TAX CREDIT

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'm pleased to present a second petition today on behalf of my constituents in Durham.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the province of Ontario has delayed the second phase of the equity in education tax credit for parents who choose to send their children to independent schools; and

"Whereas prior to the introduction of this tax credit, Ontario parents whose children attended independent schools faced a financial burden of paying taxes at home to an education system they did not use, plus tuition for the school of their choice; and

"Whereas the equity in education tax credit supports parental choice in education and makes independent schools more accessible to all Ontario families;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully request that the government of Ontario reintroduce the second phase of the tax credit forthwith and continue—without delay—the previously announced timetable for the introduction of the tax credit over five years."

In response to my constituents, I'm pleased to endorse this petition on their behalf.

NOTICES OF DISSATISFACTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): I would like to inform the House that pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing concerning the Edible Oils Act.

Also pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for Kingston and the Islands has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Public Safety and Security concerning the Provincial Auditor's report.

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I move that, pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information, the review of expenses and the accountability of cabinet ministers, opposition leaders and certain other persons, when Bill 216 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day; and

That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That no deferral of the second and third reading votes pursuant to standing order 28(h) shall be permitted; and

That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Galt has moved government notice of motion number 84. Debate?

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I stand in my place again to debate another time allocation motion by this government, a motion that limits, stifles, ends debate and ends the involvement of the people of the province of Ontario in having a say in legislation. Therefore, I, my leader Dalton McGuinty and the rest of my Liberal colleagues will not be supporting this time allocation motion.

Let me talk a little bit and let me bring the people of Ontario up to date on what this government has done during the fall session and how they've limited the people of Ontario's input into good legislation or into bad legislation. Bill 60, the Victim Empowerment Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 131, Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 148, Emergency Readiness Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 149, Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Extension Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 179, Government Efficiency Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 181, Legal Aid Services Amendment Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 187, Agricultural Employees Protection Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 191, Highway Traffic Amendment Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 151, Toronto Waterfront Revitalization Corporation Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate allowed. Bill 175, Sustainable Water and Sewer Systems Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 180, Consumer Protection Statute Law Amendment Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 195, Safe Drinking Water Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 198, Keeping the Promise for a Strong Economy Act: time-allocated, no third reading debate. Bill 209, Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act: time-allocated, no committee hearings allowed or third reading debate. Bill 210, Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act: time-allocated, no committee hearings, no third reading debate.

Today we debate another time allocation motion. I don't think this government should be proud of how they've managed the legislation they've introduced. I think it is fundamentally wrong and fundamentally undemocratic to have so limited a debate on significant pieces of legislation. I think it is an insult to the people of Ontario and even to the people who voted for the Harris-Eves government that they do not take bills out to committees so that the people of Ontario can have a say in their legislation.

It is no wonder that the people of Ontario are severely questioning the competency and the sincerity of the Harris-Eves government as it demonstrates time and time again that they feel it is not important for the people of Ontario to have a say in their legislation. It is important for the government across the way to understand that it is not your legislation; it is the legislation of the people of Ontario as represented by the 103 members here, but more broadly by the people who live all across Ontario.

So I say to the government as this session winds down, you have made a fundamental mistake in thinking that the people of Ontario are not interested in their legislation. They want to feel that they are a part of legislation and the laws of the province of Ontario. You have denied them that opportunity. You have denied them that right. I am confident that when the election is held in April, they will deny you a return mandate.

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): Normally I would stand in this House and suggest how pleased I am to be able to rise to debate this motion, because ordinarily it would be a pleasure for me to do so. However, I have to say I am somewhat disappointed that this motion should even be necessary.

We are looking at Bill 216, the Accountability for Expenses Act (Cabinet Ministers and Opposition Leaders), 2002. It is what I believe to be an extremely important and well-thought-out bill. At long last, I might say, it would bring some clarity and transparency to the issue. This is something that has been lacking for quite some time, and I think it's time that we took the action necessary to address this issue.

We've all heard the debate and we've all heard the reasons and rationale for bringing this forward. This is not to say that they are not important or that there aren't solid reasons for it—far from that. Rather, I would suggest that there are very sound and solid reasons. We know that for too long the rules have been ambiguous and loosely applied. We also know that this has resulted in wide-ranging interpretations. We know also that this has led to some very valid questions about who can buy what, when, where and how much of it.

We also know that it is not a new phenomenon in these hallowed halls. I think the fact that the speaker from Sudbury opposite took the time to discuss the issue of the time allocation motion speaks to the very heart of this discussion today. We have had sessional days devoted to debate on this bill. During that time, opposition speakers have indicated their support. It seems unfortunate, then, in this kind of situation that we are in the position of having to introduce a time allocation motion.

The history is very clear. The history has been that ministers, parliamentary assistants and their staffs have been under guidelines, but these have frequently been vague. They have certainly created problems with regard to questionable definitions. There is ambiguity. Frankly, one of the most important issues from a legislative point of view, the issue of scrutiny, has meant that there is a certain amount of mist, if you like, surrounding the whole issue of scrutiny. So it's very important that we take the time today to make sure that we have this opportunity to make sure that this bill continues on that important process.

We know, for instance, that the members opposite like to say, when we dredge up the record of the Liberals when they were in government, that it was ancient history. "That was last century," I think I heard someone say in here yesterday evening. Perhaps that's true. But at that time, there were a number of honourable members on the opposition benches now who were members of the government at the time. The member from St Catharines was the Minister of the Environment. The member from Scarborough-Rouge River was the Minister of Housing. The member from York Centre was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, I think it was called at that time. I believe the member from Vaughan-King-Aurora was the Minister of Labour.

Now, I don't plan to go through the entire list here and name off all those on the opposition benches who were also members of the cabinet of the government of the day, although I would be remiss not to also mention the current leader of the third party, the member from Niagara Centre and the member from Hamilton West, who were all part of the NDP cabinet of the 1990s.

It's very clear that it was pretty difficult for people to know the rules, and it was very difficult for anyone to have a clear sense of the kind of accountability that we are suggesting here today. In 1989, the Provincial Auditor told us that the rules regarding ministers' expenses needed to be clarified. In fact, I'll quote for a moment: "Further clarification is required as to what types of expenses are permitted for ministers.... ministers are not required to submit receipts with their request for reimbursement." That's from the 1989 Annual Report of the Provincial Auditor.

So I think it's very important to understand the issue we are looking at today in the context of that history. As I suggested a moment ago, all of this was done with very fuzzy rules and certainly no clarity. One of the functions of the Legislature is to be able to have that level of scrutiny. This particular piece of legislation removes from partisan debate the question of the allowable expenses and provides them with the mechanism for the Integrity Commissioner to be that impartial judge and take away from the lack of clarity that has surrounded this issue.

So to the question, "Why do we have to time-allocate the bill?" the real reason is simply because the opposition has left us with little choice. At every turn, they try to stall, delay and prevent the government from bringing policies into the House that are designed to meet the needs of the people of Ontario. It's all about preventing the government from implementing its plans.

Now, Speaker, I know you're thinking, "That's what the opposition is supposed to do; it is supposed to oppose and make it difficult for the government." To some degree, that is true. Our system, after all, is adversarial and we're not supposed to get along too well in this House with the members opposite—generally speaking, of course. But in my mind, the opposition is supposed to be more than that. They should be bringing forward more than just refusals and rejections. They should be bringing forward ideas that make sense to Ontarians, and they should be bringing forward real, alternative solutions.

So I think that in looking at this bill, it is very clear to me that the members opposite will say that they wanted more time to debate and think about it. Well, it's something that has been in conversation for 15 years, and so I think you would agree with me that they need to have come up with something better than, "This leans a little heavy on us."

We're looking at the opposition, who are trying to hold up this bill, using a time allocation motion to delay. I think we need to be looking at the opportunity to move this bill forward. It does provide for clarity and an end to the confusion that has existed.

As you will know, Mr Speaker, we have all heard before from members on this side of the House that it is time to move on with this, and I couldn't agree more. It's time to get on with the real issues that face the people of this province day in and day out.

I know that people are concerned with how their money is being spent, and they quite rightly should be. After all, it is their money. But I also know that people want their government to do something constructive. They sent us here—all of us—to take care of those very important things in our ridings. They want us to take care of their health care, education, environment and economic growth. Every hour we spend on this is an hour not spent debating other business—either in this House or elsewhere.

I would argue that the opposition members have had their fair opportunity to debate this bill. It's time for the House to move on to other matters. I encourage all members to support this motion.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): I'm pleased to speak about Bill 216. I want to challenge some of the things my colleague from York North said. First of all, on the delay, we, the Liberals, were the ones who brought this to the public: the expenses, the boozing, the steakhouses. We are the ones who brought this to the public. We are the stimulus that has brought this bill. Two years ago, my colleague Rick Bartolucci brought a much stricter bill—mind you, it was focused on ministers and their travel—that went much further than Bill 216. We aren't the ones who are delaying the process; all we're talking about when we protest against time allocation bills in general is the lack of democratic process. But with respect to the actual issue at hand, we are the stimulus for bringing Bill 216 to the Legislature.

With respect to not finding solutions for accountability, again I'd like to challenge my colleague from York North. She was at the public accounts committee when I brought the severance bill, which in the end, after a great deal of heartache, was passed unanimously by the public accounts committee and is on the order paper. I realize it won't pass—it's a private member's bill—but with respect to accountability, the severance bill would have blown the whistle on the Eleanor Clitheroes of the world, would have saved us a lot of money in legal fees now. We on this side of the House are for accountability.

I would have liked very much, for example, if the government would have taken that bill and made it their own and not made it a private member's bill at all. I would have been very happy as long as accountability was brought.

With respect to fuzzy guidelines—my colleague from York North mentioned that there were fuzzy guidelines and it's about time a government is doing something about the guidelines for expenses—in my mind it's not very fuzzy when you spend $70,000, as one former cabinet minister did, on booze and steaks, hotel stays and so on. That's not a very fuzzy expense. That's pretty extreme; that's pretty intense. The problem with Bill 216 is that that particular former minister won't be held accountable, because this bill does not cover former ministers. Ironically, it covers former leaders of the opposition and leaders of the third party, but it does not cover former ministers, where we have found, after a year of freedom of information searching, that is where the most spending occurred—in ministers' offices and parliamentary assistants' offices.

And with the parliamentary assistants, I'm happy to see that their expenses will also be made public. However, it's only for those since May 2002. Again we look at the list. I'm a relatively new member. I don't know what's appropriate or not appropriate, but I have a feeling that $87,000 for a parliamentary assistant is pretty intense and pretty outrageous. And no one who held a parliamentary assistantship before May 2002 will be held to scrutiny.

Again, I agree with the bill in principle. I think it's a good start. However, it is very late.

I challenge the government when they say we are not for accountability. We are definitely for accountability, but we are also for accountability in the democratic process. That is what my colleague from Sudbury was talking about earlier. If this had been done right, it would have been in at least two years ago, when my honourable colleague Rick Bartolucci brought in Bill 2—at least two years ago. Then that bill could have been expanded or even stolen. I'm sure if it had been stolen by the government and expanded upon, my honourable colleague would have been happy. It wouldn't have been the first time. We're always happy, actually, when the government steals our ideas because it is for the good of the public.

I want to reiterate, number one, that we had nothing to do with any delay in this. We're the ones who brought this to the public. We are the stimulus for Bill 216.

Number two, my colleague from Sudbury brought in Bill 2 two years ago, a much stronger piece of legislation which was ignored by the government and which would have really paid a lot of scrutiny to ministers' expenses while they travel.

Number three, we've had a lot of solutions with respect to accountability. My severance bill was one, and there are many others. My colleague from Sarnia had a bill of accountability that would have made all public meetings public. John Gerretsen had a bill as well on public disclosure, and there are many more bills of accountability on this side of the House that were brought forward that were ignored by the government.

With respect to fuzzy guidelines, I think a 10-year-old will be able to say that $70,000 on steaks and booze and hotels is extreme and unaccountable. There's nothing fuzzy about what happened in certain ministers' portfolios when they were spending taxpayers' money.

Of course we are going to support Bill 216. We laugh at the insinuation that we are against accountability, because we have been trying for years now to bring accountability to the Legislature and to the province of Ontario in many different areas. We are the ones who brought this very uncomfortable situation of over-spending to the Legislature. It's not comfortable for any of us to stand up and challenge colleagues on their spending. In fact, in some ways, I resent even being put in that position, because we all then get painted with the same brush in the public mind.

With that, I would like to say that we will support bill 216. We need accountability. It's a good start, but when we are the government, we will go much further in winning back the trust of the people of Ontario.

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): It's my pleasure to join in the debate today on Bill 216, the Cabinet Ministers' and Opposition Leaders' Expenses Review and Accountability Act, 2002. As my colleagues have pointed out, this is the government's latest accountability measure to bring greater openness and transparency to the way in which MPPs and their staff spend taxpayer dollars.

It is clear to me from watching these proceedings and reading Hansard that there has been a very thorough debate on this issue. I know the debate has, for the most part, been repetitious and predictable. I think that's simply because the bill itself is quite simple and really very difficult for anyone in this House to argue against.

In order to illustrate my point, let me review a little about how the debate has gone so far. The parliamentary assistant to Management Board Secretariat began by telling us how, for decades, governments of all stripes operated under different sets of rules, which were hidden from public view, open to interpretation and inconsistently applied. The member for York North continued by saying that now is the time to take action, to end the uncertainty and speculation and to give taxpayers real assurance that the people who spend their hard-earned money are truly accountable for it.

As debate continued, it became clear that, if carried by this Legislature, this bill would be the first in Canada to bring legislative oversight to the way in which members of parliament handle their expenses, in particular by giving the Integrity Commissioner the power to help establish rules, regularly review them and table an annual report. The bill would give unprecedented transparency and accountability to the entire process. By giving this role to an independent third party, it will provide much-needed impartiality to this process to ensure that it is fair and reasonable.

One of the common themes I saw in the second reading debate was the argument that the appointment of the Integrity Commissioner removes the partisan and adversarial nature of interpreting this issue in the Legislature. As the member from York North put it so well, "This bill would help do that by preventing endless partisan accusations by providing for a mechanism to resolve disputes that might arise, and, for the first time, giving the people of Ontario a glimpse at how the leaders of the opposition spend the taxpayer dollars for which they are responsible." I agree with this and, more importantly, I think the members opposite agree with it too.

This makes it even more clear to me that the debate on this bill has run its course and that it is now time to put this bill to the House for a vote. It is not very often that all members of this House agree on something, but I think, in some part, this is the case with sections of this bill. Specifically, as an impartial officer of the Legislature, it would seem we all agree that the Integrity Commissioner is in an excellent position to impartially judge whether or not an expense was reimbursed according to the rules. This is no small feat, and I think it is further evidence that the parties are not as far apart as one might assume. This is yet more support for calling the question on the bill.

Having said that, we all know the devil is really in the details. In the case of the Integrity Commissioner's involvement, this important detail is the role of the commissioner in the process. At a very simple level, the commissioner's involvement would liken the way in which the Provincial Auditor encourages the responsible use of public funds. By providing a reporting system, the bill would add a level of scrutiny never before seen in Ontario and not seen anywhere else in Canada. The commissioner would be able to provide advice that would be consistent for all parties, regardless of the stripe. It would apply equally to all those included under the bill and would provide much-needed consistency that is lacking under the current system.

I have to say that this debate has not been without its small surprises. Last week I heard the member from Timmins-James Bay and the member from Kingston and the Islands support the notion that there might be situations where it would be appropriate for alcohol to be expensed. In fairness, they were both talking about times when members might be hosting a delegation. I think the member from Timmins-James Bay mentioned that it would seem somewhat odd to a visiting delegation from Holland, I believe it was, to be welcomed but told they couldn't have a drink. I can certainly relate to that because I've got a lot of Dutch relatives. In fact, I was just on the phone a few minutes ago to my wife's father, or Opa, as I call him.

I was very pleased to see that some of the members opposite are in fact prepared to be reasonable on this issue. I think this only points toward more support for us to wind up debate on this bill.

The only area where I have heard any substantive disagreement is in regard to the retroactive application of the bill. I have heard the opposition parties say that it "leans on them a little too much" and that "it holds the opposition to a higher standard than the government." We have made it abundantly clear that nothing could be further from the truth. As the members on this side of the House have made clear, we don't mind the scrutiny. Government brings with it the responsibility and obligation to be held accountable for one's actions.

However, we also know that a taxpayer is a taxpayer and a tax dollar is a tax dollar, and it is unfair to the people of this province not to be able to request or review the expenses of the Leader of the Opposition and his staff.

Let me repeat some of the comments of my colleague for a moment. There is nothing in this bill that would hold the former leaders of the parties opposite to a higher standard than our former leader and Premier, and the Liberals know it. They know full well that Premier Harris's records have always been subject to freedom of information legislation and that they have in fact been requested no less than 12 times. They seem to not have had a problem obtaining the records of other cabinet ministers, so I find it somewhat confusing why they think the records of the head of the government would not be subject to an FOI request. This has always been the case, and there is nothing in the current legislation before the House that would change that.

Under the proposed legislation, the numbers for the application to government would not change, and I am hard-pressed to see how the official opposition comes up with the argument that this is an unfair bill. The government would be held to account as we always have been. On the other hand, we would be taking the giant step of increasing those covered under the opposition caucuses to one each. I recognize that to increase those covered under the freedom of information legislation—I should say, to make them covered by it at all—is a giant step in accountability for the members opposite, but I hope they will agree this is a reasonable step.

It has also been said that even when the leaders of the opposition parties are covered by the proposed legislation, they would not be covered nearly to the same extent. These amendments would only allow a person to request or review the records dealing with expense claims. It would only extend freedom of information legislation to deal with those dealing with travel, meals, accommodation and hospitality, and that's it. Caucus research offices would not be covered and neither would the expense records of the deputy leader of the opposition, nor would their education critic, health critic or any other member of their shadow cabinet be covered.

I believe that despite the fact debate on this bill has been somewhat short, it has been thorough. If you were to look at the Hansard from the three days this has been debated, I think you would find something very interesting, and that is that the comments all seem to be very similar. Since the first speakers debated on the first day, delivering speeches that were only 20 minutes each, there has been remarkably little new said. In fact, I've watched some of the members in the gallery and those staff behind the chair looking around, thinking they had heard the arguments before.

Perhaps even more telling is the fact the members opposite have been so scattered in their approach to this bill. I know that some members on this side of the house firmly believe the only reason we are debating this bill is because the Liberals simply can't make up their minds on how to vote on this thing or where to land. I'm not totally sure about that, but I think we have seen an approach to this bill from an opposition without a clear idea of where they stand on this bill. I believe that if the opposition had truly presented a coherent policy on expenses, this might have been a more engaging and fulsome debate. Instead, we spent most of yesterday listening to a lecture from the members opposite about consultant contracts and the auditor's report. While I know these are all important issues in themselves, they do not belong in this debate about expenses.

However, since there is little the government can do to make the opposition debate a matter, it would seem that this motion is the best way to ensure this House does not become paralyzed by an opposition that only wants to delay the bill. I think this is perhaps the strongest argument to carry this motion and proceed with the bill. It makes little to no sense to simply debate a bill to just kill the clock and eat up time. There is simply too much important legislation to be delayed so long for a bill that deals with a matter so far removed from real people. The whole idea of this forum is to voice the legitimate concerns of the people's representatives, but there seems to be nothing logical that suggests to me that debate should carry on simply for the sake of talking.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): Let it be understood completely: the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka just said "so that the opposition can't delay the bill." I'll tell you what: this government has a majority, this government has a House leader and this government has an agenda, and the way they have taken away democracy in this Legislature means there's little or nothing we can do to delay legislation.

That's absolutely wrong. They're the ones in control. If it ain't working right, it's because you're not carrying out the House business in an appropriate manner. I said last night in the few minutes I had on another issue that I kind of liken this government, when it comes to managing—they can't manage a two-car parade. So if they're complaining about delays in legislation and something not getting done, you'd better go right to your own House leader.

It's strange that we have to time-allocate bills on which we agree. The speaker previous to me said he doesn't know where the Liberals are. Let me tell you, we're supporting this bill, as weak a bill as it is. I'm one of many in this Legislature who feels there should be full accountability for each member and all their expenses. We have a bill in front of us here that is retroactive. There are past leaders of opposition parties whose expenses are going to be sent to the Integrity Commissioner. That's OK, as long as everybody's are sent to the Integrity Commissioner. And we know, for example, that Mike Harris's are not. It's unfair to the point that not everybody is treated equally, and that's what I have as an objection to this bill—nothing else. Let's get it all on the table. Let's all of us put our expenses out. Let the Integrity Commissioner look at every expense that any one of us has. But let's treat it fairly, for goodness' sake. That's what I object to in this bill.

The other thing is—and we're speaking to a time allocation motion—this government has used time allocation more than any other government in history and, as is the case with this one, all too frequently now. Once the bill is time-allocated there's no further debate, there's no third reading debate, there's no committee meeting. You talk about democracy. The only way they seem to be able to manage this place is to simply take everybody's rights away.

That's changed a lot in the short nine years I've been here. This place has changed from one where you could come and represent your constituents and speak freely and know that you were going to have the opportunity to speak on important issues, to one where you, number one, have to fight to get on the list of speakers because we know that this government's going to choke off debate, that we're not going to get the opportunity to speak on behalf of our constituents.

Interjection.

Mr Crozier: The member across says, "What about your whip?" What I'm talking about is time. The whip does everything they can when, because of time allocation, we get the opportunity to speak so little. That's the problem that has become just the rule of the day in this House. We want, when we form the government, to change those rules so that members will have an opportunity to represent and speak on behalf of their constituents. But you know how I'm inclined to feel? I'm inclined to feel that if we're a government, you stick it right to 'em the way you guys have stuck it to us.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): Oh, no. Don't say that.

Mr Crozier: Well, I'm more benevolent than that, but you get that feeling every once in awhile. So here we are today talking about time allocation. The debate's going to be done on all of this and the fact of the matter is that we're passing a bill that's unfair, that treats some past members differently than others. That's blatantly unfair, but as some have said: one small step might be a step in the right direction, so I will be supporting this bill, but I'll be doing it rather reluctantly because it's not treating everybody fairly. Mike Harris's expenses should be right on the table along with everybody else's.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I'm going to be sharing my time this afternoon in this debate with my good friend Mr Christopherson from Hamilton West. I want to, on this particular debate, raise a couple of issues. First of all I want to deal with the time allocation motion; then I want to deal substantially with what's inside the bill.

First of all, on the time allocation motion, I think people should take heed of the comments that were just made by my good friend the member from Essex, who raises the issue of what's been happening in this House over a period of years. I've been here now for my third Parliament, and the member before me has been here at least two Parliaments. This place, quite frankly, has digressed. We've gotten to, under Mike Harris's Ontario, now carried over by Ernie Eves, to a system of Parliament that basically says that the government will introduce a bill on Monday. We'll have debate on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday for second reading debate. On Thursday they bring in a time allocation motion, and Monday morning the thing is voted on. In fact, with evening sittings now, you would be able to pass this and have it all done in one calendar week. I think that is a really big disservice to the public of Ontario.

What really bothers me even more is the extent that different groups of Conservatives in the Tory caucus don't get it. Those members who were first elected here in government and have never sat in opposition say it's only right. I look at my good friend Mr Raminder Gill and others; they think this is perfectly OK. It's wonderful. Government should have all the power it needs to exercise its right to rule in the province of Ontario. They don't understand that the basic rule of Parliament and how it works is the right for the opposition to be able, when we legitimately feel it's the right time, to raise issues, to, yes, prolong debate at times. At the end of the day, we in opposition understand that the government will get its way, but there has to be proper debate and there has to be an opportunity for the public to be heard.

Members like Raminder Gill and others who are first-trippers into the Legislature, who have never sat in opposition, just don't get it. They don't understand that this is supposed to be a democratic system; that, number one, once we introduce a bill in this House there should be, where necessary, ample time to debate the issues; number two, there should be ample committee time so that the public are able to come before the standing committees of this Legislature and say why they support a bill or why they don't and why they think it needs to be amended, withdrawn or passed. At the end of the committee process, there should again be ample debate at third reading in order to reflect on what the public has told us.

In Mike Harris's Ontario, since 1995, this government has basically stripped the rules of democracy and has said, "We're the government. We decide what happens in Ontario." Nobody has a word to say about it except for a measly couple of days of debate at second reading.

If you take a look at this government's record when it comes to just two things—one, the number of times it has used time allocation to pass a bill is shameful. This Parliament no longer passes bills by way of regular debates in this House. We almost invariably deal with a time allocation motion. I think that's wrong.

Number two is the amount of time that we don't use our committees. I think committees are the best place for us to do our work as parliamentarians. Properly done, committees can work really well, not only for the legislators but also for the public. Committee is an opportunity, if we do it properly, for members to delve, to get into issues that are of interest to them or their constituents and then to allow the public to participate by way of presenting to our committees so that they're able to tell us how they feel about issues, pro or con, and what they think we should be doing with particular pieces of legislation.

As I said, the second thing this government has done wrong, in my view, is limit the amount of time we spend in committee. Now we see, almost as a rule, legislation go through this House with little or no committee time whatsoever. For this government, it's considered to be a long period of time for a bill to go to committee for three or four days. I go to House leaders' meetings as the chief whip for our party, and the House leader says, "Well, I'm giving you guys three days at committee." Somehow we're supposed to be excited about that.

I came to this Legislature in 1990. A bill would go to committee and it would spend an entire session there. You had an opportunity to have the public present as long as it was necessary. I remember sitting on subcommittee meetings where we would say, "OK, we're giving a bill about five or 10 days." We'd go off on committee and all of a sudden there would be a huge amount of interest. The subcommittee would meet with the committee and say, "Ah, we need to extend the amount of time we're at committee." As a regular course of business, we would extend the time of the committee to deal with the issue. So the legislative process under the Rae government, under the Peterson government and under the Davis government before that was that you went into second reading and you had a full debate.

When I came to this place, a member could stand up and speak for as long as he or she wanted at one particular reading of the debate, either second or third. Normally debates where there were issues of substance went on for as much as five, six, 10 days. Then, when that was over, it went off to committee. Basically, in the fall we would have second reading. We would finish second reading in the fall. We would introduce the bill to committee later on in the fall and into the intersession of winter, and then by the next spring we came back for third reading and the bill was passed. So the way the legislative process worked was that you introduced it in the fall session, you did committee work in the intersession of winter and you passed the bill in the spring. If you introduced a bill for second reading in the spring, you would do second reading in the spring, you'd do committee in the summer and you'd come back in the fall and pass the bill. This government introduces a bill on Monday and by Thursday it's done. I think that's wrong.

Now, how do we fix this mess? I believe there are only a couple of ways we can fix it. One way is that as New Democrats, if we're elected as a majority government, we're committing that there are a number of changes we would institute in the right of democracy. There's everything from electoral reform, how we elect people, to how this place operates. We believe that members of this assembly have to have an ability to vote according to their conscience and deal with what is important to their constituents. So we believe that there has to be a little bit more flexibility for members to exercise their rights as individual members of this assembly, no matter what their political affiliation is or what party they belong to.

Number two, we believe there needs to be a system of rule changes in this House that balances the need of the government to pass legislation with the right of the opposition to scrutinize the work of the government. At the end of the day, I understand as an opposition member that the government must always have the ability to carry a bill. I don't argue as an opposition member that I should have the ability of rules to say to the government, "You're not passing your bill." At the end of the day, the government has to have the right to pass the bill. That's how Parliament works. But you have to give the opposition the right to scrutinize and question the government on what it's doing or to strengthen a bill where we agree that a bill is needed and going in the right direction.

The other change that we believe would have to happen is democratic reform, which is how we elect people. We think this Legislature doesn't work when we have majorities in here. We have just heard the member for Essex, Mr Crozier, say, "If we Liberals are elected as a majority in this House, we're going to stick it to the Tories and we're not going to change the rules." I believe that's true. To an extent I don't think that's too far from where things are going to end up, because when a majority government gets there, they're emboldened by being elected as a majority and they say, "Man, we sat under the tyranny of the Conservative government for seven years. Boy, are we going to stick it to them now that we've got the chance." At the end of the day we're just back where we started. You end up, if it was the Liberals or us who come in, with the opposition being unhappy. That's why we as New Democrats believe you have to change the way you elect people in here.

Our Legislature should work like most other democratic Legislatures in the free world, that being on a system of proportional representation. We elect people, and at the end of the day the number of members who sit in this Legislature is equal to the proportion of popular vote that their parties have got in a general election.

There are number of ways you could do that. You've heard me speak on this before. I tend to prefer the mixed proportional system they have in Germany, where you have a system that says you have 103 ridings, as we do now. You elect people first past the post, just as we do. You elect your local member because it's important to have a constituency person there to represent the constituency. But at the end of election night, when we look at the numbers, if we were to look at the 1999 election, the idea would be, Conservatives got 43% of the vote but they've now ended up with 65% of the members by way of first past the post. You would have a system that says that the number of MPPs the Tories have gotten with first past the post would equal 43% of the seats of the House. The two opposition parties would then be adjusted according to the proportion of vote that they got in the general election to make sure that the proportional vote is equal to what they got. So the idea would be that if the Tories got 43%, the Liberals would have got 30-some-odd per cent and we would have got about 12% or 13%, whatever it was, in the last election. In that way, the government wouldn't have a complete majority to do what it wants.

Let me just explain how preposterous your system is. If you look at really big issues like hydro privatization and deregulation, under proportional representation this government, in order to pass such legislation, would have had to convince either the Liberals or the New Democrats to vote with them, or a combination of members for a majority to support privatization. I can tell you that we as New Democrats would have voted against it, just as we have now. But it would have allowed the Liberals to do what they thought was right, and I don't begrudge that. If the Liberals believe, as the Tories do, that we should privatize hydro and deregulate, then let them stand with the government, vote with them and have the Tories rely on them for their vote.

That would do a couple of things. It would make sure that we represent our constituencies and that we're more accountable as members. Quite frankly, it would help the public better discern whom it is they want as their elected representative and whom they want as a government, because parties would be made more responsible in the Legislature in how they vote.

I say to the government members across the way, you're really missing the point here with time allocation motions. At the end of the day, you might be thinking that you're helping yourselves as far as your short-term agenda of being able to deal with the issue of passing your legislation through the House, but in the longer term you're really hurting yourself when it comes to what democracy should look like in Ontario.

Now to the second matter at hand. We are here today voting on a time allocation motion on this bill. I want to deal with the bill itself. I said at second reading, and it's a bit of a risky thing for an MPP to do but I'll say again, that this is nothing more than a tit-for-tat bill.

Let's explain how we got here. The government was embarrassed by the expenses of certain cabinet ministers. We had some cabinet ministers who had to resign under a cloud of shame because of what they spent when they were acting as ministers of the crown. You had other cabinet ministers and parliamentary assistants who had to repay money because they had improperly charged for things they should not have charged for in the line of duty. The government got caught—I understand that—and the government was embarrassed.

The opposition, mainly the Liberals in this case, came to the Legislature and pointed the finger at the government and said, "Ah, look at you guys. You're spending a bunch of money and you're incompetent. You guys are not doing things right. We're better and we're smarter." That's basically what the intent of the debate was.

The government said, "Oh, man, we're not going to take this lying down. We're going to introduce a bill to put the leaders of the opposition under the same scrutiny." So all this is an attempt by the Conservative government to deflect attention from their cabinet ministers and, quite frankly, engage in a tit-for-tat debate. That's all this is.

That's a little bit too bad, because in the end we're all painting ourselves with the same brush. When one member of this assembly gets up and starts to point the finger across the aisle to either the opposition or the government and says, "We're better than you. We would never do" whatever. "We're more appropriate with our expenses than you," and starts accusing the government or the opposition of somehow being crooked with their expenses, I think it paints us all with the same brush.

To me, the debate we should be having is not a tit-for-tat debate. We should be talking about how we develop a better system of accountability so that members' expenses, cabinet ministers' expenses and those of leaders of the opposition are more able to stand up to public scrutiny.

Now, I don't believe that any member—hardly a member of this assembly will knowingly go out and defraud the government, the taxpayers, for expenses. I want to believe that most members in this House, 99% of them, are honest individuals, from both the government side and the opposition side. To me, the issue is not an issue of tit-for-tat; what we should be engaging in is how we establish rules that treat all members fairly and treat, more importantly, the public fairly when it comes to the accountability for those funds.

For example, it was suggested through this debate that some ministers have spent too much money, let's say on alcohol, when it came to entertaining some of the guests they were responsible for entertaining. I would submit that if I were in the private sector, that would be seen as a normal thing to do in business. If you're taking out a client and trying to sell them a contract of some type, you bring them out for lunch and the person has a beer or two or a glass of wine, whatever. It's not seen as a bad thing, because it's private sector. If we're worried about what it looks like, what we should be having a debate in this Legislature about is how we set up rules to make that transparent. I would argue that one way to do it is to give members a—I forget what it's called again. Not an allocation. Help me out here. A per diem. Give members a per diem and give members who are having to travel because of business a per diem.

For example, when I worked at the Ontario Federation of Labour and I had to travel for my employer, or I worked for the United Steelworkers of America or I worked for Northern Cable or I worked for Pamour Mines, it was always the same: when I travelled, I got a per diem. The employer would pay my airplane ticket to where I was going. They would pay and reimburse my hotel room once I had bought it. Then they would give me a per diem, and back then it was about 35 bucks a day, to be able to have my breakfast, dinner and supper while on the road. The employer understood: "I'm sending my employee on the road, so therefore I've got to be able to defer their expense of having been on the road for me as an employer." How I spent my 35 bucks was up to me. If I wanted to have it all on breakfast, all on dinner, all on supper, or I wanted to have supper with a bottle of beer, that was up to me, but I was not in any way, shape or form able to charge more than a set amount.

So I would argue that for members it probably makes some sense, since we're allowed 12 trips per year to travel anywhere within the province of Ontario on assembly business, that you give people a per diem and you say to them, "You're allowed to travel 12. You can get 12 airline tickets per year," or 24, whatever the number is now, "to travel and do assembly business. We allow you X number of hotel rooms." I think six hotel rooms a year is what we're allowed when we travel. I see nods of six. So we're allowed to stay on the road six nights per year as private members dealing with assembly business.

I would say that rather than having a system where I can receipt for my breakfast, dinner and supper, give me a per diem—that's the way you deal with it—and make the per diem reasonable. Don't make the per diem so rich that I'm going to make money on it; make it so that it basically covers the cost. So if it costs, on average, let's say, $8 for breakfast, $12 for lunch and $25 for supper, then the person gets $45, and how you spend that money is up to you. We'd save a lot of money, as an assembly, because I would argue that receipts are probably more expense for the Legislature, but it's fairly clear, and how I deal with that is my business.

For cabinet ministers I think the rule has to be a bit different. I accept that cabinet has to entertain the people we deal with in government. For example, the Minister of Tourism, the Minister of Northern Development and Mines and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology all have to meet with people around the world to deal with trying to promote Ontario as a place to do business. I don't want to see my cabinet minister responsible for tourism so worried about submitting the expense of a business person he or she might be meeting with, who is looking at doing business in Ontario, that they're afraid to even take them out. I don't think we're helping them out in that way. So I would argue that we have to have a set of rules for cabinet ministers that is clear, that says, "We accept that you have to travel on behalf of the province, we accept that every now and then you're going to have to spring for the meals of people you're trying to do business with," and there has to be a reasonable amount of money that cabinet ministers should be allowed to spend to do that.

For us to get into this thing of tit-for-tat and pointing fingers I don't think does us any good. I want our Minister of Tourism, I want my Minister of Northern Development and Mines to have the ability to do their jobs. I don't care if they're Conservatives, New Democrats or Liberals; let's not scare people to the point that they're afraid to represent the province of Ontario at events that are important for us to be at. I think that's the kind of cloud we're creating by these debates and the kinds of questions that were raised in this House.

The question is, how do you make it accountable to the taxpayer? I don't think there's one cabinet minister in the current cabinet who wouldn't argue that it has to be transparent. They're honourable people. I don't agree with their policies, I don't agree with where the Conservative government is going on most issues, but I accept that they're honest individuals trying to do their job. So let's talk about accountability for cabinet ministers and let's say, "What's the rule?" For example, we can look at cabinet ministers and say, "All right, you have a system currently that works, where if you spend more than X amount of dollars, it gets reported. If you spend under a certain ceiling, those expenses are not reported and if you expend over a certain ceiling, all the expenses are reported."

I would argue that a simple rule when it comes to cabinet ministers—it would be hard to put them on a per diem, I would argue as a member; I'm travelling alone and I'm not expected to entertain on behalf of the province of Ontario—is a system that allows them to do what they need to do as far as their job, but limit it to the amount of—you can do it in a couple of ways. You can limit it by the number of people they have, the total amount they would charge, or you have a complete system of transparency. I think that would be fair.

For the opposition leaders, I would argue it's the same. I accept that my leader, Howard Hampton, or the leader of the official opposition, or Mike Harris, when he was leader of the third party, is going to go out and do things on behalf of the province of Ontario. They are going to do things in their jobs as leaders. We get contacted all the time in the opposition by the same people who are lobbying the government to deal with a certain issue, and at times we end up getting stuck with picking up the bill. As it stands now, we pay it out of our pockets, because I can't expense that kind of money. It's not allowed in the current rules.

I would say that we need to treat the leader of the opposition and the leader of the third party, or any recognized party, the same as you would treat a cabinet minister or the Premier. Have the same kind of rules: a clear system of transparency that says, "We accept that you have to do your job as the leader of the opposition; we accept that you've got to do your job as a cabinet minister or Premier, that there are going to be some expenses incurred in being able to do that when you're meeting with people, from Bay Street to union halls to church basements to the activist groups across this province, and at times you're going to incur an expense." Allow them to receipt that expense, but make the system transparent.

I think in that way it allows both things to happen: it allows members of cabinet and leaders of the opposition to do their jobs but at the same time provides for clear accountability for the taxpayer. At the end of the day, we need to make sure that the taxpayers, the people who foot the bill for this democracy of ours, are comfortable with what has been done.

I just want to end by saying I really feel it's unfortunate that we get into these kinds of debates. It's not that we don't need better systems of accountability—I agree with that and I'm going to vote in favour of the bill—but I really think it's a disservice to all of us when we sit here in the Legislature and point fingers at each other about how holier than thou we are compared to the others. There's an old saying about glass houses, and that might actually come out to be true. If you start throwing enough rocks around a glass house, you'll be surprised what may happen.

With that, I know that my good friend Mr Christopherson wanted to keep some time on this debate, and I look forward to what he has to say.

Again, for the record, I want to be very clear: we will be voting in favour of this legislation. It's not the kind of legislation I would like to have seen. I would like to have a system that covers all members of the assembly, that deals with a transparent system, so that people are comfortable about how we expend their money, but at the end of the day I will vote for it because at least it's a step in the right direction.

But I will vote against the time allocation on the basis that I believe we have utilized time allocation to the point that it's become a norm in here, and I don't think we're helping democracy in any way.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Another time allocation motion, of course, and I don't speak in favour nor vote in favour of time allocation motions, for obvious reasons.

Unfortunately, what most of the population of Ontario—I would say probably over 99%—doesn't realize is that this government is railroading a number of bills through this Legislature. Since it's not a topical thing to cover in the mass media, it's not going to get the kind of coverage it should and, generally speaking, people in the population don't follow procedural affairs very much. But it is actually disconcerting to watch the way this government is ramming through legislation.

Some members on the government side—and I don't expect them to stand up and say anything about this—I know would share my concerns. We were in the committee the other day dealing with amendments to two bills dealing with water in this province. The amendments were simply placed and there was a vote taking place on each one. In other words, there was no discussion on any of the amendments. We essentially didn't know how to vote on the government amendments because there was no explanation of them. There was no discussion, no input; it was simply railroaded through the House.

You feel particularly bad about this as an opposition member, but I suspect a lot of government members just thought they were being robots there, having to vote for one amendment after another or against one amendment after another. I'm not saying all the amendments the opposition proposed would have been necessarily worthy of support by the government and, conversely, I wouldn't say all the government amendments would have been worthy of support by the opposition, but I think explanations of the amendments and due consideration of them would have been a much healthier process. It just means that the Legislature becomes more and more irrelevant.

This is about a bill which deals with expenses of certain people within this House. There's no question in my mind that this is a bill of revenge. The opposition raised issues related to the expenses of people on the government side. The government decided it would get some revenge and crafted a bill which is basically unfair.

I think most of the bill is probably supportable. I think there was a need for redefining what are legitimate expenses and what are not on the part of ministers and opposition leaders and so on—I don't quarrel with that—but there isn't anybody in this House who doesn't know the government has rigged this bill so that former Premier Mike Harris does not have his expenses looked at but former leaders of the opposition—Bob Rae and Lyn McLeod—do. Also, ministers who served in the past do not have their expenses looked at, but the leaders of the two opposition parties—the official opposition and the third party—will have their expenses analyzed.

Some people may smile at that and say, "Isn't this clever of us? Look what we've done." The problem is—and I think the member for Timmins-James Bay mentioned this—there is not motivation for a subsequent government to change legislation of this kind, just like rules of the House. If I'm elected and I happen to be part of the government side, I would still be campaigning to make the legislation fair, but I don't think I would get much of a receptive audience in that regard. So when we make legislation of this kind, I think it's important that it be fair. To exempt former Premier Mike Harris, to exempt former cabinet ministers back to 1995 but not to exempt the leaders of the opposition parties back to 1995, is unfair. I think it mentions parliamentary assistants as well, that if they're not presently a parliamentary assistant, they would not be subject. I say, either all of them or none of them, but you can't pick and choose like this without it being seen as simply revenge.

I understand on the government side that it's difficult when the opposition raises these issues in the media. I'm not unsympathetic in many cases when that happens, because there are facts and figures that come out that on their bare facts and figures sound much worse than they might be. In other cases, they are legitimately bad instances, but in some cases they're not. So I understand it. But this legislation is most unfair and I find it unfortunate that the government would proceed with this.

I think I am allocated—what?—five minutes, so somebody can help me out with that in my caucus.

Not covered by the automatic review, it says, are all former cabinet ministers, parliamentary assistants and appointments before May 2000 and any caucus member who is not an opposition leader, parliamentary assistant or cabinet minister. So this has a lot of loopholes in it, and it is crafted in a very unfair fashion. If we had a Parliament where the opposition could actually have some influence, if the rules were such that the opposition could have some genuine influence in the ultimate composition of legislation, then I think we'd see a different bill.

Is there a need to introduce such legislation? I think there is. Is a lot of the provision contained within this bill reasonable? I think it is. But I think there are some very great flaws in this legislation, and I find it most unfortunate.

I find it most unfortunate as well that this bill will be rammed through with what we call a time allocation motion or what is known as closing off debate. If nobody cares about this, governments will continue to do it. No matter what those governments are, they will continue to do it. It's not healthy for the democratic system. It relegates individual members of the Legislature to the status of robots, and that's most unfortunate.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): I've got just a few minutes to make some comments on this. Again, it's rather unfortunate that an important bill like this is being allocated a limited time in which to discuss it. As a matter of fact, we're not even discussing the bill; we're going to have to discuss time allocation.

There's a hypocrisy about this place sometimes about how things are being run. It's a democratic society in which we are elected by the people to bring the issues and debate the issues of the day. But then the government of the day and the rules themselves have made it impossible for us to do so. I think somehow something will have to be done in order to make sure that the people's voices and concerns are being heard.

I was listening very carefully today to the previous speakers, and one that jumps out at me is the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. He said a rather profound thing. He said, "The devil is in the details." What he is saying to us is, "I'm not going to give you any chance at all to debate the legislation because you won't be seeing what we are going to do in the regulations and the details of it all, and we will limit you from discussing it." So the devil really lies within the details—the devil of the details of this very undemocratic, Harris-Eves government which has continued to be so undemocratic the whole time.

You may recall, Mr Speaker, that this didn't happen overnight. You may recall, from the first legislation, the first bill they put through the House, how democratic they were. Myself and many of my colleagues had to make sure that the public understood that this government had no intention of being democratic about this process.

Here we are now, and we are forced not to talk about the bill itself but to talk about time allocation and why the government is putting forward such an act. But we know why: they don't want us to discuss the details of all this.

This is a very important piece of legislation, an extremely important piece of legislation. As a matter of fact, this came about because of the vigilant aspect of the opposition, of my party, who from time to time had to reveal some of the unscrupulous ways in which things were being done over there by the government. I know it's rather embarrassing when we had to say to one of our colleagues in the House that the way he's spending his money, taxpayers' money, is so awful. Then, after being questioned a couple of times, he had to resign his seat because it had not only become embarrassing to him or to his party, but the way they were spending taxpayers' money was completely embarrassing to the government.

The way this government has been spending people's money is just completely disgraceful. Actually, they talk about giving back money to those who can't afford it, and it's all a tax rebate. The way they went about, as I said, the utter abuse of the poor people, those who need some support in our society—and that's what government is all about—when they cut the support for the people who needed money from the welfare system and cut it off with lots of laughter—as a matter of fact one of the ministers had to say, "They can go and eat dented tuna, if they want."

In the meantime, they have expense accounts where people are lavishly giving $120 tips for one day, yet the poor people out there who need the support of their own taxpayers' money were being exploited in this manner.

It's no wonder, of course, that they want to really rush this bill through without any full debate. My colleague from Sudbury pointed out a number of bills that have gone through here with closure aspects and no way of debating these bills. It is disgraceful and awful. We would like, in the short minutes that we have, to tell the people outside, the people whom we represent, that this government that is so unaccountable to anyone—they're only accountable to their own selves in how they spend the taxpayers' money in the sense of blowing it to the extreme with their extreme wantonness—when we often want to debate this issue, none would like to do that. They want to rush it through the night with great expenditure and big packages coming to us, and then tell us to review it overnight.

I'm saying that this is disgraceful. The people will remember, very much so, the way this government has rammed it through in the nights to make sure that we cannot debate this. We hope somehow, when the day comes that they call the election, people will be reminded of the atrocious, undemocratic way this government has carried out its duties.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I think the tragedy in this is that we have to speak to a bill such as this. Sometimes the reality is that common sense isn't very common. We have spent quite a bit of time in this Legislature looking at expense claims. By and large, I think the sense is that one, two or three individuals have poisoned it for others.

I've had an opportunity to look at some expense claims myself, and we see claims in there for meals and to entertain groups. I have no trouble with that. In fact, some of them are kind of funny. There is one in there where an individual first of all claimed for some rye, following that claimed for some steak and then, following that, claimed for a bottle of Aspirin. I suspect there's probably a story behind it that we're not going to be interested in or pursue.

It is a bill that is unfair. It is unfair in the sense that it has been specifically and intentionally developed to exempt some government members—to wit, the former Premier Harris—and yet to reach back in time and claw forward from previous governments individuals who were leaders. It's done for revenge, and I think it demeans the parliamentary process when that's the motive for it. It's done just to get even for the opposition having uncovered some of these expense claims.

I think it is a grave error for a number of reasons: first of all, it is a grave error because, although the government may think they've won, they've exempted their former leader but they've been able to force the other leaders to open up their claims, so I don't think they will be particularly startling when they are revealed.

The people of Ontario are not stupid. The people of Ontario who are our employers, the people of Ontario who have sent us here, not to lord it over them but rather to be their servants at Queen's Park—the people of Ontario know the game being played, and they don't like the game. My fear is that when they don't like the game, they absent themselves from the process of democracy. So when they see this, it's wrong.

It was the opposition who asked for these expense claims. I make no apology for that. I make no apology. In each and every one of our ridings, we have constituents who are struggling financially but who have sent us here. It may be impossible for some on the government side to understand that although it is kind of funny that a cabinet minister claimed a bottle of Aspirin, there are families in this province who struggle to buy a bottle of Aspirin for their ill children. That may seem funny to you, but that is a reality. There are too many families in this province who run out of money before they run out of month.

In a way, what these claims said to me was not the dollar amounts; how much was paid for a flight to Sudbury doesn't matter, because that has to happen. But it's an attitude, when a member can't pick up the money for the cost of a bottle of Aspirin. It's not a free ride here. None of us came here for a free ride. I don't care which party or which side of the House; I truly believe that every member here came to, in their way, make a difference.

Unfortunately, this bill follows the pattern of virtually every other bill, which is time allocation: stifle the discussion, stifle debate. That's frustrating for the opposition. It's got to be frustrating to be a government member on the back bench, to be given scripts to read, to have to follow the line given by it. I have a great deal of sympathy for you at times, because there's no way you can believe what you're saying, no way you can believe that. I'm sorry you have to pretend to defend it. Maybe after, when we're having coffee somewhere, you can say, "Boy, I wish this government hadn't rammed this other bill through." You have to stick to the line, and I understand that, but you ought to know that you have our sympathy from this side. On this side, we can do what has to be done, which is the right thing. We will vote against this bill, not because it is wrong to have a limitation on the expenses, but because it is wrong to use time allocation and ram through every piece of legislation.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): I'm really happy to have gotten up to speak following the last comment the previous speaker made. He said, "We're going to do the right thing because we're opposed to time allocation motions in the Legislature."

One of the things that is continually frustrating for our House leader and for the government on this side of the House is the House leaders opposite refusing to allow smooth passage of legislation through the Legislature. Time and time again, the opposition parties have refused to let pieces of legislation that they support go through.

I remember that early on in the session there was the red light camera bill. This was a bill to extend a pilot project to five municipalities so they could keep using red light cameras for another two years to experiment to see if those were appropriate and would improve safety in their communities. Everyone in the facility agreed on it. We debated it, I think, for five sessions. Why? Because the opposition was being obstructionist. In fact, they voted for the bill.

Today we had two more bills that the members opposite—we brought in a time allocation motion for the consumer protection bill because the opposition didn't want to let it go through. When we brought it in, they stood up and said, "Oh, what an affront to democracy. Here they are again with another time allocation. Isn't this awful?" Well, do you know what? Today we voted 90 to zero. All three parties agreed with it, yet the hue and cry and the time allocation and, "Oh, my gosh, this is a bad bill."

Another bill today—it wasn't just the consumer protection bill—was the water protection bill brought in by the Minister of the Environment, and it was the same thing. We had debates about that in this Legislature day after day after day. Finally, the minister said, "Look, you guys agree with this bill. Why are you holding it up? Let's get on with it." "We'll do the right thing," the gentleman opposite just said. Well, you agree with the bill. It's about water protection for people. Let it go through. But no, so our House leader filed another time allocation motion. Oh, you'd think the world was falling apart: "Democracy is over with. Isn't this a terrible thing, another time allocation motion?" Well, today the water protection bill comes up, and what's the vote on that one? Ninety in favour, zero against.

Don't tell us that time allocation is awful and we're trying to stop democracy. That's nonsense. The people at home don't really know how this place works, the inner workings, but they should know that any time you guys get up and complain about time allocation motions, it's a lark. Believe it, folks at home.

I'm going to talk to my good friend from Kingston and the Islands, Mr Gerretsen, because I've been around when he has debated this bill and I want to speak to some of the things he has said in the debate on this. You know, one of the things the member for Kingston and the Islands has said in the past, as did the member opposite who just spoke, from Prince Edward-Hastings, is, "Wow, they're just mad because we revealed a few bad apples out there who had too many expenses. There's just a couple of cabinet ministers. They're embarrassed, so they're mad."

Give me a break. The Liberals filed 75 or 100 freedom of information act requests for cabinet ministers' and parliamentary assistants' expenses over the past four years. We may find out that they were advised to do this by some American consultants, perhaps by Mr Kinsella, who's now advising them but used to advise the federal Liberals—a noted, nasty, dirty-politics politico. As soon as they got in with this band, all of a sudden these freedom of information act requests started; we all started assembling our receipts and sending them in over the years. You know, it wasn't a few bad apples they were concerned about. I remember I had 24 cents on a bill that was PST for alcohol. I didn't see it; it got through and I paid for it. It wasn't a few bad apples with thousands and thousands of dollars of expenses—24 cents PST alcohol and there was a press release to my riding: "Isn't this guy a rotten guy?" So just save that, because we all know better on both sides of the aisle.

It's been difficult. I remember, as a newly elected member, I became a parliamentary assistant in 1997 to the Minister of Labour. They give you this government credit card. I came into this position and my idea was to save money. I was tired of hearing stories of waste and so on. So I got a government credit card and I said, "I really don't want one. What do I need that for?" They said, "Well, as a parliamentary assistant to labour, you are going to be asked to travel around the province, make speeches to different groups, meet with stakeholders, meet with individuals who have concerns with the Ministry of Labour. Those are expenses that you can expense and should expense to the government of Ontario because they are expenses you incurred where you had to travel doing your job."

I was extremely hesitant to use that card. I started using that card when my wife started beating me up at home all the time because I was expensing a lot of things on my own, just paying them out of my salary. She said, "You know, the problem with that, Bart, is that first of all no one is ever going to thank you for it or even notice you've done it. Second of all, you're taking money out of your own kids' mouths." Reluctantly, I started to use these credit cards. And by the way, we use the credit cards for these expenses and then pay the bills ourselves. We submit that receipt, and then it gets reimbursed back to us.

But I'll tell you, there was a great deal of ambiguity about what was considered a legitimate expense. Rules have had different interpretations in different offices, and this has ultimately meant a loose set of standards without a clear authority to judge complaints. These vague rules, widely interpreted, have only led to confusion among ministers, parliamentary assistants and their staff about what was allowed and what was not. I want to add that what was confusing was process. I go off and use my credit card and bring receipts and put them in this pocket and put them in that pocket and one wallet or another. I come back and go to my staff, the people on my staff in charge of paying receipts, and I give them all these receipts. I say, "Take care of these. File for my expenses form." My staff does the job of going through the expenses. If there's anything there that's supposed to be omitted, they omit that expense. Then we fill out a form, sign it up and send it off to the ministry.

In some ministries, they have a double-check, where the ministry will actually take it, look at the receipt, look at what you filed, and if they find something that was inadvertently receipted that shouldn't have been, they'll call you up and say, "Mr Maves, this was something that shouldn't have been receipted." You look at it and say, "Gee, you're right. I apologize. Take it off." Some ministries didn't do that.

This was an odd situation. I should be my first check, my staff person who submits receipts is the second check and the ministry is the third check. In many cases, the ministry wasn't the third check and that's how some of these things inadvertently got through.

There's one thing that's a little bit irritating about this whole debate when you have your integrity impugned because, as I said before, you inadvertently expensed over the past seven years something that shouldn't have been expensed and rightly reimbursed the taxpayers for that. One of the things that's irritating to me is that in this Legislature in 1995, and I'll bet you 95% of the people in Ontario don't realize this, we eliminated our tax-free allowances as MPPs. No other governing body, municipally or federally, has done that, that I'm aware of, in this country.

We also got rid of a gold-plated pension plan. Do you know right now, today, after having been here for eight years, if I lost the next election or decided not to run again in the next election, I would be eligible to start, as a 38-year-old man, with about a $35,000-a-year pension, adjusted for inflation, for the rest of my life? I know MPPs right now who have a pension, who served 15 years in this place, who make more money on their pension than I make as an active MPP. We said that gold-plated pension plan was unfair, and it was. We repealed it and we replaced it with an RRSP contribution plan. I now get $4,000 a year put into an RRSP contribution plan.

You know what? There are people who wonder why we did that. The reason pension plans were there in the first place was because people gave up their careers. You could have been a lawyer, you could have had a huge stable of clients and then you left for four, eight or 12 years to go into the Legislature, and when you came back to your law firm, you had to start over. That's why originally these pension plans were put in place. Well, we eliminated it.

I know that a lot of members opposite feel the exact same way. It's very frustrating to have done the right thing, maybe even gone too far. Quite often, in the hallways, we have conversations about whether we went too far, eliminating that pension plan and replacing it with an RRSP contribution plan. But the point of the matter is that the pension plan was too rich and we dealt with it. What's really irritating is that I had some of my best friends, my neighbours, say to me after the last election, "The good thing is you've got your pension for the rest of your life." No.

So we have had a great deal of integrity on this side of the aisle. The member from Erie-Lincoln, who's younger than I am, under that old pension plan, had he decided to retire after this mandate in office, probably would have been eligible for about $2 million in his lifetime. He voted away $2 million. I did that too. I think that's a huge sacrifice. I think that shows a great deal of integrity on the part of members of this government. We introduced that bill. We were the ones who got rid of the pension plan. When other people nail you for inadvertent expenses over a seven-year period, they're right, it was the wrong thing to file and it got through the process, but come on, the member for Erie-Lincoln voted away $2 million.

Mr Frank Mazzilli (London-Fanshawe): He bought a fishing license.

Mr Maves: He bought a fishing license one day when he was with northern development. He was also the Minister of Mines, I recall, and he did a great job there.

It's hard when the members opposite get on their soap box and want to talk about integrity. I recall, I'm going to go back to the Hansard—oh, believe me I will—Mr Smitherman—

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): You can't name names.

Mr Maves: Toronto Centre-Rosedale. You're right, I can't name names. I apologize, Speaker. I withdraw that. The member from Toronto Centre-Rosedale, after some of these expenses came out, and some of them were large for some members, several days in a row got up on his high horse and talked about how the only ethical member in this Legislature, the only man with any integrity was Dalton McGuinty.

The media said, "Hey, Dalton. How about letting us see some of your expenses? You're beating up on the members opposite. You're beating up on the Minister of Tourism, someone who travels all over the province. The parliamentary assistant for the Ministry of Tourism travels all over the province and has flights as expenses and so on. You're beating up pretty hard on him." The media said, "Why don't you release your expenses?" He said, "All copies, all receipts of mine, I assume this is done by the other two leaders as well, have been submitted to the Board of Internal Economy. What I have here is a summary of my expenses and I'm quite prepared to make those public.

I remember the time—it was for the previous year. Mr McGuinty submitted something like $34,000. I sat there, "It's $34,000? Wait a second." Of course, the media write in the paper, "Mr McGuinty's expenses were $34,000." Just go to the individual members' expenditures, which are filed on all of us. We all have individual expenditures. Mr McGuinty, in three years, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002: $249,290 in a three-year period. It's all right here. That's all public. But when he said, "Oh, here's my expenses, 34 grand," I guess he forgot about all the other stuff he filed here.

Really, $250,000. You could check John Baird's expenses, another Ottawa member, Mr Sterling or Mr Guzzo—nowhere near that amount. It's frustrating for members on this side of the aisle.

We needed to introduce this bill so that we could clarify this. It's important we go to the Integrity Commissioner. It's good to have members go to the Integrity Commissioner every year. We show him all our investments and we show him our wives' investments. I have to show him any investments my kids have. He looks over those investments to make sure I don't have any conflicts. I think everyone in this Legislature thinks that's a fairly valuable process.

If someone calls them and offers them something or wants to go to dinner with them or go to a game or something with them, some of the members are like, "I don't know if I should do this. Am I allowed to accept this?" They pick up the phone and call the Integrity Commissioner. The Integrity Commissioner has a chat with you and tells you whether you should accept it or not. This is a similar process, where we're asking the Integrity Commissioner to become involved in the receipt process.

They did a press release about me for a small amount of PST on liquor that was inadvertently submitted over a seven-year period, bashing me over the head with that and challenging my integrity. Then I hear, the other night, my good friend from Kingston and the Islands say, and I quote from Hansard, "I, by the way, don't have a particular problem with, for example, people who may want to do business in Canada, from which we can all benefit in Ontario, being wined and dined to a certain reasonable extent so that we can get their business here. I've got no problem with that at all, because I know that sometimes you have to spend a dollar in order to make $10 and in order make our economy grow."

If you have no problem with that at all, why all the press releases in everybody's riding for, in some cases, the smallest of amounts of errors? I think the gentleman from Kingston and the Islands is such. I know he didn't have anything to do with some of those press releases. In fact, I'm willing to bet that when those American advisers and Mr Kinsella and others started to advise the provincial Liberals about dirty tactics, dirty tricks and attacking people's integrity, there were some of the members over there who said, "Don't go there. Let's not do this. This is problematic. We should be above this." I think for several weeks in a row, over the last couple of months, they've probably even had that debate several times in their caucus. That's what I think.

So there are some members, perhaps members who decided that they wanted to use the government Purologer service for their friends, who said, "Pshaw, we're going to go there," and they went there. And now we're here and we have a bill. Mr Eves says, "Look, let's get this all out on the table. Let's clarify how this should all work." That's the bill we have in front of us today, and I'm going to vote in favour of it. The Liberals have spoken in favour of it on several occasions. Let's see how they vote. Let's see really who has integrity.

Mr Gerretsen: Let me first of all say I stand by everything I said in that Hansard, and I will say it again. It's all a question of reasonableness. What would you do if you were spending your own money? That to me is the ultimate test. Quite frankly, I don't remember saying in this House at all what anybody else's expenses were, because I assume that we're all honourable until proven otherwise. So that's one point.

The other point that I very quickly wanted to make is that of course what we're really dealing with here is a time allocation motion. It's interesting. There has been a total of 19 bills that are coming to a conclusion during this session. Seventeen of them have been time-allocated, which means there were only two bills that were not time-allocated. Let's take a look at those two bills that weren't time-allocated.

One of them was the Back to School Act (Simcoe Muskoka Catholic District School Board), and I think there was unanimous agreement among everyone here that that situation should be settled.

The other bill, and I have a great problem with the way in which this bill was handled, was last Thursday, the Justice Statute Law Amendment Act. The House leaders decided, after most of us had already left town, at about 3:30 or 4 o'clock that afternoon, to call that bill for final reading. You may recall that the vote was 53 to 0, because 50 members had already taken off for their ridings, which was a highly unusual move. I think the move that was perpetrated at that time didn't speak well to the democratic actions that a place like this should take.

I totally believe that everyone should be covered in the act that we're dealing with here today, Speaker. Nobody should be excluded who has had anything to do with this place going back to 1995, or whatever date you want to pick. But do not allow us to pass an act which excludes specific individuals, whether they're former Premiers or former cabinet ministers, and yet include former leaders of the opposition. That's all I want to say about that.

If you want to have some real accountability—I will go back to this, and I know Mr Maves will agree with me, because he had a similar bill to my Bill 5, which is the Audit Amendment Act. If you want to get some real accountability into the entire system as to how we spend public money, go to your House leader and ask him to bring that bill forward and let's have an open debate in exactly the same way that we had an open debate here last night about the double-hatter situation. If there are some members in this House who don't like the Audit Amendment Act, let them vote against it. This is an act that has had unanimous second reading in this House. It went to committee. It was unanimously approved at the committee, with all the amendments thereto, and for some strange reason only known to the government House leader, it's not being called for third reading.

What will the act do? The act will allow the auditor to basically follow the money. Two thirds of the money that we spend in this place, almost $40 billion out of the $60 billion annually, goes to grant recipients: the hospitals, the universities, the colleges, the school boards, some of it to municipalities etc, and there is absolutely no internal accountability system for that. What my act with its amendments will do is give the auditor the power to go after the money. Will he do it in every case? Of course he won't; he simply doesn't have the human resources to be able to do that.

It's interesting that the Minister of Finance in 1996, a certain Mr Eves, who is now the Premier, said that he was going to bring in amendments to the Audit Act. It was again stated in 1999 by the then Minister of Finance, Mr Flaherty, that he was going to bring amendments to the Audit Act to allow the auditor to follow the money. The Public Sector Accountability Act, which was trumpeted by this government as giving real accountability, of course was never proceeded with.

The only conclusion that I can come to as an individual member is that this government talks a great line about accountability and yet it really doesn't want to see any accountability. There should be accountability for every dollar we spend in this place, whether it relates to our expenses, to the money that we give out to the various institutions out there or to the dollars that are spent by government programs themselves. That's what the system is about.

So I would ask the members opposite, if you really want to see accountability, call Bill 5 back on the order paper. Let's pass it and give the individual who after all is an officer of this assembly the true ability to follow the money.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): It's interesting that Bill 216—and it almost pains me to say this, but the reality is that this is political payback. That's what's going on.

Hon Mrs. Johns: Yes, it is.

Mr Christopherson: One of the ministers across the way has confirmed it is. I won't say that minister's name, but it's that apparent that a minister would be prepared do say that, albeit in a heckle. But at least she would say something publicly. It is payback and it's a shame.

Mr Mazzilli: We don't get mad; we get even.

Mr Christopherson: Now I hear from one of the backbenchers, "We don't get mad; we get even." Here we go with the macho stuff. Look, this is really not getting us or the people of Ontario anywhere. It really is a shame we got to this point. I understand the politics of it, like virtually everyone else in this place. The Libs went through the expenses of the cabinet ministers with a fine-toothed comb and found something on the member for Burlington, who was then the Minister of Tourism, and ultimately that minister was asked to step down or stepped down of his own accord. Now we've got payback.

Mr Mazzilli: No.

Mr Christopherson: Now it's "no" from the same member who was doing the macho thing a minute ago.

Mr Mazzilli: Fishing licences. Where does it end?

Mr Christopherson: The member is saying to me, "Where does it end?" There we can agree, because it's almost becoming like Spy vs Spy. You go through the magazine far enough and it becomes Spy vs Spy vs Spy vs Spy, ad nauseam.

I will say this to the government, especially those who weren't here from 1990 to 1995: before you get too offended about what was done with your expenses and everything else, you might want to talk to some of your veteran colleagues about what your party's approach was to our ministers. To some degree, when you're in government and in power and you get the perks and the privileges and the authority of being in power, there are certain things that come with it. One of them is incredible scrutiny.

So I think there's enough blame, if you will, to go all round. I'm not trying to stand here and say the NDP is blameless but, again, even the government acknowledges this wasn't about us; this was going after the official opposition.

As for the bill itself, some of you should be having a great deal of difficulty explaining away parts of it, especially when you want to get up, as some have done today and at other times, and try to take the moral high ground. Give me a break. What does this bill say about who has to submit receipts under this new law and who doesn't? It says in sections 13 and 16 that the people this affects, whose expenses are going to be reviewed, are cabinet ministers or parliamentary assistants who held office on November 28, 2002. That was the day of the first reading. That's when this bill was introduced.

So if you were a parliamentary assistant or a cabinet minister on November 28, 2002—and forward, I would assume, obviously—then your expenses are to be subjected to this bill and the scrutiny this bill provides. However, they then have a different deadline for the two opposition leaders. Come on. For the opposition and their staff, it's June 26, 1995. Now, one might ask, why would that be? Why would there be a difference? Well, the difference is that by picking June 26, 1995, which if memory serves me correctly was the exact day that the new cabinet of the new government was sworn in, the date of the formal transition of power, what it does is, it captures not just the current leader of the official opposition but the previous leader.

Fair enough. You want to get even? You're going to cast your net as wide as you can. So fair enough. If that's your motivation, then obviously you want to do it as thoroughly as possible and in a way that you think is going to catch, what, the biggest fish you can. Fair enough. But how come it doesn't apply to cabinet ministers and Premiers and parliamentary assistants back to June 26, 1995? Why would that be? Why would the cabinet, members of the executive council, be treated differently than the opposition leaders and their staff?

It might suggest that you want it both ways. You want the ability to go back because you think if you go back far enough, you can not only trip up the current leader of the official opposition but also his predecessor. But by doing it this way, of course, former Premier Harris is protected. Come on. I'm just surprised that you weren't so embarrassed that you just said in caucus and in cabinet, "We can't do this. Come on. How can we expect to get away with this? It's so obvious. We'll be so embarrassed to bring this in. Can you just imagine the opposition members standing up and waving the bill around and saying, 'But look at the date difference'?"

I see cabinet ministers laughing. I suspect I'm not that far off the mark in terms of the debate. And yet, here we are. The government backbenchers are duly getting up and doing their job and defending the bill as best they can, but here is this blatant, transparent, obvious, dare I say almost juvenile attack on the official opposition, and you protect Mike Harris.

I always thought Mike Harris presented himself as a guy who didn't need anybody to fight his fights. I always thought Mike Harris presented himself as a tough guy who was prepared to stand up and say, "Hey, I'm the guy who brought in the Common Sense Revolution. I do what I say I'm going to do, and I'm not afraid of anybody, and all of you, come on," and that whole big, huge, macho routine. Is that not a lot of the persona that former Premier Harris offered of himself and, by extension, the government? Yet here we are with his successor, Premier Ernie Eves, protecting Mike Harris?

I wonder how Mike Harris feels about that. I suppose on the one hand, if he had something to hide, he's probably very relieved, and I guess he should be thanking Premier Eves. Rather than being upset with throwing overboard his own personal agenda, perhaps I guess now it's time to call up and say, "Thank you, Ernie. Thank you so much for covering me and taking care of me, because without you, Ernie, I would be in so much trouble. They would have found out about these inappropriate expenses, and you protected me. Thank you, Ernie. You're a real buddy."

But I am surprised that Mike Harris would want that to happen, unless that's the case. It would be more consistent with the Mike Harris that I knew in this place for almost 13 years, for him to phone up and say, "Please go into committee of the whole and make the change. I'm not afraid. I'm prepared to stand up to the same scrutiny as Ernie Eves. I'm prepared to stand up and face the same scrutiny as the leader of the official opposition and the leader of the third party." That's the Mike Harris that used to be in this place, not the one that I can only assume is somewhere in Toronto or North Bay, cowering in the corner, hoping that the Ernie Eves Protect Mike Harris bill gets passed, because the Mike Harris that I remember, if he didn't have anything to hide, would want to stand on that principle. Isn't that the sort of person he portrayed and presented himself as to the people of Ontario: a stand-up guy, not afraid; he didn't do anything wrong, so why should he be afraid? Instead, he's going to allow Ernie Eves to protect him because he's afraid?

That's all I can conclude, because it is just so blatant. Think about it. I'm going to read the exact words because it's so almost unbelievable that one needs to have it read word for word so people can appreciate the fact that this is real: this transparent, unfair attack on the two opposition leaders as well as the protection for the frightened Mike Harris. Here's what it says. This is in the explanatory note of Bill 216, An Act respecting access to information—except Mike—for the review of expenses—except Mike—and the accountability of Cabinet ministers—except Mike—opposition leaders and certain other persons. What does it say?

"Sections 13 to 16 provide for a transitional review by the Integrity Commissioner of specified reviewable expenses of people who hold office as cabinet ministers or parliamentary assistants on November 28, 2002 and their staff and people who have held office as opposition leader anytime on or after June 26, 1995 and their staff."

If you're going to do something like this, at least have the guts to do it in an honourable way. There are honourable ways to battle each other. I don't have a problem with that phrase, by the way. I'd much rather see us battle here than out on some battlefield. All you can lose here is a political career, rather than some mother's son's life. So fair enough. There are going to be battles, and it's like war. Fair enough. But do you know what? Even honour among thieves has a certain currency with most people. Where is the honesty here? I'm looking right at one particular member who portrays himself, I would say, for the most part, for very good reason—I've got to throw in that little covering—but really, an honourable member who probably has a lengthy career here, who has stood out as a fine example of a parliamentarian. There is nothing honourable about this.

Mr Gerretsen: Who is he talking about? Name names.

Mr Christopherson: I was talking about the member from Niagara, Niagara Centre—Niagara Falls. We won't go there. We shan't go there, given the season. No, I was talking about the member for Niagara Falls, who spoke not that long ago, and that's who I was looking at when I just spoke. I consider him a man of integrity. I'm surprised that he feels comfortable with a bill like this, because there is nothing honourable about this.

Notwithstanding the motivation and the time we're wasting doing all this so you can get even with the Liberals, it is so dishonourable to have one deadline for your ministers and your parliamentary assistants and a different deadline for the opposition parties. There is probably some kind of charter challenge here. Where is the equity? Where is the fairness? Where are your guts? If you're prepared to stand by what the Integrity Commissioner uncovers, or you certainly expect the opposition leaders to stand by what the Integrity Commissioner finds, why aren't you prepared to live by the same rules?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): We are.

Mr Christopherson: I hear a cabinet minister saying, "We are," but you aren't, because the predecessor to the official opposition is subject to this bill but your predecessor as Premier is not.

Hon Mrs Johns: You can FOI me all you want.

Mr Christopherson: Don't give me that about FOI. Not everything is FOIable. The fact of the matter is that there are two deadlines in here for a very specific reason: either Mike Harris has something to hide and you're protecting him or you fear he may have something to hide and you're protecting him.

I've got to tell you, it's a wonderful image. I'd love to see a cartoonist do a picture of Lyn McLeod, who's the predecessor to Dalton McGuinty as the official opposition leader, standing in a corner in a ring, if you will, prepared to do battle with anybody that wants to come at her. She's prepared to defend her expenses. Then in the same picture, in the other corner, cowering and shaking and hiding behind the new legislation, is Mike Harris. Because that's what this does. Lyn McLeod, Dalton McGuinty, Howard Hampton: all prepared to stand behind what the Integrity Commissioner finds.

The current Premier obviously is prepared too. But not Mike Harris; Mike Harris is protected. So either he has something to be afraid of and he owes Ernie big time or Ernie is worried that Mike might have something to worry about, in which case Ernie is taking care of Ernie.

Either way, Speaker, in my opinion, it really taints what otherwise is something that is in the best interests of the people of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debate.

Mr Galt has moved government notice of motion number 84. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1747 to 1757.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

Ayes

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Pursuant to standing order 37, the motion to adjourn is deemed to have been made.

We'll take a few seconds while the chamber clears.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE*DAIRY INDUSTRY

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London has given notice of his dissatisfaction with an answer to the question given by the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing concerning the edible oils act. The member for Elgin-Middlesex-London has five minutes.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I open by making the statement that I find it very disturbing that on the day I asked the question of the Premier of this province, December 4, 2002, he chose not to answer this question. If the Premier meant half of what he said on the election trail, or if he's remotely interested in what he talked about at his much-touted round table, he wouldn't have sloughed this question off to another minister.

I would contend that the Premier didn't really have a grasp or understanding of what I was talking about when I asked the question. The Premier looked around, sloughed the question off, and then acted in a totally disinterested manner on the question. I think that's irresponsible on behalf of the Premier. The Premier should be concerned about the second-largest industry in this province.

I referred to a December 4, 2001, letter that the former Minister of Agriculture, Mr Coburn, wrote to Gord Coukell, the chair of the Dairy Farmers of Ontario. I'm going to read again, for the record, the pertinent sections of this letter:

"One piece of Bill 87 is the repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act. I have heard your concerns about the lack of federal safeguards to ensure products are labeled properly. I can tell you that Ontario believes the federal government needs to ensure its regulatory processes are adequate to protect consumers and industry interests. We will call on the federal government to amend its food labelling legislation to ensure that blended products are labeled properly on store shelves.

"I, the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, am willing to submit to you today that in order to ensure the proper safeguards are in place, it is my intention to amend Bill 87 at the earliest possible date to remove reference to the June 2003 repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act in order to ensure that the federal government has time to do its work."

I think the minister at the time was very clear and very straightforward. The minister acknowledged that June 2003 was too soon to ensure the necessary safeguards and regulations were in place. The minister promised in that letter that it would be dealt with as soon as possible. But here we are, over one year after that letter was written to the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, and we still have no resolution in front of us, before this Legislature.

I contend that in discussions with the dairy farmers, the Dairy Farmers of Ontario accept the future repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act. They're not debating this issue. What they are concerned about is that there are jurisdictions surrounding Ontario that have regulations and safeguards in place for blended products. The Dairy Farmers of Ontario have come to the table. They're willing to compromise and to negotiate. What the Dairy Farmers of Ontario demand and deserve, though, is a level playing field with our neighbours to the south. When we look to the south, we see that level playing field being put in place by American legislation called the Filled Milk Act. You can't justify, and you can't just pull the rug out from underneath an industry.

The minister acknowledged a problem, the minister made a commitment and now we're asking what the government is going to do and when you are going to deal with this.

I introduced a private member's bill today that gave, I thought, a reasonable amount of time to deal with the issue, to appropriately deal with the outstanding issues. All stakeholders, though, during the discussions need to be at the table.

The minister last year made the commitment that he would call on the federal government to ensure that blended products are labelled properly. But we have not heard, and the dairy farmers have not heard, this government calling on the federal government to act. This government has sat on this issue, and it's crunch time; it's the crucial time that the government deal with this.

I asked for unanimous consent today, twice, to put a deadline in place. That unanimous consent was denied by the government.

Repeal the act and repeal it responsibly.

I want to deal just quickly with the whole issue of supply management, because I asked you specifically about this government's commitment to supply management. I quoted from a letter from the Minister of Agriculture, but nonetheless the phrase she used in there doesn't show this government's unequivocal support for agriculture. The federal government has shown its unequivocal support for supply management. The Liberal Party has given its unequivocal support for supply management. We've yet to see that unequivocal support for supply management from this government.

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I'm pleased to address the question of the member opposite this evening.

First off, I want to address his first comment. The Premier of Ontario certainly understands the importance of agriculture in this province and the important role it plays in the economic activity in Ontario. He has made that statement on many, many occasions.

Our government has certainly displayed that support time and again in the length of time that I've been here, since 1999. We have an outstanding record with respect to consulting with our agricultural entities to strengthen and build on the successes they've had over the years so that we're better able to compete and meet some of the challenges we have today in the marketplace. This particular issue is another one of those challenges.

The member opposite questioned our support for supply management. Well, Minister Johns addressed that today in her response to a question. Maybe I'll just read her comment again today. This is Minister Johns: "I assure you that the Ontario government, including the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, continues to strongly support supply management. Supply management has worked well for the dairy, egg, broiler hatching egg, chicken, turkey and flue-cured tobacco industries."

The minister went on to say, "It is important that supply-managed commodities continue to evolve in order to respond to the changing environment in which they operate."

That comment is certainly supported by the Web site that the dairy farmers have, where they claim, "Working with farmers across Canada, DFO"—the Dairy Farmers of Ontario—"is positioned to respond to new trade rules and the realities of a changing market."

The realities of a changing market are some of the most important things we have to deal with on a daily basis to make sure that our industries, our commodities do have an opportunity to expand and grow and build on the successes they've enjoyed over the years.

Agriculture in this province, the second-largest industry, plays an important role in the economic setting of this province and will continue to do so, certainly under the support this government has provided them in the past and will continue to do in the future.

In terms of our consultation and working with our stakeholders, the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, there was extensive consultation on the Food Safety and Quality Act. Certainly when I was ag minister, that relationship was very close, where we worked to be able to address the concerns of the Dairy Farmers of Ontario, no different from any other stakeholders in agriculture.

I make reference to the Nutrient Management Act. There's been extensive consultation there as well. One of the most recent ones is the Agricultural Employees Protection Act, where we worked to address some of the real concerns that farmers had, family farms and the agricultural community in general, with respect to the workplace on their farms on a daily basis, where they felt threatened.

The Liberals on the other side certainly aren't too sure where they stand on agricultural issues. The member opposite made a statement today and it may even change tomorrow. For example, they abstained from the first reading vote on Bill 187 and then voted for it in the end. Then in a short time the leader of the official opposition wants to change the legislation and allow some agricultural workers the right to form a union. Furthermore, the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora and the president of the Ontario Liberal Party says he wants to repeal Bill 187.

So you have to question really what the position is on the other side. It's nice that the member opposite has raised this issue, but the unequivocal support that we've given in the past to agriculture and to the dairy farmers is something we'll continue to do in the future. The minister has this issue well in hand, is consulting with the dairy farmers of Ontario and will resolve this issue in a timely fashion to the satisfaction of the dairy farmers of Ontario, as we do with all of the issues, so that as this industry moves ahead, progresses and builds on its successes, it can be a major force in the economic portfolio of this province.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for Kingston and the Islands has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Public Safety and Security concerning the Provincial Auditor's report. The member for Kingston and the Islands has five minutes for his presentation.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): This issue arose as a result of a letter that was dated December 6 from the Provincial Auditor to Mr

Runciman, the Minister of Public Safety and Security. It deals specifically with respect to comments that he made both inside and outside the House in the week previous to that. I want to quote from the transcript of the scrum that was taken, I guess, on December 3 in which the minister said, and this is with respect to items that are contained in the Provincial Auditor's report as it relates to the Ministry of Public Safety and Security, "I'm implying that it's certainly in many respects inaccurate and misleading." Later on he said, "I'm concerned that it leaves a wrong impression and a misleading impression."

The main concern is this: the word "misleading" is something that would be unparliamentary if it were said in this House, and the member would be forced to withdraw that comment. It is my position that when a minister of the crown says the same thing—that something is misleading about an officer of this assembly—then in effect he's doing the same thing outside this House. That's what it all revolves around.

Specifically, the auditor asks four questions in his letter of December 6. It states:

"In summary I would appreciate if you could clarify to the Legislative Assembly that:

"The number of 10,000 was an estimate agreed to by your ministry at the time of the audit;" and the auditor says earlier that "The methodology used to estimate the 10,000 arrest warrants was presented in a briefing meeting with your ministry on March 8, 2002 and on March 12, 2002 and we received the ministry feedback in writing along the following lines...." and I could recite them, but they do not specifically disavow the number of 10,000.

Second, it states, "The CPIC number of 5,900 had never been communicated to my office"—namely the auditor's office—"and represents more current information which was obtained by you in November 2002."

Third, "I would appreciate if you could clarify to the Legislative Assembly that ... my report is not misleading, but you have more current information, which you wanted to provide to the Legislative Assembly and you and I agree that there are thousands of outstanding arrest warrants, many of which are for serious (level 1) offenders. Your ministry has made the commitment to act on this issue."

I'd like him to respond to that.

Fourth, "My report does not indicate that there are 3,000 serious offenders in our community being unmonitored." That's what the minister said in the House in response to my earlier question last week.

I want specific answers to the questions that are raised by the auditor in his letter. Now, I will say this: at 5 o'clock tonight I received a copy of a letter that is from the minister to Mr Peters, dated December 9, that seems to clarify some of the issues that were raised in his letter. I did receive a copy of this letter earlier. But my point is quite simply this—

Mr Frank Mazzilli (London-Fanshawe): You don't have one.

Mr Gerretsen: Excuse me; if you would let me continue. My point is quite simply this: to say an officer of this assembly is giving us misleading information in his auditor's report is something that is unparliamentary. It's not something that would be allowed in this House and it's something that, in my opinion, the minister should apologize to the auditor for.

The Acting Speaker: The minister has up to five minutes to reply.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I believe the letter that I supplied a copy of—it's directed to the Provincial Auditor—certainly explains my view with respect to the issues he and other members of the Liberal Party have raised. I think I certainly adequately answered those concerns. I answered them with respect to my responsibilities as the Minister of Public Safety. When a figure is published that could cause some concern amongst the public, I have a responsibility to address that. I did that, so I have no apologies to make in that regard.

I think it is unfortunate that this has been blown out of proportion with respect to the way it has been treated by some members of the opposition. I think it's a reflection of what we've seen in this House lately. We saw the Speaker commenting on it recently: a deterioration in the House. I had members calling for my resignation over doing my job. It's become all too commonplace for members opposite to call for resignations. I think the public recognizes that this is game-playing. It does not serve this place well.

I can recall my time in opposition. I spent 10 years in opposition, and I think in those 10 years, to the best of my recollection, I only called for the resignation of a minister on one occasion. That was for a Liberal Solicitor General going into a police station at 3 in the morning and making demands on the sergeant on duty that evening. Certainly, I think in the view of everyone in retrospect, that individual should have resigned and, ultimately, she did.

The things we hear across the floor today I think just fuel the attitude in this place; the lack of respect for members across the floor. One of the reasons I'm here tonight is that I believe in this place. I try to show it respect. I've certainly showed emotion on occasion, especially in opposition. We do feel deeply about issues, but I think we can continue to have respect for each other. We don't see enough of that in this place today. Certainly the public recognizes that, and I think that's reflected in public polling with respect to respect for all of us as elected officials.

Again, I'm going to be a little political here: I think one of the things they'd like to see is greater co-operation, and members of the opposition as well as members of the government talking about issues people care about. If you wanted to talk about law and order issues, perhaps this week we could have talked about the federal Auditor General's report on C-68, the gun registry: $1 billion of taxpayers' dollars wasted on a useless, ineffective gun registry, which this government fought vigorously on behalf of Ontario taxpayers—really on behalf of Canadian taxpayers.

I appeared before the Senate of Canada. The government of Ontario did significant research in terms of the implications of that legislation, what it would mean to taxpayers and what effect it would have in keeping guns out of the hands of criminals. We spelled that all out to the federal Liberal government back in 1995 and 1996, without the support of the provincial Liberal Party.

I may take this opportunity to put a couple of quotes on the record. This is from a gentleman by the name of Dalton McGuinty, from Hansard in October 1998: "I want to make it perfectly clear: I'm going to talk about gun control ... I'll be working with the ... federal government to implement universal gun registration in Ontario."

Dwight Duncan, from a Hansard of October 2000, said: "I support the federal government's gun registry."

Dominic Agostino said: "We believe the gun registry is a good law and this government should work with the federal government to enforce it, rather than fight it."

Those are the kinds of situations where we could have worked together and, rather than taking political stances, done what was in the best interests of Ontarians and Ontario taxpayers, especially those in rural Ontario, farming community people who have guns and shotguns which they use in the operations of their farms. Hunters—Mr Speaker, you and I share those kinds of ridings where this is a part of people's culture. We have, through legislation at the federal level, this true boondoggle, tried to criminalize honest, law-abiding citizens right across this country. Those are the kinds of issues we should be talking about and working together on.

The Acting Speaker: The motion to adjourn is deemed to have been passed. This House stands adjourned until 6:45 of the clock.

The House adjourned at 1820.

Evening meeting reported in volume B.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I seek unanimous consent to call orders 7 to 18 inclusive so that they may be moved and debated simultaneously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Mr Stockwell has asked for unanimous consent to deal with numbers 7 through 18.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm sorry, but I don't have my Orders and Notices paper. That's the one for concurrence in supply? Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed? Agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I move concurrence in supply for the following ministries and offices:

Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, including supplementaries

Ministry of Education

Ministry of Environment and Energy

Office of the Premier

Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs

Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, including supplementaries

Ministry of Training, Colleges and Universities, including supplementaries

Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services, including supplementaries

Ministry of Natural Resources

Ministry of Public Safety and Security

Ministry of Tourism and Recreation

Ministry of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation.

I propose that the time be split evenly among the three caucuses. I just threw that in.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Stockwell has moved concurrences. Debate?

Mr Bisson: I wish the member for Sault Ste Marie were here because he would have had this spot, but I'm here and I've got the spot.

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: I'm sure he does miss me. We have an opportunity. As the member on the estimates committee, I want to say, first of all, that I'm estimating because I'm on the estimates committee, so I'm an estimator. Do you follow that?

Anyway, I want to leave a good part of the time to my good colleague and friend Tony Martin who today was working hard on behalf of the people of Sault Ste Marie defending their interests in regard to the Domtar mill. I want to put the government on notice that the move it's making vis-à-vis these changes they're doing to the Crown Forest Sustainability Act I think in the end are really wrong-headed.

Our government, when we were in power from 1990, introduced the Crown Forest Sustainability Act. When we introduced that legislation under Howard Hampton, the then Minister of Natural Resources, it was the intent of the legislation in the way it was drafted and also in the way we talked about it at estimates, and not only at estimates but at that committee and others—it was the idea of the government of the day, of the Honourable Howard Hampton, the then Minister of Natural Resources, that under the crown sustainable forestry development act we would issue forest sustainability licences to a mill and that mill would have the right, by way of the licence, to harvest the timber. It was the full effect of the legislation. What was then put in legislation, under the forest agreement, was any time a mill withdrew from the activity of being able to process wood in a mill, the ministry had to take into consideration the social-economic impact on the local community vis-à-vis the wood in the forest that was tied to the licence.

1850

Until just recently, I would say up until about three or four months ago, if you had a situation where a mill in community X decided it was no longer feasible for them to harvest timber in a particular area and process that wood inside their mill, the way the legislation was written, the licence would revert back to the crown and the crown would then have to open up another RFP process and decide who would be selected through the RFP process to get the rights to that licence to yet again process wood. In that RFP process, they would have to take into consideration the social and economic impact on a local community for what was to happen with that licence.

Let me say what that means in layman's terms. We now have a situation in Kirkland Lake, we have a situation in Sault Ste Marie with Domtar, we have a situation in Sturgeon Falls with Weyerhaeuser, which is the corrugated board mill that's there, where basically the government is allowing those companies to shut down their operations, take the licences that are tied to the forest and is allowing those companies to divert wood to other mills they own in other communities.

I say that's wrong-headed because what you're going to end up with is a situation where a very few companies will have just a couple of mills to produce the bulk of the wood in northern Ontario from timber to dimensional lumber. Let me look at what it means for our area when it comes to Tembec. It is now the situation that Tembec basically controls all the sawmills except for a couple, from about the Cobalt area all the way up to Hearst. What that company is trying to do, in light of what's happening with the softwood lumber situation, is to say that if they were to shut down a couple of lines, or a couple of plants as it turns out, they would be able, under what the government is allowing them, to move the wood to other mills so that they can increase production in the mills left over and maximize the ability to make money to offset their cost because of the tariff they're having to pay into the United States.

This government is allowing that to happen and I say that's wrong-headed, because if we allow that to happen you're going to end up with communities like Kirkland Lake and others that are going to be left holding the stick. They will have absolutely no ability to get a direct benefit from the forestry activities around their communities.

It is my view, as a New Democrat, and I know in conversations we've had at caucus and the position of my leader, Howard Hampton, that the licences that are issued are tied to the local mills, and if a company decides it doesn't want to cut trees any more, they forfeit that licence, an RFP process starts, and somebody else steps up to the plate to operate that mill or to start up another operation that could benefit by the use of that wood somewhere near the community that's being affected. If we don't do that, we're going to see that Kirkland Lake and Sault Ste Marie, when it comes to Domtar and Tembec, are but the tip of the iceberg.

I say to the government that is wrong. I want to put you on notice that Shelley Martel, Howard Hampton, Tony Martin, and Gilles Bisson and other members of the NDP caucus are not going to stand by and allow this government to change the intent of the sustainable forestry development act and allow communities like Kirkland Lake and Sault Ste Marie to get the shaft while these companies decide they're going to move the lumber off to another community.

If it means, as my good friend Mr Tony Martin says, "Come on, I'll take you on," we're prepared at the NDP caucus to take you on because we believe it's important that somebody advocate for those communities. If the Conservative cabinet ministers such as Mr Ouellette at MNR and Mr Wilson at northern development are not willing to advocate at the cabinet table to defend those communities, I can tell you that we as New Democrats will advocate on their behalf and we will do everything we can to stop the move that's happening.

I think it interesting to note the position the Liberals have taken on this, because I don't think we should allow the Liberals to get off the hook entirely on this. We have a situation that's happened with Kirkland Lake vis-à-vis the mill up in Kirkland Lake with the closure of the Tembec mill and what's happening with Weyerhaeuser. It's interesting to note that the Liberals on both of those positions are always going to the rallies and saying, "Workers, we're with you. We stand behind you." But when it comes to showing the proof of the pudding of where they're at, they always stop short of taking the necessary position to fix the problem, which is not to allow these companies to take off with the sustainable forestry development licences.

I was at a rally in Kirkland Lake not too long ago and I spoke to the workers at that mill. It was interesting to note that although Mr Ramsay as a local member is trying to do something in order to advance the situation of those workers, he stopped shy of saying that the licence shouldn't be transferred. It think that's wrong. I think Mr Ramsay as a Liberal should recognize that he must represent the community of Kirkland Lake and the workers there. He should take the position, as we do as New Democrats, that the licence is tied to the mill and that the MNR should not be allowed to transfer those trees off that licence to a mill in Cochrane or Timmins. I think that's wrong-headed.

Now, the government and Mr Ramsay hide behind the fact that if the government were to take the position that we advocate, the people harvesting the timbers would be out of work. That's true. Those people who are harvesting the timber would be temporarily put out of work by the decision that we would make as a government not to allow that licence to transfer the wood to Cochrane or Timmins. In the longer run, that would force Tembec to make a decision. I think the decision they would make in the long run would be a better thing for the community of Kirkland Lake. They would either have to decide they were going to keep the operation going, at which point the forestry workers and the sawmill workers would be at work, or they would have to decide to sell off the mill. If they decide it's not profitable for them to hang on to the mill for whatever reason, it would start a process by which somebody would have to look at the purchase of that mill. The workers could organize, as they did in Kapuskasing, Sault Ste Marie and Thunder Bay, to do a worker-ownership buyout if no future employer were to come to the table to purchase the mill, or maybe there are others who are prepared to take over the mill, as is the case in Kirkland Lake.

I say to the Liberals, it's really interesting that you take a position where you say you support workers, but when it comes to showing your mettle or, quite frankly, that you're prepared to do what it takes to defend the workers, it's basically a speech with no substance in it.

I was at the Weyerhaeuser mill on Friday for the announced closure, what's happening with the mill, and there it's a bit of the same situation. Weyerhaeuser, which has operated that mill for a number of years, has decided it's going to close up shop, shut down the mill and basically put 230 people out of work in the community of Sturgeon Falls. As a result, that community is going to be hard done by. Those workers are going to be displaced, and how they rebuild their lives after such a closure is difficult. I've seen that in various communities around the north and how problematic it is.

Anyway, we took a position and I brought the message of my leader, Howard Hampton, to Sturgeon Falls when I was at the rally on Friday, and I thought it was rather interesting again to watch both the federal Liberal and the provincial Liberal take their positions. Mr Serré, who is a Liberal who sits in the government of Ottawa, said, "Workers, I'm with you. I will fight for you all the way." He said all kinds of nasty things about Weyerhaeuser, but when it came to saying what his government, the federal Liberal government in Ottawa, is prepared to do to really stand up and protect the workers, he said nothing. It was platitudes. It was, "I stand with the workers and I'm here with you today."

Well, where does that bring you? How do you buy a cup of coffee with that? Basically, they are the federal government and there are certain things they can be doing in order to try to get Weyerhaeuser to deal with some of the issues that CEP has been trying to get the employer to deal with.

For example, Weyerhaeuser has taken a position originally, as of Friday, that they would not allow anybody else to buy that mill. They wouldn't sell it and be in competition with the new owner of that mill. If I had been the federal member from Ottawa in the government, I would have gone there and said, "You can count on the federal government to take a look at the whole issue of what this means in regards to the Competition Act federally, and I will do everything I can in my power as a government member in Ottawa to make sure this company does something that's positive for the workers." All the message you got from the federal member, Mr Serré, was, "I'm here. I'm with you. I stand behind you. And by the way, once you're all unemployed, you'll get extra money in order to do skills training." Well, tell that to the worker who has been in a mill for 30 years. It's not very welcome.

When Mr Ramsay stood up to speak, his speech was even shorter. It was, "I'm here. I'm with you. I stand behind you and I'll fight all the way."

It took a New Democrat—myself, Gilles Bisson—to go there on behalf of my leader, Howard Hampton, and say, "Here's what you do: we have the control of the water rights on the dam that is tied to the Weyerhaeuser mill. We, as a party, take a position through our leader, Howard Hampton, that the Ministry of Natural Resources should cancel the water rights on the dam. If Weyerhaeuser wants to close up the operation, it is our view that the licence for the power dam should be cancelled and not be allowed to be in the control of Weyerhaeuser, where they shut off a mill, put 230 people out of work, and then make oodles of money by selling power in an inflated market vis-à-vis the deregulated hydro market in Ontario."

It is interesting to note that when I was there and made that comment, the people there—I wasn't surprised the workers were really onside—some of the business people who were there at the rally as well said, "Gilles, it's interesting that it's a New Democrat that comes and puts a solution on the table which would give the community some real bargaining power in order to force Weyerhaeuser to sell that mill and allow somebody to come out and buy it." The media reported widely across northern Ontario the comments I made on behalf of my leader, Howard Hampton. As a result—surprise, surprise—we find out today by way of a press release that Weyerhaeuser is going to entertain the idea of being able to discuss the sale of the mill to someone else.

So I say, "Victory for the New Democrats." It took New Democrats going to Sturgeon Falls and saying—because the Liberals wouldn't do it—that we're prepared to use the levers of government, if we were there, or to force this government, if they're willing, to stop the water rights, to put some pressure on Weyerhaeuser so that they, at the end of the day, are forced to sit down with the workers and the community to try to find a solution. It is interesting to note that there has been some movement, so I have to think the government must have been listening to what my leader was saying through me. The government maybe had a bit of a change of heart; I don't know. I have to hope that's the case.

Weyerhaeuser all of a sudden said, "Whoa, we don't want to get into that one." So, yes, we're prepared to sit down with the workers and the community to sell the Weyerhaeuser mill to a new owner and we will facilitate that process if you can find one. It is interesting to note that there is a potential investor in the United States who is prepared to take a look at the Weyerhaeuser mill. Let's hope that comes to a successful conclusion of negotiations and we're able to save all of those jobs in Sturgeon Falls.

But I make the point that it wouldn't have happened if New Democrats weren't there. It took New Democrats in all of those instances—Kirkland Lake, Sturgeon Falls, Sault Ste Marie—to be there and to say things that are bold and to say to some of these companies, "Listen, it's not a question of being anti-corporation; it's a question of saying that you have to balance off the needs of the corporation with the needs of the local economy." If it means that to protect those jobs in Kirkland Lake, Sturgeon Falls or Sault Ste Marie it takes a government saying, "We're not going to transfer water rights and allow Weyerhaeuser to leave with the water rights on that dam once they pull out," or cancelling the licences of both Tembec and Domtar on those mills that they want to close down in Kirkland Lake and Sault Ste Marie, so be it, if that's what it takes to get these companies to do the right thing.

Now, I understand why Tembec is doing it. I feel a little bit odd, because I have a lot of good friends in the management group at Tembec—people like Pierre Corbeil, Martin Michaud and Frank and others whom I know quite well, I know are quite upset at the position I am taking. They are very upset that as a local member in the area I'm taking the position that Tembec should not be allowed to transfer the wood off the Kirkland Lake licence to Cochrane and Timmins. I understand that they are mad at me, but I think they understand where I am coming from. They say, "Gilles, we don't like it. Gilles, we think you are wrong, but we know which side of the debate you're falling on. You're falling on the side of the communities and the workers."

I can tell you, any time that you have a New Democrat representing you, you'll know that we will do what is right in our hearts when it comes to protecting workers and protecting local communities. I think the record speaks volumes. The record is: when it came to Kapuskasing and other communities that were down—I was waiting for that note—basically that we would do so. So, I look forward to the comments of both my good friend Mr Martin and Mr Christopherson, who want to speak on that, and I look forward to the rest of this debate.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): On point of order, Mr Speaker: I would just like to draw to the attention of the members here today that we are joined in the visitors' gallery by three individuals. We have Angela Sciberras, Brad Rogers and, of particular note, we have a daughter of a former Premier of Ontario, the honourable Bill Davis. Meg Davis is joining us here today for the first time as an adult back in the chamber. Welcome, all, to the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Of course, it is not a point of order, but we welcome you. Further debate?

Mr Gerry Martiniuk (Cambridge): I'm pleased to speak on concurrences this evening. If I could, for just a couple of minutes—I'm sharing my time with the member for Nipissing and the whip for our party. If I may deal with the Ministry of the Environment 2003 operating budget, there has been a substantial percentage increase during that period over last year's budget of 12.9%. Remarkably, since the year 2000, staffing at the Ministry of the Environment has been increased by over 350 positions. That represents an increase in staffing of 23.6%. Then on June 17 of this year, this government committed to invest $500 million in the next two years to implement and enforce safe drinking water initiatives. This year alone the government will provide $245 million toward ensuring safe drinking water.

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): I'm very happy to participate in the debate tonight, despite this cold. I hope you'll indulge me.

I wanted to speak about health matters, as I usually do, and in particular how they affect the riding of Windsor West and all of Ontario, which is undergoing tremendous change in the health field, and our constant disappointment at watching the number of announcements that we've seen, especially in this session, but when we actually look to the action plan, we're always left wanting. There are more and more examples of this every day.

It's certainly no different now than when we started in 1995, to be continually disappointed. But what began as this wonderful manna from heaven come down in the name of a restructuring commission that was going to go across Ontario and change the way we deliver health care—almost eight years later we are looking at the debacle of the Health Services Restructuring Commission's implementation plans for Ontario; namely in the area of 75% of our hospitals suffering significant debt, and that being used as an excuse, when up to 19 of our hospitals are waiting desperately for MRIs and CT scans only to be told, "No, you need to take care of your fiscal situations before you would ever get approvals."

In the meantime, the government, in their latest scheme, decided to announce private MRIs and CTs, put out a request for proposals for that and we get a list of some 250 pages of rules on how these private companies can come forward that will create—as they did in Alberta, which this government is using as the model—two-tier health care in Ontario, to create an opportunity for people who can afford to move ahead in the system to jump the queue. If they don't jump the queue in that diagnostic setting, they manage to get in the side door to get that diagnostic test. As soon as that diagnostic test indicates that intervention by the health system is required, guess what? They move to the front of the line for their services to determine and to do something about their problem as well. So it's queue-jumping right through the entire system.

But tonight I wanted to specifically publicly extend an invitation to the environment minister to come to the riding of Windsor West. We have asked the minister personally. We've put a letter of invitation in writing. We're told now that this minister will not come to Windsor West. Why would a Liberal MPP invite the Conservative Minister of the Environment to Windsor West, in particular to Sandwich Street, which is in the west end of the riding? There is a home there. It's an area that is the oldest, most populated town in Ontario, known as Sandwich Towne. In this area, there is a home that is near a factory that put in a new machine. When they put this machine in the factory, they probably didn't dig a ditch that was deep enough to fit the machine into this factory, and every time they run the machine, a number of houses in the area shake.

A lot of people know that they live in an industrialized area, that they're going to have various issues because it's in their neighbourhood. But we got a call from this particular family who had gone up and down and every which way to work with the environment ministry to say, "Look, somebody has to help us here because our house is shaking."

Let me tell you that this problem has been going on for years. By the time they called our office and we started investigating and looking at the paper trail here, we see that the family has done everything right, everything they were told to do, following all of the paths that were to be taken, working with the environment ministry staff to do the right kinds of tests. All of that was done, and if you can imagine, the ministry people came back to tell this family there's nothing wrong, that there are no limits that are being exceeded here on these various tests.

Well, it's hard to believe. So off I went to this home—a wonderful family on Sandwich Street. I went into the home, and we had to be sure that it was a time that there was a shift when the factory was actually running the machines. We went up, we took a glass of water and we sat it on the desk. We sat it where the family typically has the computer running and where they'll be doing work. You could watch the water moving in the glass. Imagine what the home or the foundation might be like after several months even, never mind years, of a factory shaking the houses in the neighbourhood. It's pretty hard to imagine.

So I came back to the minister here and I said, "You know, Stockwell, you just couldn't imagine that people are living in this environment and that there's nothing that we can do about it. Could you please just go back to your officials and ask them to do a complete review, independent staff other than those that have been working with his family continually? Put a fresh pair of eyes on this file and see what you can do, because this can't possibly be OK. It can't possibly be OK to have a neighbouring industry create this kind of friction, literally, in the neighbourhood, and no one can do anything about it."

Today, we hear again that the minister doesn't want to come and visit the house. They've done some kind of cursory review, and everything is just fine. You know what? I think that's terrible. I think that's irresponsible. I think it's responsible for Stockwell to stand up and say—look, if you're so confident about the work that your officials did, you shouldn't have a problem coming to see the condition these people have to work in; people who work hard for a living. They pay their taxes. They've done everything the right way, and we can't get anybody to turn around and say, "You know what? There's something about this system that's not fair."

I'm embarrassed that the minister doesn't want to come to Windsor. Now that he's here maybe he'll stand up for two minutes and tell us why he doesn't want to come. I have begged, and I want the people who live on Sandwich Street to know that I am prepared to beg to have the minister come to Windsor. I'm not embarrassed to beg, because I think it's important that if the Ministry of the Environment officials are confident about the work they've done on this file, they won't mind coming and proving it to me.

If I hadn't watched the water literally shaking in the glass—the people in this home have filled the house with various gadgets to stop things from moving. The china cabinet that sits in the dining room, where the glass panes are literally parallel with each other, they've got it jammed with cardboard so that the glass won't continually shake for the entire shift that the factory is running this machine.

You have to ask people. Can it possibly be appropriate that Ministry of the environment officials wouldn't say, "You know what? I think this needs another view. I think this needs a fresh pair of eyes on this file." I think it's totally appropriate that the environment minister would want to do this for this family that has paid taxes for a long time. If this doesn't work in terms of public embarassment, maybe you have too much work to do, Stockwell. Maybe you have too many things on your plate that you can't bother with an essential part of your portfolio in the Ministry of the Environment. Maybe the House leader duties are just getting a little bit too much for you and you might have to give a little bit up.

The reality is that you're trying to get us out of the House by December 12—every year we're here practically until Christmas Day—so you get a bonus several days here. I'm asking you, the hour it takes to fly to Windsor, the half hour it takes from the airport to drive to Sandwich Street, probably one hour to go through this; we'll pick a time when the factory is actually running a shift. You can be back on an airplane in a two-hour period. Then you can talk to your Ministry of the Environment officials and say, "You know what? I went to the house on Sandwich Street. The water is shaking in the glass. This can't be appropriate that our ministry can't do anything for this family. I think it's totally inappropriate that you would respond in this manner."

I could go on about health care, and I know I'll have an opportunity to do so, but I hope this minister is completely embarrassed. And yet again I will end by saying that I extend a personal invitation to this minister to visit this home with me on Sandwich Street.

Hon Mr Stockwell: What I want to say to the member opposite, whom I know to be a very honourable member who works very diligently—

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Damn, I moved it. I can't speak.

The Acting Speaker: You're out of order. Further debate?

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: May I seek unanimous consent to speak briefly to this again?

The Acting Speaker: The minister has asked for unanimous consent.

Mrs Papatello: On this issue.

The Acting Speaker: On this issue. Agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I know the member opposite to be a very honourable member and I certainly would not, in any way, shape or form, suggest for a moment that her dramatization of the issue is incorrect. All I can suggest to you is that the member brought this to my attention—and I appreciate that—a week or so ago, maybe a little longer—OK, a couple of weeks ago. I'm not going to debate—

Mrs Papatello: It has been four weeks.

Hon Mr Stockwell: OK, four weeks ago. I'm not going to debate the time period. I requested the ministry staff to forward me all documentation. The ministry staff forwarded me all documentation. There were three tests done in the house, and they all passed the minimum requirements with respect to shaking. I think odour was another one, and there was a third one. You may help me recollect.

At that point in time, the member came to me and said, "It's terrible. You should probably send someone else in," and I said to the member opposite, "I will give you my undertaking to send someone else in." I thought someone else had gone in and done the test, but apparently not.

I promise you that I will go back to the ministry first thing in the morning and I will insist that a different person go out to Sandwich Street, a different person inspect the site and a different person determine whether or not it contravenes any legislation or acts that I have control of. If it shakes too much and contravenes it, I give you my undertaking that I will be on it like white on rice to ensure that that is in fact looked after; if it's not and if it doesn't meet those standards, I'll report back to you.

There is very little I can do out there. I'm not an expert on shaking houses. I know of no poltergeist special process to get houses to stop shaking. I'm not suggesting for a moment that this person doesn't have a legitimate complaint, but I guarantee you—an absolute undertaking as I stand before you today and swear to my mother in Bowmanville—that I will get so much more staff out there to inspect this house that you will be sick of the Ministry of the Environment around this house by the time this is done.

Mrs Papatello: Before Christmas?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm busy before Christmas, to go myself, but I guarantee you they will be there before Christmas—guaranteed.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): That was a commitment cast in stone that I heard here just a few minutes ago. It's done.

Interjection.

Mr Martin: I know you are.

I appreciate the opportunity this evening to put a few thoughts on the record. We're speaking to a process here called concurrence, where we agree as a government, as members of all three parties in the Legislature, to pay the bills that government needs to pay to do its business, to cover the cost of—and the member from Renfrew is here to speak on concurrence too, I would guess.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): No, I'm just here to welcome you back.

Mr Martin: Thank you very much. Yes, I got uncereemoniously, or ceremoniously, removed from here this afternoon.

Mr Conway: It's like Dag Hammarskjöld getting a penalty.

Mr Martin: Thank you. Dag Hammarskjöld getting a penalty? Not bad.

Interjection: You're moving up in the world. You're doing pretty good.

Mr Martin: It gets me set for my speech.

This is a unique opportunity in this place to speak on some things that members feel personally concerned about or interested in in terms of how we deliver government services, what government should be about and what it is that we as a society should be about in relation to how we govern each other and how we collect resources and spend those resources.

A colleague of ours in this corner of the Legislature—all nine of us—Mr Romanow, a previous Premier of Saskatchewan, just travelled the country for quite a while doing very intensive research on how we deliver health care in this province. He delivered a report, and in that report he referred to values. He talked about Canadian values.

I'm going to take about 11 or 12 minutes here and then I'm going to turn it over to my colleague from Hamilton West, who will also speak to whatever it is that's on his mind and in his heart tonight where concurrence is concerned.

I want to talk just for a few minutes about Canadian values, because it's something that's close to my heart. It's actually one of the reasons that I chose to run for government, to participate in public life in the way that I do, and that I feel Canada, the country that we as a family chose to come to and live in some 42 years ago from Ireland has become such a special place. It is at a point in its history where we now make decisions that will either take us further down that road to developing the kind of Canadian value that I'll speak to here in a second, or in fact turn over the direction of our country and the life that happens in the communities that populate this country, the ability of citizens to participate, to that which is practised south of the border—our American brothers and sisters, our cousins or whatever.

Certainly we see very clearly, I believe, two approaches to how a country develops and supports itself and works within its constitution to develop its character, its personality and to support and protect one another. In the United States we have, because of its history and where it came from, a very individualistic approach to life, a tremendous dependence on what a person can do for himself and what a person can do in terms of industry and private sector activity, private sector enterprise, commercial activity. We in Canada have tried to find a mix because of, I suppose—and I just go back to my own experience of coming to Canada and learning to live here—the challenges we face this far north in the hemisphere, with geography, with distance, with weather. We decided that we would be better served if we acted out of and into community, if we worked together, if we pooled our resources, if when our neighbour found himself in trouble, we reached out and assisted and, in turn, that favour would be given likewise in time of some challenge and some difficulty.

It's a way of life, a way of ordering the communities that we live in, a way of doing business that I believe is particularly Canadian. We, as a government, as a people, levy taxes on each other, decided in a democratic fashion, collect those taxes and then spend them on some basic services that we feel should be available and accessible to everybody who calls this province and indeed this country home. We have, over a period of years, decided that there were some fundamental things that needed to be in place. Life has evolved for us as a people. As the population of the provinces has grown, as industry has grown and as opportunity has grown, and with it the challenges that come with that kind of growth set upon us, we decided that there were some very basic and fundamental things that needed to be in place if we were going to continue to respect the quality of life, the standard of living, the dignity that exists within each community and with each individual, and if we were going to support that, and if in doing that, if we were going to be able to take advantage of further community development that can happen as we travel our journey together.

We decided that, for example, no family or individual should be put into crisis financially because somebody in the family or themselves got sick, and so we brought in a medicare program, first introduced to Saskatchewan by the leader of the New Democratic Party government in that province, some 40 or 50 years ago. Then, from there, because it was such an important thing to do for all of the people of Saskatchewan, he felt it should be done for all of the people in Canada. In partnership and co-operation with the Liberal government of the day and, I believe, leadership given by people like Lester B. Pearson and Pierre Trudeau, we then developed a Canada-wide health care system—we refer to it as medicare—a system that had attached to it some very basic qualities such as universality, accessibility and affordability, and ultimately the provinces across the country bought into this, as did the province of Ontario. We moved very aggressively, and I believe very courageously, to get rid of any premiums that families or individuals might have to pay who weren't fortunate enough to have a benefit package at work that would cover such a cost for access to the medicare system. And so we prided ourselves in being able to provide that service to everybody.

But in the last few years in this country, I believe a right-wing wind has blown in from the United States, driven by the Republican effort there to highlight some of what they see as defining qualities of their society, and to bring them into Canada, that we should be charging people for more services, that we should be turning more services over to delivery by the private sector and that we should be diminishing and moving government out of the way. I suggest that hasn't served us very well. I don't think there's anybody in this place who can honestly say, as they look around at the circumstance that their families and neighbours find themselves in, that we are better off now than we were five or 10 years ago where health care is concerned.

I would suggest that if you looked at education and how it is that we also deliver hydroelectricity in this country and this province, you'd probably be able to make the same arguments, that we're not better served some ways down the road to a regime that would see more private interest involvement in the delivery of those services, to a regime where we would see less government leadership and involvement and investment in those services, and to a regime where government wasn't involved at all to that end. I think we have to really analyze and consider where it is we are now, how it compares to what it was like five or 10 or 15 years ago, and what it is that we want to leave for our children to come, for future generations.

I suggest to you that if we are being honest and if we are in contact with the people whom we purport to represent here, and we listen to them very carefully and we look at what it is that Roy Romanow has said in his report and the Canadian values that he highlights, we will make some very different decisions and choices as we compare them to the agenda and the decisions and choices that the government across the way have made.

See, the government across the way, the party across the way, and right-wing governments in this country will tell you and try to convince you that we just cannot afford a first-class publicly funded, publicly delivered anything in this province and in this country. I suggest to you that they're dead wrong, that in fact it is in investing in and finding the money to support those public systems that we generate the kind of new resource that is required to enhance and develop further and create exciting opportunity for communities and people across this country.

You know, a lot is made of the fact that from 1990 to 1995, when we were government, we ran up a fairly substantial debt, and we did; I don't deny that for a second.

It was because in those five years, we were living—and anybody who's being honest will agree—in one of the most difficult recessionary periods of our history. We had to make a choice as government whether we were going to simply lay off people in the public sector, which we had the power to do, considering the spinoff effect of that on to the communities where these folks work and live. We had to make a decision whether we were going to cut the services that were in fact more obviously needed in difficult times than in good times, or whether we were going to borrow money to keep those services in place, sit down with our partners in the public service and find unique and different ways to handle matters.

We chose a way that, yes, initially caused some anxiety and concern even within our own ranks as to where it was we might be going, but we did that with the confidence that this province and this country had an economy that was strong enough to see that through and to have us come to, say in the year 1995, a position then with a renewed economy happening worldwide and, yes, in the United States and Canada, and more revenue coming into our coffers to deal with the debt and the deficit and to continue to make the investments that were required and obviously continue to be required if we are going to have our health care and education system, and if we are going to provide public energy to people, so that we will be able to invest in the kinds of new infrastructure that is obviously needed from time to time in those particular areas.

We had a plan in place, and we took it to the people in 1995. Alas, we weren't successful in convincing them that if we were sent back to Queen's Park to govern, within a couple of years we would have balanced the budget, we would have begun to pay down the deficit and the debt, and we would still be able to continue to invest in those public services that define so clearly who we are together as a community of people and how we serve each other in Canada.

But what we got, in turn, was a government that believed that government needed to get out of the way, that we needed to turn over public services for delivery by the private sector, that we needed to make sure that red tape and regulations were removed, and that we should be turning over a lot of that very important money that we were getting by the renewed economic activity that was happening out there back to the private sector by way of tax breaks. Alas, we find ourselves in a position where, even this afternoon, we get a report from a gentleman who was contracted by the government to look at the formula that we use to fund education. He says that we're, at the very minimum, short some $1.7 billion to $1.8 billion in the system. We, as a party, suggest that this government should take some of the money that they are experiencing now by way of surplus and invest it, at least $1 billion of it, immediately into the education system before we lose it completely.

I will end my thoughts there this evening and suggest to you and to the folks in the chamber and the folks out there that we really do need to—as we move into the holiday season now, as we move into that time of the year when people of all faiths take time to step back and reflect—reflect on what it means to be Canadian, reflect on those values that Roy Romanow has laid out in his report and reflect on how it is we want our government to act on our behalf.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): It gives me great pleasure to speak tonight on concurrences. To all of you who are watching at home, really what we are talking about is budget items and estimates. I can tell you that the galleries are overflowing with individuals who are very interested in our topic tonight. I'm surprised. They should really sell admission tickets. We could probably balance our budget even better with all the people who are sitting here watching tonight. It's a pleasure—

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: Shh, it's my turn. It is a pleasure to be here from the great riding of Nipissing and speaking to many of the individuals from my riding regarding things that happen in government and happen in Queen's Park from day to day, it's really interesting to hear what they have to say. In speaking with some of these individuals, one of them who comes to mind is Rick Ferron, a retired principal of Sunset Park Public School, who really spearheaded the Early Years for children program in our area. He has done just a tremendous job for us. It helps young children as they go into the school programs. It has shown that they do better than the students who don't really get exposed to that. He's a great individual in our riding. He lives in the city of North Bay.

I can think of John and Layla Krieg. I believe John is an engineer. I'm not too sure what type of engineering he does, but I know that he donates a lot of his time to charitable work, to helping kids out and to helping his community out. He's just a great individual.

Ralph Celentano, I believe, is a past distinguished president of the North Bay Kiwanis Club. He always seems to be in the middle of everything that's going on. He's just a great community leader.

When we were losing our Junior A team last year, there was an individual who jumped up and joined in trying to spearhead to keep the team here. His name is Ray Irwin. He was actually part owner of another OHL team, and he was willing to give up that part ownership in the team to buy into the North Bay Centennials to try to keep them here. Unfortunately, as the community of North Bay and area and my riding of Nipissing know, they actually moved to the United States. We were heartbroken that not only did our area lose the team, the Ontario Hockey League lost a team to the United States. We didn't necessarily agree with that.

I can think of friends of mine. Wayne Poeta is a retired police officer who worked with children, worked with youth in trouble, and really took me under his wing as well when I was younger. His family, his kids, John, Bob, Sue, Dwayne and Micheline, are personal friends of mine. I treasure their friendship. I think of Bob Poeta, who is just a young businessman who owns his own backhoe. I know he works night and day to make things happen for him and his family.

There are a couple of councillors I wanted to point out because I know they're really concerned about safe drinking water. I know they campaigned on it and balanced budgets and health care. One of them who comes to mind is Mike Anthony, who is just a young fellow. I believe he's the youngest councillor in the city of North Bay. I don't know if he's the youngest ever, but he's very young. In the first year he was learning the ways of municipal government, and I had the opportunity to work with him. He was one of my colleagues. I can tell you that the people of North Bay are served very well by this individual who really takes his jobs seriously. He reads all the work and makes the best, informed decision that he can with the information that's given to him.

Another councillor who comes to mind actually used to sit right beside me, Councillor Peter Handley. He was a well-known radio announcer. I think his famous line was "A good sport is good for sports." He's kind of well known in our area.

Another councillor I can think of, who was very strong in the financial side of the decision-making, was Councillor Peter Chirico. I know from talking to this councillor that he watches Queen's Park quite a bit when he comes home from work. He's probably watching right now the debate that's going on regarding budget items that I know he's concerned about. All I want to say to Councillor Chirico is, "Get a life." I'm just kidding, by the way. I think he could just get on with his family and go out and enjoy the winter that's up there, because there's a lot of snow and it's pretty cold in our area right now. I say that jokingly, Peter. I know that he watches quite a bit.

We have a very special individual, not just in North Bay and Nipissing, but I believe he's probably an outstanding ambassador to northern Ontario, who just seems to be everywhere, doing everything, lending a hand, raising money for churches and school groups and helping out with festivals. His name is Ted Hargreaves, and we like to call him Mr North Bay. He was like a mentor to me. I followed what he was doing, and he helped me so much when I was joining all these different groups and volunteering. He got me involved in the Heritage Festival, which is just this wonderful festival in our area that draws about 150,000 every August civic weekend. I invite all the members on the other side to come to our area next August and enjoy the Heritage Festival.

I've also had the opportunity to work with Jack Campbell. Jack Campbell is Ted Hargreaves's partner at BDO Dunwoody. For anybody watching from Nipissing tonight, Jack Campbell is this unbelievable individual. When he starts laughing, you have to laugh with him. He's that type of individual. I just want to say hello to Jack tonight if he's watching.

I'm very proud to be the representative from Nipissing. I think it's important that I share my thoughts on what these individuals do for our area so the whole Legislature and the province of Ontario understand how great an area we really have and how these individuals make our area that much greater to live in. It's just incredible how great Nipissing is, how great North Bay is, Mattawa, Trout Creek, Callander, Powassan. These are all great communities, very caring communities, where if anybody needs a hand, they're the first ones to reach out; if it's to write a cheque to help a family out or if somebody needs shelter or to help the Santa Fund. They're just unbelievable individuals.

I want to speak about another individual. We call him the unofficial mayor of North Bay: Carmine Ricciuti. He owns a tailor shop downtown on Main Street. He's well known. He's a fixture down there. If you walk down the street, he'll be the first one to greet you with a big smile. He plays the accordion. I think on December 20 at Twiggs Coffee Shop, which is just up the street from his shop, there's a fundraiser going on that will raise funds for the Santa Fund, which helps families in need, those less fortunate than us, so that they may have toys for their children, a turkey and some gifts for them. I think that's a great initiative, and I want to invite everyone out. I know Scott Clark and Katherine Murphy do a great job hosting this event in the morning. It lasts a couple of hours. It's live on Easy Rock. It's just a lot of fun. He gets up and does his accordion thing. It's wonderful.

There is a tailor I must say hello to. Vince, I will be in next week to pay my bill. His name is Vince Orlando, and it's Orlando's Men's Wear.

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): Did he do that suit?

Mr McDonald: This is one of his suits. Yes, Mr Sampson, it is one of his suits. He's actually calling me and saying, "We need to get you some more suits. Please come in." He's quite a salesman.

Mr Gerretsen, I invite you to go over and visit Vince. He's just a tremendous tailor; you too, Mr Bartolucci. If you make that nice trip from Sudbury over to North Bay—it's only about an hour and 20 minutes if you don't speed—I invite you to come over. I'd be happy to share the area with the member from Kingston and the Islands and the member from Sudbury.

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: Tom Mason: I can tell you, Mr Bartolucci, Tom Mason, who plays the bagpipes and has a very thick accent, would be happy to pipe you in all the way into North Bay. We'd be happy to have a reception for you. Maybe take Highway 11 up, Mr Bartolucci, because there's only about 47 kilometres left.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): Four-lane it.

Mr McDonald: We're about seven years away, and hopefully we can speed that up to make it three to four. We're working on that. Infrastructure in northern Ontario is very important not only to economic development and tourism but also to the safety of our residents who have to travel that highway between Toronto and North Bay. The distance seems to be getting shorter as the four lane evolves. I know it's about three hours and 20 minutes now to Toronto, and it's a very nice drive. So I want to invite all those who are watching in southern Ontario, by all means. Take Highway 11 to northern Ontario, and you'll see some incredible scenery.

There's an individual I had the opportunity to co-chair an event with, and her name is Cindi D'Agostino. We did a fundraiser for the Capitol Centre. Culture and the arts are very important to the members of northern Ontario and in my riding of Nipissing. She did an unbelievable job. We developed this play where we had all the community leaders go on stage and they were actors or actresses for a night. It was well-attended. I believe we had about 500 people out. We raised $30,000 for the Capitol Centre to keep their budget going. It was just an unbelievable night. I had a lot of fun. The credit really goes to Cindi, who did all the work. I was able to stand beside her and take half the credit. I just want to say hello to Cindi and her family. They might be watching tonight as well.

In speaking about that play, it was all about our area, Nipissing. An individual by the name of Patti Fedeli, who is just an incredible playwright, is a resident of Callander. She's married to Vic Fedeli, who everybody in that area knows has done so much in the ABPC. He created this aerospace industry. Patti Fedeli should be in Hollywood. She wrote the play Shotgun and Shadflies. It's a true story about our area, an escaped convict who got away for many years back in 1975 and was finally caught. She did a whole screenplay on it. It was well-attended at the Nipissing Stage Co. She actually wrote the play for Cindi and I, Northern Overexposure, which was really a comedy about ourselves. We had to laugh at ourselves. We made fun of ourselves, and that's what made it very special.

I want to say hello to Marc and his wife, Peggy O'Connor, who live in Callander. They're good friends of mine, and I want to say hello to them. Being down here in Toronto, and we're here till midnight—I just want to say to everyone watching that tonight we're here till midnight. Some of you might go home early, and that's OK. We're happy to serve on this side of the House. We're happy to stay till midnight tonight.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): So am I, although it's my birthday.

Mr McDonald: Yes, that's right. Happy birthday, by the way.

We're happy to stay till midnight because we're serving the people of the province of Ontario, and I'm pleased to represent the area of Nipissing. Midnight is a long night. That makes for a long night. We're in here—I think we start at 7:30 tomorrow morning, but that's OK.

Interjections.

Mr McDonald: They're asking about the Heritage Gardeners now. I can hear them asking. They're saying how beautiful North Bay is and the waterfront.

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: I'm being asked to speed my little speech up. Whip, you're telling me three or four minutes. I have a few more people I want to say hello to, so I hope you'll indulge me for a little while.

Mr Sampson: There's no one left in North Bay to say hello to. You've said hello to everybody.

Mr McDonald: I haven't said hello to everybody yet. Everybody watching in Nipissing is enjoying this, I can tell you. They want to hear more about the people of our area. I'm going to keep talking till the whip or the Speaker turns my mike off.

I started with the Heritage Gardeners, which I heard from across the floor. Two of them are Wanda Wallace and Harriet Madigan, who head this group of volunteers. I think there are about 400 of them. They plant flowers and trees all down along the waterfront. They're all volunteers. You see them all summer long making adjustments.

Mr Whip, I will wind it up as quickly as I can. I have just a few more. I just want to say that we have a very famous person in my riding whom we're very proud of. Her name is Lynn Johnston, who just happens to live down the street from me. She is a famous cartoonist, For Better Or For Worse, as you know. Her husband, Rod, is a dentist by trade and has actually retired so that he can volunteer for the waterfront, to develop it, to make it a great place for the downtown. They are just incredible individuals. We're very lucky to have Rod and Lynn Johnston in our riding.

Out in Mattawa we have Vala Monastine Belter and her husband, Wayne. The spirit out in that small community, which is about 45 minutes east of North Bay—Vala's mom's name is Zena Monastine. I believe she was a Russian world-class ballerina. She taught me, when I met her, that it's not like the French custom where you just kiss on each cheek; you do three.

Mr McDonald: I can hear the contingent on the other side of the House. Do you still want to hear more? I'd be happy to say a few more names here.

Bob Young, who is the mayor of Powassan, does a great job down in Powassan. It's a farming community, and Bob Young is a great representative for that group.

Hec Levigne is the reeve of Callander. They have just named their town back to Callander. During his campaign he had a button that said, "Give 'em Hec." That was his whole platform. He does a great job.

The Santa Fund is ongoing. I think it was just shy of $25,000 the last time I called, the other day. So I encourage everyone—all the community groups, schools, churches—to get involved, because there are a lot of families in need. I too will be at Twiggs on December 20 to participate and donate as well.

I want to say a special hello and thank you to my staff. This is Christmastime and I should thank my staff in North Bay for doing a great job: Algisa Lennie, Sharon Norton and Lisa Bangs. They do a wonderful job for me up in Nipissing, and just so that the people of Mattawa know, Lisa Bangs will go over for half a day once a week to service the town of Mattawa.

I have a great assistant here in Toronto at Queen's Park. Her name is Heidi Rogers. She is not actually from Toronto, she is from Erie, and she commutes every once in a while. I can tell you, I'm very lucky to have her as an assistant.

I must say hello to my mom, Judy.

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: That's the only thing to do, right? You have to say hello to your mom, because your mom is very important. And my dad, Ron: he has Algonquin flight school, a small business. He's doing a great job. He is a small business man.

Interjections.

Mr McDonald: We're having some fun. We're here until midnight. Mr Whip, I've just got a couple of more, if you'll bear with me.

I have to say hello to my brother and sister, Dave and Lisa.

I will finish it, Whip. You asked me to fill out an hour and I don't understand why you're compressing my time. I still have 26 minutes, but I'm happy just to finish off.

I just want to say a special hello to two individuals: Sister Nora Murphy, whom the community is going to hear a lot more of, and I'm not going to say anything more than that. She is just spearheading something I think is so wonderful. And somebody I have a lot of respect for—she's a lawyer in town—is Judy Shea.

I hope I didn't leave anybody out. If I did, I apologize. I will twist the whip's arm a little later to see if I can get up and say hello to a few more individuals who are so important.

Mr Speaker, thank you very much for allowing me to say hello to my friends and family in my riding of Nipissing. I just want to say thank you very much. I appreciate being your representative.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gerretsen: I concur totally with the member from St Catharines, who in effect is saying that's the best and the most truthful speech we've had from that side of the House in quite some time. So I think the member ought to be congratulated.

I'd like to turn to something a little bit different, though. It really speaks to the unreality of what happens here at Queen's Park from time to time. I always feel that once you leave here and get in touch with the real world, as we do in our ridings, you get this total feeling of unreality that pervades here around Queen's Park, with all the spin-doctoring, and I'll admit there is spin-doctoring on all sides.

Let me just give you one example. You may recall Bill 198 that was passed here the other day. You may recall there were some pension benefits provisions in that bill in which the government basically tried to attack the surpluses that there were in many pensions so that the retired people who should be getting the benefits of those surpluses weren't going to get them. You may recall that we fought in here, both opposition parties and basically Mr Smitherman, the member for Toronto Centre-Rose-dale, on our side, that the pension benefits section of Bill 198 should not be passed under any circumstances.

Well, there were a couple of news releases that were issued. Every now and then you get something in this place that really makes you chuckle or laugh out loud. I'll just read this press release. Remember what happened: the opposition pressured the government, in effect, into getting rid of those pension benefits provisions. The first communiqué that went out went something like: "The government confirmed today that the measures in Bill 198 dealing with the pension issues will never be proclaimed, even if the budget bill is passed by the Legislature." I cannot ever remember a government saying, "Pass a bill, but we're not going to implement it." That must have been unique in its own right, but it gets better.

The next release that went out, on December 4, 2002—I think the Speaker knows what I'm talking about—is a two-line press release in which the government says, "The Ontario government has sought and won unanimous consent to withdraw the amendments to the Pension Benefits Act from Bill 198, Finance Minister Janet Ecker announced today."

Now, you talk about somebody wanting to have it both ways, making it sound in the press release as if they had to wrestle us down to take those pension benefits out of Bill 198. This is the most unmitigated nonsense I've ever heard, that the government "sought and won unanimous consent." No, we gave them the consent two or three weeks ago. They didn't win anything at all. They lost on that. The only people who won, as a matter of fact, were the pensioners who at least now will once again, with the employers, have to negotiate how the pension surpluses are to be divided between them, which they've had to do since the mid- or late 1980s. But at least they've got a fighting chance now which wasn't there before.

I just thought I'd bring it to your attention, because I thought it was the most comical government press release that I've seen here in my seven years: that the Ontario government has sought and won unanimous consent to withdraw the amendments. They were forced into it because of the hundreds of pensioners who were sitting here. There were forced into it because of repeated questioning, particularly by Mr Smitherman, and by other members in my caucus and the NDP caucus. They had to withdraw it because there was a tremendous outcry out there where people were saying, "Do not turn the excess pension funds back over to the employer," which this bill in effect would have allowed them to do. Anyway, that's just one point I want to make.

The other point I want to make is dealing with the economic outlook and fiscal review document that the government issued through the Minister of Finance last week. Maybe the people are already aware of this, but I think there's one figure in this that really stands out. It's the figure that talks about the fact that sales and rentals of government property this year will net the government $2.424 billion. The significance of that is this: if you look at last year's amount that was received through sales and rentals, it was $344 million, more than $2.1 billion less than the anticipated amount this year. If you look at the year before, it's $637 million. If you look at the year 1998-99, it's $640 million. As a matter of fact, the only other year in which it went over $2 billion was in the election year, 1999, when of course the 407 was sold. Then, to balance to budget, they had to insert a figure of $2.1 billion in there.

My point is simply this: in order to balance this budget in which we take in revenue of something like $66 billion in expenditures of the same amount, in order to balance that, the government has to sell assets of the people of Ontario that amount to $2.4 billion.

What are those assets? Well, we know that they're still insistent on trying to sell 49% of Hydro One. That's still on the table. A lot of people somehow figured, because the consumer price has been stabilized over the next four years, that the whole hydro situation—yes, it's still out there—would remain in public hands. I just want to tell the people of Ontario that's not so. The government still intends to sell 49% of Hydro One, which basically means that we will still have control, but I say, why sell any of it at all? It's a public asset and it should remain in the public domain, particularly an important utility such as the electricity company, and it raises money besides.

The other thing that's included in this $2.4-billion figure relating to sales is that the government intends to sell the Province of Ontario's Savings Offices. Now, it does not play a major role in my community of Kingston, but I do know that there are many, many smaller communities where the bank has operated for well over 75 or close to 80 years. These are particularly smaller communities that commercial banks, probably for business reasons, have not gone into, and yet those people also needed a place in effect where they could handle their financial transactions, which is the reason why the Province of Ontario Savings Office was set up in the first place. That's included in there. There may be other items as well.

I suggest to the people out there, if you are really concerned about these two issues, that is, the sale of 49% of Hydro One and the sale of the savings offices of the provincial government, e-mail, write, fax letters to the Minister of Finance, to the Premier, to each one of the government members. If you want to send us a fax or a letter or an e-mail as well, that's fine, so that we would know what's going on. But let the government know how you feel about it. There's absolutely no certainty at this time that 49% of Hydro One will not be sold. The only way that you're going to change that is by letting the government know that you are diametrically opposed to the sale of any of these assets I've mentioned.

In the few minutes I've got left, I just want to talk about the Provincial Auditor's report of last week. I am a firm believer that when you spend the taxpayer's money, you should be doing it on the same theories and using the same practices that each one of us tries to operate our own financial situation with. If you think of the government's money, which after all is the people's money, in the same way as if it were your own, then some of the outrageous situations that the auditor has identified in his report this year, simply would not occur, or they should not occur.

There are all sorts of examples I could use. For example, the use of consultants has gone up by something like $400 million in just the last two years—

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): What?

Mr Gerretsen: Four hundred million dollars.

Mr Patten: My God.

Mr Gerretsen: Last year, $662 million was spent on consultants—

Mr Patten: Incredible.

Mr Gerretsen: —which is a $400-million increase on a yearly basis over 1998.

Mr Patten: You're not serious.

Mr Gerretsen: Yes, I'm serious. It's unbelievable—

Mr Patten: It's unbelievable.

Mr Gerretsen: —particularly in situations where we now have consultants checking on the consultants. It is totally unacceptable as far as the people are concerned.

The other one that I found absolutely astonishing is the fact that apparently more than half of the Ontario corporations in the province do not file annual tax returns.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Surely not. Surely not.

Mr Gerretsen: That's almost incredible.

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Where's Shirley?

Mr Gerretsen: Where's Shirley? Shirley is just down the hall. The minister may be poking fun at it and maybe she's trying to divert attention away from the fact, but I wonder if somebody could stand up on the government side, particularly one of the cabinet ministers, and try to explain to me how it is possible that over half of the corporations of Ontario could get away with not filing a corporate income tax return.

Mr Bradley: Time for a snitch line.

Mr Gerretsen: Oh yes, they were all in favour of snitch lines at the time to catch people on welfare if you thought somebody was cheating. You may recall—one of the first things that I ever said in this House, as a matter of fact, to then Finance Minister Eves—I said to him, and maybe quite naïvely and innocently, "If you're going to have a snitch line for people who cheat on welfare, why don't you have a snitch line for the people who don't pay their taxes, either personal taxes or corporate taxes? I think what's good for one is good for the other."

Generally speaking, I'm not in favour of snitch lines, but if you're going to have it, have a snitch line for everybody who's out there, and not just for one segment of society and not for the other segment of society. But how, Speaker—and I'm asking you the question—is it possible that, out of the 773,000 corporations that we have in the province of Ontario, more than half of them don't file their income tax returns? OK, you could say, "It's up to them to file." But surely to goodness the Ministry of Finance should have been on top of this situation and should have sent out reminder notices, should have done something or other to try to get the system moving.

You see, what's interesting, and I again go back to the budget document, when you look at the amount of corporate taxes actually coming into our system here, it's very revealing. In the year 2000-01, the corporate tax revenue paid into the province of Ontario, paid into the system, was $9.2 billion. You know what it is anticipated to be this year? Some $6.1 billion.

Some people could say that some of it's due to the fact that corporate tax was lowered, something that we have never agreed with, because we always felt that rather than giving corporations and individuals an income tax cut, it would have been much better to put that money into much-needed education and health care services. But most of that money, or lack thereof, is due to the fact that people simply aren't filing. If they're not filing, most of them aren't paying. The auditor points this out. It'll be very interesting to see what the response of the Ministry of Finance will be once they appear before the public accounts committee.

There's also another section that I personally found very troubling, and that dealt with the long-term-care situation. As long-term-care critic for our party, I feel that the way we treat our elderly in our long-term-care homes is something that should be our top priority. These are basically people who, many of them, are in the last days of their lives. I think what we owe them, more than anything else, is that they can live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort.

I see, for example, that none of the homes that the auditor took a look at had an up-to-date licence and that some of the licences went back to 1998, 1997, since they were last renewed. I find that a deplorable situation. You could say, "What has the licence renewal got to do with the home?" The point is simply this: if we as a government, or the Tories as a government, don't even care about renewing the licences of the nursing homes etc, how many other things that are much more meaningful in the lives of the elderly who live in these homes are being, in effect, neglected as well?

I always point out that I have the highest regard for the people who work in these homes. Most of the people who work there are greatly overworked because of the tremendous acuity problems that many of the seniors have, which is ever-increasing as the population ages in these homes. The demand on the people who work there is more and more and higher and higher.

What I say to the government is quite simply this: try to deal particularly with the problems that affect the most vulnerable people in our society, whether they're young or whether they're old. In this particular case, I think the auditor has made a very compelling argument for the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to immediately move into this area and correct the deficiencies that he has pointed out in his report.

With that, I'll turn it over to the next speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): It's a pleasure to be able to rise this evening and speak on the concurrence issue. I think one of the things that I, as a member of the government, am particularly proud of is the recent announcement of the creation of one million jobs. I think that for many of us who look back to the early part of the nineties, this was something that seemed to be unobtainable. Although, as a member, I certainly remain committed to the notion that this was something to work toward, I think that it is certainly an achievement in which many of us take great pride. It means fewer people are on welfare. It means that those people have not only the material advantages of a job, but also the self-esteem. It speaks to the climate for investment that we have created in this province.

I want to speak particularly to the issue of the small business owner. When I talked to small business owners in the early nineties, they were crippled by the burden of taxation, of employer taxes, and they were extremely depressed about the opportunities that they thought lay before them. It was then the commitment that we had to ensure that in fact small business would have the confidence to be able to add even one more employee. Small business accounts for the greatest growth in employment in this province, and adding one more employee was extremely important to them.

It's really a pleasure for me to be able to just comment on that particular accomplishment. It speaks to the industry and the commitment that the people of Ontario have, that they have been able to create one million jobs.

Mrs Bountrogianni: I'm happy to join this debate. I'm going to spend the 12 minutes I believe I have to speak on post-secondary education and what the cutbacks have done to post-secondary education, but I want to focus on the double cohort. We can't talk about the double cohort enough. It's coming. It'll be here in the fall of 2003. We're unprepared for it. The government's own report showed that they are short 6,300 spaces. Just this week we learned that they're asking the colleges and universities to consider taking fewer non-traditional students. By non-traditional students: college transfers and older students; in other words, adults who have decided to go back to school. That's a shame. They had seven years to plan for the double cohort. Someone named Mr Gourley who used to work for then-Finance Minister Ernie Eves actually told him, to the student, the number on the double cohort. He did excellent research seven years ago and told them how many students would be entering school in 2003, but they ignored it and low-balled the estimate and now, even if they gave the money tomorrow, the schools would be scrambling to hire professors by the fall. That was a huge failure on the part of the government. The honourable member opposite talked about jobs. Well, we have to think about future jobs as well. Students are a big part of that.

The second thing I'd like to highlight is the OSAP problems we're having right now. Fewer students are eligible for OSAP right now. It's gone down significantly in the last few years. The reason is, the criteria have been tightened so that now, if you've lived out of the home up to five years—in other words you can be 23 years old, you've lived away from home for five years—the government still considers that your family needs to pay for your education. There are all sorts of reasons why the students may be living away from home for five years or more. As well, they've lowered the amount of family income in order to be eligible for OSAP. In the past if a family of four had a family income of $40,000, they weren't expected to be able to pay for their kids' education in post-secondary. Now they are. These are the reasons why OSAP have made it really difficult for students to apply for and get OSAP.

A few weeks ago we had the college students come here and talk about OSAP in a very constructive way and actually give constructive advice to the minister. She said she would look into it—that would be the education minister; the other minister was not available—that is, basically administrative changes that would make it easier for the students.

One change is for the appeal process to be brought in. In the past if you were not successful in your application for OSAP, you were able to appeal. The administrators would then look at your situation and say, "OK, you're in the grey area. You may not fit the rules exactly, but we can see why you need the money," and they would grant the appeal or not. That has been taken away by this government, and the students want that back.

The second change they want on OSAP, which really isn't a money issue—it's more an administrative issue—is to give the money sooner than when the OSAP money is given. It is very difficult. Some of them have a lot of trouble getting by the first couple of weeks of school until they get their OSAP money.

The other issue I want to bring up again is the physician shortage. Instead of trying to address this by making it easier for students to go to medical school, they've made it more difficult. Tuition has gone up. It used to be $5,000 a year before this government took over. It's now approximately $15,000 a year.

I highlighted one medical student who actually did her undergraduate at McMaster, Anne Conlin. She's from the town of Ailsa Craig. Anne is one of these amazingly exceptional students. She went to McMaster University. She did not qualify for OSAP, but her parents could not help as well. She's from a rural area. She worked full-time while attending McMaster University for undergraduate studies. Everyone knows how difficult it is to get into medical school. You have to have marks in the 90s. You have to have had volunteer work. A lot of people do missionary work in Africa. The average age is going up for medical students—

Mr Patten: They have to work here too.

Mrs Bountrogianni: —and work here as well; thank you, Mr Patten. It's very difficult to get into medical school. Anne worked full-time and went to school full-time at McMaster, and managed to get the marks to get into medical school at the University of Western Ontario.

She was fine with that. She was quite willing to work full-time and go to medical school full-time. She's one of these amazingly exceptional young women, but the tuition was $5,000 a year when she started. In year two, it went up. In year three, it was $15,000. She went to a bank. To make a long story short, she now owes about $100,000.

There are no physicians in her town—it's one of the Deputy Speaker's towns, Mr Johnson's town. She's still determined to go back, which again points to how exceptional she is, because she wants to give back to her community. She said she has other friends who are equally motivated, but they didn't go into medical school because they saw what she was going through and said, "It's not worth it. We're going into different fields." What a shame for rural Ontario and for the rest of Ontario.

As well, the medical students who came that day—this was in October—highlighted the fallacy of the free tuition for medical students who agree to serve in rural areas. It's a fraction of the cost, so it's just not worth it. Very few are taking this up, because the average student debt of a medical student is $100,000. You end up getting, after taxes, $26,000 with the government's program to pay for tuition. That's just not enough for them to be motivated to do this. There's another area where this government has really disappointed all of us: the students, the future physicians, the physician shortage, and so forth.

I want to also talk about the cutbacks to post-secondary education in general. As soon as they were elected in 1995, they cut nearly half a billion dollars: a 15% cut in operating grants. That was the largest cut to post-secondary education in Ontario history. Instead of increasing money to prepare for the double cohort, they actually did that: they cut nearly half a billion dollars.

We saw what happened earlier today with the Rozanski report. He is saying that the elementary and secondary schools need almost $2 billion—I think $1.8 billion—which is approximately what this government cut from elementary and secondary education. They're doing this the same at all levels of education: they first cut, then the commission reports to show they shouldn't have cut. What was all this turmoil for? The debt still increased.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Tax cuts.

Mrs Bountrogianni: My colleague from Hamilton West says it's about tax cuts. Yes, it's about tax cuts. But I can tell you that tax cuts aren't doing a lot of families a lot of good. There are so many user fees. My son comes home every week—he's in grade 10—with some amount of money he needs for something that in the past students didn't have to pay for. I'm very fortunate. I have a job. I can pay for it. But I really wonder about the families that make a lot less money. I don't know how they do it, because it's challenging for us as well. I don't know how other families can do it.

What they did to elementary and secondary—which is very clear today; they underfunded it for the last seven years—they've done to post-secondary as well. There aren't as many people with kids in colleges and universities, so there hasn't been the amount of turmoil that there was in elementary and secondary. But that's coming now, with the double cohort. That's coming because the government has underestimated by 6,300 the number of spaces needed. This was predicted in 1995 by someone in then-Finance Minister Eves's office. It was ignored. It was confirmed again by the Queen's research in the summer. They actually tried to bury that report, but of course we got a copy. They still haven't done anything about it.

The tragedy is that even if tomorrow all of a sudden they put in the money for the double cohort, it's too late for the fall, as far as hiring people. Professors aren't as easy to hire as some people might think. Most of them have to relocate to go to the city where they teach. It costs approximately $6,000 just to interview a professor. They fly the professor in or get them in through a means of transportation, with the family, to check out the neighbourhoods, to check out the schools, and then they decide whether they want to relocate. It's a big decision. So for them to do that, it takes time; it takes money. This government has basically nixed that opportunity.

As well, just the uncertainty surrounding the double cohort has made a lot of high-quality potential faculty say, "Maybe we'll just pass over Ontario now." I know my institution, which is in the riding of my friend David Christopherson, McMaster, is doing all sorts of things and giving all sorts of bonuses trying to get faculty there. I'm sure all universities are doing that. I just happen to know about it, since it's in my town. That is what they're doing. They're giving all sorts of bonuses: "Please come."

The other problem with post-secondary education that I'm hearing from students is regarding the overcrowding of classrooms. Already a certain percentage of students in each university and college are unfunded. They're called different things in colleges and universities. In universities, they're called "unfunded students," which means the institutions basically absorb the cost of these extra students. Now they're asked to do it again in the fall.

They're trying their best to accommodate, but when I speak to the administrators and the professors, they're quite sad that they have to say no to students who are 25 or 30 years old, who for whatever reason didn't have the opportunity to go to school when they were 18 and now want to go back and are told, "Well, you're going to be on some secondary list." Of course I support the 17-year-olds and 18-year-olds who are now graduating for the first time, but we shouldn't do that at the expense of mature students who want to go back. It's a second chance at a better life. We all know that better education correlates with all sorts of things—better health and so on. It's just a shame that that opportunity has been really reduced, if not taken away, from a lot of adults who want to go back.

As well, there's a group of college students who often take a different route to university. They'll do a college diploma and then they'll apply for university, for whatever reason; either because they weren't ready for university, it was too expensive at the time or they thought they wanted to get into something more applied first. Ordinarily after two years it wouldn't be a problem to get into first-year university with some credits. The institutions are now being told by this government, "Put those on a secondary list too." So fewer of those possibilities will occur as well.

It's not as if this government wasn't warned. They were warned over and over again by stakeholder groups, by students, by members of the opposition. It was just poor planning. My theory is that they were hoping the private universities would accommodate the double cohort. My theory is that they thought that many more private universities would open. Of course, they were really delayed in even getting that going. The quality assurance board has not approved many. I really do think that's what they were hoping: that the private universities would do it. It's not a bad theory, if that's what they were hoping. But that hasn't happened either, because even there there was mismanagement. It took them a full year to get the quality assurance board up and running. It took a long time before people committed to being part of that board, and for good reason.

In short, I just want to say that what they've done to post-secondary education is shameful. We are funded last of all the provinces and states by this provincial government. We should be at the top, not at the bottom. I really feel very sorry for students, my children included, that they have to have these challenges that we never had when we had the opportunity to go to school.

Mr Christopherson: I'd like to pick up where my friend and colleague from Hamilton Mountain left off in terms of having talked about education and the need that's there—

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: Well, when it comes to Hamilton, nobody else in this place who gets up every day and says, "What am I going to do for Hamilton?" so if we don't do it, nobody is going to. I'm very proud of the fact that we do stick together. I see my other friend, the Honourable Brad Clark, here from Stoney Creek who's a member of the government. When it comes to local issues, yes, we do stick together. That's exactly where I'm going, actually: on a matter of local importance.

I want to talk just very briefly about Chedoke while the Minister of Health is here. I'm not going to get into the particulars because the players know exactly what the issues are. What I do want to emphasize to both ministers, our regional minister as well as the Minister of Health, is that we've got a unique opportunity to do something positive with the lands that are being developed with the new St Peter's facility. The land is being offered to us at no cost. It's adjacent to this new facility. It allows us to keep the families, these individuals and the staff together.

At this time, Minister of Health, the one thing that we need is to hear you step in and at least direct Hamilton Health Sciences that they will not begin moving those individuals out. If that starts to happen before we get an announcement on the new facility, quite frankly it's going to make it that much more difficult for us and your ministry to justify the building of this facility. I know that you've undertaken to look at this. I take you at your word. I know that your seatmate in this case, fortunately for us, is indeed Minister Clark. I would just emphasize to you, Minister, if you're not in a position soon to announce the new facility, if we could hear from you publicly that those individuals won't be moved out it would be very helpful to help alleviate some of the very strong anxiety that exists among the individuals and family members of those there.

Minister, I'll leave that with you. At the earliest chance you get to indicate that they're not going to be moved in the foreseeable future—that would be a really good sign for us. I've offered publicly, and I know my colleagues in the official opposition have too, that if we get these announcements, you'll get the credit that you're due and the acknowledgement that it's a positive thing in our city. Until then, we remain on guard, shall we say, hoping that this works out. I'll leave that and hope to hear from the minister soon.

I asked a question earlier today on behalf of Hamilton city council, where we're in a desperate situation for funding that the city council has been covering with 100-cent city dollars, when actually it's provincial money that should be doing this. I'm going to take advantage of the opportunity to speak on virtually anything we like and the fact that the minister who I asked the question to is here today, the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services.

The minister knows that we weren't talking about the per diems, and fair enough. There could have been a confusion yesterday. What we are talking about is the fact that the $240,000 in question that city council has paid is money they're paying out because they don't want to turn people away, but it really is a provincial responsibility. If you don't step in, not only will individuals who are currently having their needs falling short, but people who now are in beds won't be because the city is going to have to cut back.

On that, I did read part of an editorial from Robert Howard, who wrote the editorial in the Hamilton Spectator today. I got a chance to read some of it. I'd like to put a little bit more on the record, again, taking advantage of the minister being here to underscore the importance of this to our community.

The editorial goes on to say, "The health of Canadians should not be dependent on where they were born, where they end up, or how much money they or their family may have. We have embraced that precept when it comes to physical health; why is it so difficult to come to terms with it for mental health?"

That's relevant, Minister, because you will know that the individuals we're talking about are people with mental illness and other very debilitating disabilities that leave them with no alternative, and if we don't step in—well, you probably think it would be a little over the top if I said it. I'll read how the editorial ends. I appreciate the minister giving her attention to this.

"The tragic fact is that this winter—on probably more than one occasion—a mentally ill homeless person will likely freeze to death on the street of a Canadian city. We acknowledge that even the best-resourced safety nets can't save everyone. But the province—and ultimately Ottawa—must step forward. If not, people will continue to suffer, and some will die."

Minister, I know that earlier today you looked over at me and committed to reviewing this. I took that, based on knowing you the way I do and sort of the body language or the way you expressed it, that you weren't just looking to get out of an answer to a question in question period but that you were sincere about it. I believe that. It's not a huge amount of money, although every dollar is important: $240,000, and we've got a $67-billion or $68-billion budget. If you can see your way clear, it really would allow all of us—you as the government here, our city council and the supports we have in Hamilton—to reach out on those freezing cold nights and make sure that there's at least a warm bed for someone to go to. I know you'll do the best you can in that regard, and we appreciate it.

I want to move now, in the moments I have left, to deal with education. I mean, here we go again. Critics—political, trustees, students, parents, education experts—virtually everyone, has said that your funding formula doesn't work, not that it needs fine-tuning or tinkering but that it doesn't work. The whole concept of a cookie-cutter approach to every community doesn't make practical sense, doesn't make common sense. The needs in downtown Hamilton are very different from the needs in downtown Mississauga, Markham, Oakville. Even Toronto, for that matter, is different from every other community. To have a formula that doesn't allow that kind of flexibility is actually a formula for disaster. You were told that, over and over and over again. I said in an interview, at least a message I left, with Chinta Puxley of the Hamilton Spectator that the headline ought to read "We Told You, Says Everyone," because virtually every recommendation in here reflects one criticism or another that came from every group that I just mentioned. Pick the subject matter and it's covered off in this report.

But we all know how this process works, and it goes like this. The government cuts funding to education and they completely, radically change everything. At the time they do it, they're warned, cautioned, criticized by experts, by parents, students, trustees, those who know a lot more about the education system than I do. Still, you went ahead and did it because you needed that money for your tax cuts, and this was the price coming out of education. And boy, weren't we forewarned about what was going to happen in the Ministry of Education? We all remember John Snobelen—I think he's actually still a member, isn't he? We remember John Snobelen standing in front of that crowd, the infamous tape of him telling the bureaucrats in the Ministry of Education—I'm paraphrasing—that he and they had to create a crisis to justify the actions they were going to take.

All along, the only real expertise you've brought to education is to point out where it doesn't work and where the problems were. We have said to you over and over that there's no such thing as perfection; go to your favourite international conglomerate corporation and there's always room for improvement. But you use that as an opportunity to say, "We're the only ones who have done anything. Here's this problem," and the piece you left out was whether or not your action solved the problem. You identified it and said, "We're taking action," and somehow that alone is supposed to have Ontarians conclude you were doing the right thing.

No. In fact in most cases—not all; there were some good aspects of it; everyone acknowledges that—on the biggest and most important pieces, what happens in the classroom, you knew this wasn't going to work. The job of the Minister of Education in the last few years, in my opinion, has not been to bring about a better education system but rather to be the chief apologist for the government and the dancer of tunes here in the House during question period.

The government knew this. They knew they could only push it so long and then the crisis was going to rise up and bite them, so they commissioned this report. Now of course what's going to happen is that the government—I understand that the Premier and the minister have a news conference scheduled tomorrow. They'll announce that they are responding to these recommendations because they care about the education system. Look, there's nothing new in here. What this does is provide you with political cover. It allows you to say, "We have to make these changes, not because the system doesn't work," which everyone knows, but rather it allows you to stand up and say, "We're going to make these changes because the recommendations"—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Excuse me. We really do have to come to order. I'm having some difficulty hearing the member from Hamilton West. If you want to have private conversations, you may have them outside the chamber. I apologize to the member for Hamilton West.

Mr Christopherson: Not a problem, Speaker. I have no doubt that it's not a question of whether they can hear me but whether they want to listen. I'm sure they hear me—at least that's what I intend to achieve, at the very least, while I'm on my feet.

As I was saying, what this report does is give you political cover and it lets you make the changes that should be made—quite frankly, to put things right—without having to say you were wrong. That's the purpose of this, what it's for, so you can say, "We did a review at the end. We'd built in a five-year review. So we don't have to admit we did anything wrong. This is all part of what we were planning in the first place." It's again so transparent.

However, as in the case with the Henderson Hospital in Hamilton—I see my friend the Minister of Labour laughing. He will know that I'm probably about to say that in the case of the Henderson Hospital, the by-election was our friend. In terms of education in this province, the upcoming provincial election is our friend.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): You're such a cynic.

Mr Christopherson: Oh, I'm very cynical on these subjects. You're absolutely correct. And why? Why on earth would I be cynical about anything your government has done, Minister?

The only good news in all of this and the fact that the election is coming is that they are probably going to respond to some of these. I can't imagine that at this point even this government can say no to this report. What is a shame—

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: I hope you're just practising, Minister, for something else, not this report.

I want to point out that what hurts and what is painful to have to accept is that classes for English as a second language haven't been there for how many thousands of students at the very least over the last few years because of your stubbornness? How many hundreds or thousands of special-needs children have not had their needs met? How many have had to stay home? How many have not had the assistance they should have in the classroom because you've refused to admit that there was underfunding in these areas? How many principals have already been fired, laid off, gone from the system because you wouldn't keep a principal in each school? What's the recommendation here? Quelle surprise: a principal in every school. Guidance counsellors: they're back. A recognition that there hasn't been enough money for transportation: it's there in black and white. There's money there for maintaining and repairing schools. How many times have colleagues from Hamilton got on their feet and practically begged you to put some money into maintenance because our schools are deteriorating around the heads of our children? It's in the report.

There's even a recognition that—I'm going from memory now, but I think it's $50 million be earmarked for small schools in a community. I see the Minister of Education nodding her head yes, so I assume I've got the figure right. Certainly that recommendation is in this report, but you know it comes awfully late, in fact too late for many schools in Hamilton. I can only imagine how many small communities have already closed their only school. It may already be gone for them. So that's the shame of this report. The heartbreak is that there has been pain, certainly on the part of parents of children with special needs when they saw the supports for their children cut in half, cut to a quarter, eliminated, or their children at home because there aren't any supports there. How many young people across Ontario aren't being given the same opportunity that others will in the future because they didn't get the skills they needed with regard to English as a second language? These are crucial, fundamental pillars of education for so many children above and beyond the complexity of the new curriculum—and that's causing a great deal of grief. The status of textbooks is still an ongoing problem.

There are so many issues that I guess ultimately we just have to take our heartbreak and turn it around and say, "At least, hopefully, those days are over." The best we can hope for now is that tomorrow the Minister of Education and the Premier will stand up and, if they won't admit they were wrong, at the very least, announce that they are going to do, finally, the right thing for the kids in our schools.

Hon Mr Clark: There's a little bit of irony in this, in that we have this wonderful report. I can recall when Premier Eves said that we were going to move forward with a review. The opposition members—and even Annie Kidder was one of them—were saying, "Ah, this going to be a big charade. This is going to be nonsense. We can't trust this government to do anything. This report will be nothing." The reality is, Annie Kidder was just on television praising the report. I was stunned. Earl Manners was praising the report.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Clark: Do you know what's interesting? The opposition begin to heckle because they don't like this when we are right. They hate it when we are right. The fascinating thing is, the opposition—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: That's right, we have to bring in an order—the opposition was saying the funding formula was flawed; it was broken; get rid of it. That's what they were saying. Were they not saying that?

Yet, what does the honourable gentleman say? You should listen to this; this is important: "Although there is general support for the concept and the structure of the student-focused formula (I encountered this support during my consultations) ... ." He was just on TVO and said that there is nothing wrong with the funding formula. Everyone agrees with the funding formula, he says. His terminology—you've got to listen to it—"virtually unanimous support" is what he said. Those were his words, not mine. We just watched it. You can watch the repeat later on, if you stay up late. He said very clearly that there is support for the funding formula. He has made recommendations on how to improve the benchmarks. That's what he's done.

They're laughing about this, but we stand by our student-focused funding formula. We said there would be a review. You didn't even support the funding formula. You opposed the funding formula. Yet this recognized gentleman is stating, "It's a good formula and we're improving it."

Mr Bradley: The report to which reference was just made, of course, is a total condemnation of what this government has done since it has been in power. Now for this government to try to say, in some way spin it, that it justifies what the government has done, is beyond belief. The member must have taken his cranky pills because I'm surprised he was able to say this without having a smile on his face when the report repudiates, in virtually every way, what this government has done to education. I've read it from cover to cover. I'm very familiar with its provisions, and that is the case.

Let me tell you that I have been amused as well. This is as amusing—as my friend from Kingston and the Islands mentioned—the press releases that came out when the government was in full retreat over its pension surplus blunder. I could hear this beeping sound, like something backing up, and I saw this white flag and I could hear the bugles of retreat being played as the minister who early on in the questions was saying that the opposition was simply scare-mongering, and at the end, trying to say that it was her idea that the pension provision be withdrawn from the huge budget bill. Of course it was put in there in the first place to hide it so no one would find it, but of course the very assiduous opposition looked carefully and found it in the bill, as we were reading the bill cover-to-cover at that time. So the government was forced to retreat. Yet another victory, even with rules stacked against us in this House: the opposition, along with people of this province, forced this government to back down from a policy which was designed to provide to its corporate friends the ability to, as some people would say, steal the pension surplus.

Hon Mr Clark: Oh, that isn't parliamentary.

Mr Bradley: Well, I think some people would say that—steal the pension surplus from the people. We got the letters and the e-mails and so on of people who were genuinely concerned. We took up the cause and the government went into full retreat. It reminded me, as well, of all the fighting we did on this side over Visudyne and how we, day after day, got up in the House and demanded that the Minister of Health provide coverage for Visudyne, and how he would dodge the questions and dance around the questions. He finally came up with a half-baked formula that still forces people to be half-blind before they're able to access funding for this treatment. So we see the government again having to capitulate on an issue that, if it had done the right thing in the first place, it would not have had to capitulate on.

Hydro is another good example. The government was boisterously defending its hydro policy and saying it was the best thing that ever happened. Of course the intense questioning from the opposition, the e-mails that were coming into the offices of the government members, and the letters that were coming in, the telephone calls, the government put on the brakes. Even the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound who, at least when he is in his own riding, is certainly anti-government, and when he comes down here is a government man—even when he came down here, he had to take off his government hat and tell you people that the opposition was right in the first place and that what you were doing was going to be a disaster for the people in terms of the amount they were paying for electricity. So the government backed off on that. I was pleased to see the government back off on that particular issue.

Mr Bradley: I will ignore the interjections because of the short period of time I have.

I was also horrified by the auditor's report that just came out that said this government was now spending $400 million a year more on consultants, that it hadn't even licensed many nursing homes in this province, that inspections were well behind. It had many horror stories in it. They like to be the law-and-order party over there. My friend the minister of—I used to call him the Solicitor General and the Minister of Corrections—now I think it's public safety; Tom Ridge's job in the US—they took $60 million away from him. Then they expected that he was going to be able to have his ministry catch all these people where there were warrants for the arrest. Well, how do you expect him to be able to? I'm sympathetic to my friend Bob Runciman because I say, "How do you expect the man to do this kind of job when you whittled $60 million out of his budget?" He needed it very much. I told him, and I will continue to do this, I'll fight to get that $60 million back in his budget. So he is not the stooge for the government, the one who has to accept all the criticism for the government, because he doesn't deserve that criticism, in my view; the government does, those who provide the funding to his ministry.

We have many problems out there. I had a call today from a constituent who could not get a CT scan. The person, as it turned out, had cancer of the colon and had to go over to the United States and pay US$300 to get a CT scan that discovered he was in the third stage of cancer of the colon. He is asking why he couldn't have had that kind of scan in a timely fashion here in Canada.

Now, the Minister of Health says, "I've got the solution. We'll give it to the private sector. That will speed it up. We'll put out a request for proposals." All that has to be done, I tell the Minister of Health, is to put those diagnostic machines in the hospitals, not out to the private sector. If you put them in the hospitals and give them the funding to operate these diagnostic machines, first of all, it will be cheaper, and second, it will be within the public domain instead of having the profit in it. I think that's what everybody in this province is looking forward to. They hope the minister will withdraw those kinds of proposals, although he seems wedded to them at this time.

I want to tell him that hospital restructuring in Niagara has been a disaster. The government took millions upon millions of dollars out of hospital funding in our area and created a crisis in the hospitals. Now, wherever we find restructuring taking place in the province and the government has an estimate, you triple that estimate and you have the real cost of the disruption that was caused by this government to the hospital system in Niagara and other parts of the province.

We have a shortage of doctors. This government has given some hints that it's finally going to address this issue, after great pressure from the opposition. Of course we find that their policies have been inadequate in this regard. Thousands of people right across this province, many of them in the Niagara Peninsula, do not have access to a family physician and all that means to them.

We have drug costs where people have to pay out of their own pockets for necessary drugs and are not receiving this cost because the government made a deal which allowed them to de-list many of these drugs that are essential for the good health of people.

We find that people are being discharged quicker and sicker from hospitals and, as a result, many times have to come back into hospital or are left in a very vulnerable position. They are unhappy people.

Ophthalmologists in the Niagara region are small in number and large in caseload and require a temporary increase in the billing cap to allow people to be properly serviced in our part of the province.

We have the problem of the double cohort, where there are simply not going to be enough spaces for post-secondary students who want to get into the institution of their choice, an institution they deserve to be allowed into because of their marks and their desires. The changes to OSAP, while sometimes subtle, have meant that people with a lower income have not had the access they should have to post-secondary education. And we have seen tuition go up sky-high, in some cases, for the professions and very high in other cases. It's all right for the rich in this province. We look like we're going back to the good old days, as the government would say, where only the extremely bright and the extremely rich had the best access to the best positions in post-secondary education, but of course that's what this government is all about.

We had the government peddling Highway 407 to save its bacon back in the 1999 election—a $3-billion giveaway—and customers are being gouged constantly by the Highway 407 corporation. Now they want to sell the Province of Ontario Savings Office. Most of the calls I'm getting are from people who were once Conservatives, who are saying this is a good institution, something you should maintain, and yet you're eager to sell that in a fire sale so you can balance the budget.

You should be saying to the corporations, "I'm sorry, we're not going to give you more tax breaks. We're going to create a good atmosphere in this province with a strong health care system and an education system. We're not going to give you that $2.2-billion tax cut that you have been promised by this government. Instead we're going to invest it in services that are needed by the people of this province."

I heard a member talk about the Ministry of the Environment budget. Of course, that is a joke. Having cut the Ministry of the Environment to the very lowest it's been in years, the government is now putting some money back in and rehiring staff. They conveniently forget to say that they virtually annihilated the Ministry of the Environment. One promise they kept was the nod and the wink to polluters in this province when they said to them, "You know, we'll get the Ministry of the Environment out of your face." Promise made, promise kept. The result: incidents such as Walkerton, Ontario.

I wish I could be more positive about members of the government, but I know that members of the government have it in their own purview to be positive about themselves. I simply say that while you are making the rich richer in this province, people relying on disability pensions have not had an increase since 1993. These are not people who can easily find additional work for themselves or increase their income. At the very least, the government should provide funding to those individuals, and surely that can be done within the concurrences we have today.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I was quite entertained by the member for St Catharines and some of the comments he was making. He was talking about health care: MRIs, hospital lineups, people not getting in for CT scans just as soon as they might. But I'd remind the member for St Catharines and all the Liberals that obviously it must have been a whipped vote, because they have voted against every budget bill. Every dollar that our government has tried to spend, they have been opposed, it doesn't matter whether it's health care or whether it's to build hospitals. We built one in Bancroft, and of course the Liberal member there, the member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, took great glee in being at the grand opening, like, "We did it," when in fact she voted against putting money into that hospital. That's their track record.

Mr Bradley: Nonsense.

Hon Mr Galt: It's not nonsense, member for St Catharines. They voted against every budget bill, every financial bill that has come before this House since I've been here, since 1995.

I'll make a prediction. In approximately half an hour we're going to be voting on concurrences. That's about estimates and about money and about payments. How are you going to vote? I predict you'll vote not to do it; you'll vote against concurrence. Again, you're going to vote against it. I think it is extremely unfortunate that they stand up holier than thou, but when on earth are they going to do something and support the government when the government wants to spend money and increase spending on health care?

I heard the member for St Catharines talking about the environment. In a 10-year period, from 1985 to 1995, the only legislation I know they brought through was the Environmental Bill of Rights, a pretty poor track record for a 10-year experiment. Maybe the member for St Catharines, who was Minister of the Environment at the time, might enlighten me on some of the things they did, because I don't see anything they did.

There's a whole list of things that the Conservative government has been doing for the environment. If you look at the track record over many years, you'll find legislation brought in and regulations brought in by a Conservative government, not by a Liberal or a socialist government. They do a lot of talking. They talk about the cutbacks. Well, what were all those people doing through the late 1980s and the early 1990s at Walkerton, when records were being changed and fudged and all the rest? What were they doing, all these people they had? Obviously they weren't monitoring. But they get on their high horse and yell and scream that a few people have been cut back for efficiency purposes, that that's the whole problem. I don't think so.

2100

I'd like to bring to the attention of the members of this House the fact that Canada now leads all the G8 countries in economic growth. Over and above that, the province of Ontario is leading Canada. That has taken us from 1995, when we were the worst in economic development in the world, to first. I think that's quite a record and quite a statement for our Premier of the day, Mike Harris, and now Premier Ernie Eves, who was the Minister of Finance. What a wonderful team that took us from worst to first. It didn't take very long from 1985 into the early 1990s to go from first to worst. It was pretty embarrassing here in Ontario, the area that we consider is the power, the engine that drives this whole great nation of Canada.

I was thrilled when the Honourable Janet Ecker stood up and read her Ontario Economic Outlook and Fiscal Review. It was a particular thrill when she read this sentence: "The government's plan for a balanced budget this year, our fourth consecutive balanced budget, is on track." It's not only on track, but we are headed for a fifth one.

The federal government brags about their balanced budget. Where do you think their extra dollars came from? Where would they be if Ontario hadn't stimulated the economy? Where would they be if they hadn't followed Ontario's example in tax cuts and stimulating the economy? We'd still be back there. They'd still be paying into a deficit problem, adding to the debt.

Fortunately, with the kind of tax cuts that were brought in, we are moving ahead.

It was an added thrill to find that we've a million-plus new jobs since we've taken office. The five years before we took office, I believe it was a net minus 20,000 new jobs, or no jobs, less jobs. But to look at the province of Ontario—seeing Toronto at 23.7% more jobs than when we took office; my area, 18.6%; eastern Ontario, 20.3%; southwestern Ontario, 13.4%—if you look at any five workers coming out of a plant, one of those people did not have a job in 1995. Today over a million people came home from a job interview and said, "Hey, guess what? I got the job."

I hear the opposition whining and crying about gridlock around Toronto. Well, that's unfortunate. I can tell you that there was absolutely no gridlock around Toronto in 1995. I could drive in or out at any time. Part of the reason for that gridlock is a million-plus people going to work. I think it's wonderful we have that many people going to work. Yes, we do have a new challenge to look at how to get them in and out and to their jobs, but that gridlock isn't just a coincidence. It's because we have a million-plus more people going to work and coming home. Certainly, it is a challenge that we have to look at.

Here's the example showing economic growth in Ontario: Ontario at 4%, Canada at 3.6%, the US at 3.4%. The opposition often likes to talk about, "Oh, we're just riding on the coattails of the US economy." What happened in the early 1990s when the US was doing very well? Why did we crash then? In the late 1990s we were moving ahead; the Americans were going down. After 2000, 2001 the Americans were in big trouble, but the province of Ontario seemed to be going ahead very well. There was a similar situation out on the west coast where that socialist government crashed in the good times in the US. So I think, I believe, that whether you are doing well or not in a province, depends an awful lot on the economic policies that you have in that particular province.

It was interesting to look at this graph in here to see the average family incomes in Ontario. The average family—that's probably in a lot of cases two-income families—in 1993 got down to about $52,000—just a hair over. It moved up a bit in 1994, back down in 1995 and from 1995 on steadily climbed to over $62,000 in 2000. It's probably significantly higher than that at this point in time. Also, look at the tax cuts that boost real take-home pay and how that has increased as a result of tax cuts. The opposition just loves to stand up and talk about, "Yeah, if you hadn't made the tax cuts, look at all things you could have been doing with those dollars." I think you have to really look at what happened to tax cuts and the stimulation of the economy, putting over one million people back to work, a million-plus people paying income tax, a million people with salaries to go out and buy goods that the provincial sales tax is collected on. Corporations pay their taxes. As a result we've increased our tax revenue by approximately 50%.

So if you want to increase taxes, which Dalton McGuinty would love to do—he talks about increasing them by $2 billion—what would happen? We'd stifle the economic growth in this country; we'd reduce the number of people working; we'd reduce the amount of income tax coming in; we'd reduce the amount of goods that people could buy because there would be fewer people with incomes, and we'd end up with less tax revenue. That's probably what's going to happen if we should be so unfortunate again to try that experiment of a Liberal government, because the one we tried back in 1985 through 1995 certainly was not a very good success at all.

Just in the conclusion of the Honourable Janet Ecker's report, she talks about the balanced budgets of various years. Back in 1999-2000 we paid down $0.7 billion; then in 2000-01 we paid down almost $2 billion—$1.9 billion—of the debt; in 2001-02 we paid down $0.4 billion; we aim this year at a balanced budget, and I wouldn't be surprised if we have a significant amount to pay down the debt again this year. Then, as we look forward, there doesn't seem to be too much question that we are going to have a balanced budget for next year.

Certainly, it's time that that kind of thing was happening here in the province of Ontario, that we had successive balanced budgets. When we had three in a row, I think the talk about that was the most since back to the early part of the century. So, probably—and I underline that—with five in a row, that may be a total record that's never been in place before.

I think what's interesting about what our government's been doing is to see what's happening in many other jurisdictions. I would like to draw to your attention what I have come across from the Liberal government in BC. As I look at what they're doing and what they call their vision—and this is from their campaign materials—I'd just like to share with you the similarities. It is an honour, I think, that they would be copying from us. The first is a top-notch education system for students of all ages. The changes that we've made have been absolutely phenomenal in developing curriculum, testing of students, standardized curriculum, standardized report cards.

The second one is high-quality public health care services that meet all patients' needs, where they live and when they need it. I think back to the health services restructuring committee and the marked changes they made in this province. As a matter of fact, there has been a hospital completed in my riding and there's another one under construction—that's two hospitals. Do you know how many hospitals were built from 1985 to 1995 in Ontario? Two hospitals. Two in my riding in these two terms, and in Ontario in those two terms, 1985 to 1995 all across Ontario, two hospitals. That just happens to be fact. That's what we're doing with health care. I see they're going to try to do the same in BC, a Liberal government.

"A thriving private sector economy that creates high-paying job opportunities"—does that sound like the Common Sense Revolution? Maybe they plagiarized from it. Certainly, that's been something that we've been working toward, creating jobs. A million-plus jobs certainly supports that.

"Safer streets and schools in every community"—that's almost dead-on the kind of things that we've been working on. Safer schools—now of course the Liberals, I'm quite sure they voted against that; didn't want safer schools, didn't want safer communities. I know they're talking in their platform about 1,000 more police officers. That's exactly what we did, and they're kind of copying it.

Their fifth point is, "Better services for children, families and First Nations." I think of what we did for young children, preschool children and early years, the early years centres that are being developed across this province, recognizing the tremendous potential in our youth, in our preschool children.

Number six, "The fastest-growing technology industry in Canada"—that's the vision in BC. We have it here in Ontario. It has occurred in the last six to seven years, a phenomenal amount of technology. If you talk to any of the universities, the amount of research money that we've put into the universities has been exceptional.

"A leading edge forest industry that is globally recognized for its productivity and environmental stewardship." "Greater equity and equality for British Columbia in Canada." It's their province, and that's basically what we've been doing. "The most open, accountable and democratic government in Canada." "Responsible, accountable management of public resources and tax dollars."

That comes from a Liberal government, copying very much from the Common Sense Revolution and from the Blueprint that was our platform in 1999.

I want to spend a few minutes on some of the things that have happened in my riding through SuperBuild. I think some of the members here would be interested in some of the things that have happened in Northumberland.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Galt: I know the member from Sudbury would love to hear about the heliport we've developed in Campbellford. The old one was on a high school football yard and it had to be moved. We've developed in Cobourg an Extendicare with a large number of beds. There's one being developed in Port Hope through Extendicare, approximately 130 beds.

I mentioned a few minutes ago about a hospital being built. That's the Northumberland Health Care Corp in West Northumberland, almost $40 million from the provincial government. What a phenomenal fundraiser they had. It's gone way over any expectations and my hat's off to the fundraising team that raised so much money for that. Money has gone into the long-term-care facility at Regency Manor in Port Hope and the Streamway Villa in Cobourg.

Highways also: over the last few years since we took office we have spent approximately $100 million on the 401 through Northumberland. That's putting in the centre barrier, and I'm sure that some of the members, like the Minister of Public Safety and Security, driving up through the riding from his riding, would appreciate the fact that barrier is there. It has increased safety and saved an awful lot of lives. It was a big campaign issue back in 1995, to get that centre barrier in. Also it's now six-laned right into Northumberland, with a tremendous number of dollars being spent on the cloverleafs and the bridges, particularly the bridge under construction right now that goes over the Ganaraska River.

Money has gone into transit renewal programs in Cobourg, Port Hope and Trent Hills. Also, the Baltimore Recreation Centre is upgrading and expanding; approximately $2 million through SuperBuild that was presented only a month or two ago. Also there is money to Haldimand township, looking at their arena in Grafton. Also there are fish and wildlife programs, infrastructure rehabilitation and the Codrington well system. A Ganaraska fishway has been developed. Also there are a very large number of projects, some 11 projects at Presqu'île park, everything from comfort stations to improving trails, boardwalks, improving the lighthouse visitor centre, just to name a few.

There have also been dollars that have come in—very appreciative of Minister Tsubouchi and what he did for the RCAF museum. That's not in my riding, but it's right on the edge of my riding. There was roughly $750,000 to give assistance to the RCAF museum, with many of the air force men working very hard to restore a Halifax aircraft that will be housed in this new addition that will be alongside the present museum. It's going to be a very impressive structure. I highly recommend to anyone here, if they're driving along the 401 through Quinte West, to drop in. It's only two or three kilometres off the 401. If you have any interest in aviation, it certainly would be quite a thrill for any of you to go through it.

In Cobourg, again, Minister Tsubouchi was down and made an announcement for the Waterfront Regeneration Trust, again roughly $750,000, and that's going to help with the old Diversy plant, getting it cleaned up, and doubling the number of slips for boats in the harbour. The unfortunate part is they should be matching dollars with the federal government, but they're Liberals and we can understand why they drag their feet. I expect they'll do the right thing and will come through with some funds.

I want to share in the last minute and a half just a few of the Liberal positions. This was on Tuesday, November 26, McGuinty in the morning: "In keeping with their request, we will give municipalities the option to place up to 3% visitor's levy on hotel room bills. This will yield potential revenue of up to $75 million per year for promotion and development of tourism." With McGuinty in the afternoon, the secret tax plan is missing. I don't know what happened to it, why they would announce it in the morning and pull it in the afternoon, but that's what seemed to happen.

I noticed that some of the Liberal policy on math just doesn't add up. Mr McGuinty said he would "expand power generation at Niagara Falls creating enough new clean electricity to power every home in a city the size of Hamilton, which is almost 500,000." Then he later says, "We'll expand power generation in Niagara Falls creating enough new clean electricity to power every home in a city the size of Brampton; that's slightly over 300,000." I expect he was trying to capitalize on the select committee on alternative fuel sources, taking advantage of some of those recommendations, but the numbers should at least be consistent.

Mr Speaker, I look forward to the opposition voting in favour of concurrences and I thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS EMPLOYMENT PROTECTION ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION DE L'EMPLOI DES POMPIERS VOLONTAIRES

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 9, 2002, on the motion for third reading of Bill 30, An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997 in order to protect the employment of volunteer firefighters / Projet de loi 30, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la prévention et la protection contre l'incendie afin de protéger l'emploi des pompiers volontaires.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I rise pursuant to standing order 9(c), which deals with what can be dealt with on a motion. Today's motion—we reviewed Instant Hansard—clearly indicated that the government would call government business. I will read to you the relevant section of standing order 9. It's quite long; I will shorten it. It says:

"Evening meetings held under subclauses (i) or (ii) shall be limited to the consideration of government orders or private members' public business or both, according to the terms of the motion...."

Instant Hansard says very clearly, and the Speaker repeated very clearly, that it was for the purpose of government business. A review of today's order paper indicates that the item that was just called is in fact a private member's item: M30. It's clearly designated as an "M" item. I would suggest that, because the terms of the motion limit our consideration tonight to government business, that calling this order is out of order. It's not in compliance with the motion that was put and passed by the government today.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On the same point of order, Speaker: Indeed, the argument is even stronger. If you take a look at standing order 9, in particular standing order 9(c), as well as the motion that was passed, you will note that the motion was passed with specific reference to 9(c)(ii). The addendum to 9(c) indicates that evening meetings held under (i) or (ii) shall deal with either government business or—and it is an exegetical "or"—private members' public business, or—and once again exegetical—both, as indicated in the motion. It doesn't apply to motions brought under 9(c)(iii). This is clearly a motion brought under 9(c)(ii), because 9(c)(ii) is referred to in the motion itself.

But take a look further, to paragraph (d) of standing order 9, which indicates that when it is private members' public business that is to be called, there are further requirements on the government House leader when presenting that motion. Paragraph (d) very specifically indicates that where a motion under clause (c) indicates that all or part of an evening meeting will be dedicated "to the consideration of private members' public business, the motion shall indicate the business to be considered." Clearly, this motion not only identifies itself as being for the purpose of considering government business, but it cannot be argued to somehow implicitly embrace private members' public business, because clause (d) goes one further and indicates that when the government is contemplating calling private members' public business, it has to indicate which private members' bills are to be called.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): It is so noisy, I cannot hear the member for Niagara Centre. If you want to have private conversations, take them outside. I need to be able to hear the member for Niagara Centre.

Mr Kormos: I realize that this is a serious problem for the government House leader this evening. However, it is not this caucus that drafted the motion. In fact, we voted against the motion. We didn't want to be a party to this motion. The government House leader chose the motion to put forward. It is not ambiguous; it is clear. So is standing order 9. The language is clear; it is not ambiguous; it is as specific as could be. Any doubt about the intent of the scope of this motion is surely addressed by paragraph (d), which is the one that requires that when it is private members' public business, the private members' public business that is going to be considered has to be identified in the motion.

That, I submit to you, Speaker, does not shut down the evening but requires the government to call a government bill if we are to proceed any further tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else on this point of order? The government House leader.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): First of all, this is exactly how it was done last night. So as far as the precedent is concerned, if there's a timeliness to a point of order, the timeliness was brought at the time of the point of order. Last night there was a timeliness issue, and the issue was exactly this: the timeliness of that point of order should have been brought at that time.

Secondly, this is exactly how it is done every single session.

Interjection: Oh no.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Oh yes. We sit late, it's for government business and we deal with private members' bills.

Thirdly, I have not known a time when this House didn't sit late and deal with private members' business during late sittings.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Am I going to be heckled by the member? I listened to him very carefully.

We've dealt with this as long as I've been in this House; where private members' business was done after 6 of the clock during late sittings to do government business.

Furthermore, once a bill is called, it is called as government business. Once a bill is called, the government calls the bill and it becomes government business because—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: I need to hear the government House leader; I don't need all your assistance.

Hon Mr Stockwell: It becomes government business for the simple reason that the only person who can call an order of the House is the government. As the government, I must be allowed to call the order of the House. If I don't have the power to order government business, I can't—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I appreciate your knowledge on this, but I'm trying to explain it to my friend from Algoma.

The fact of the matter is that as long as I am here as House leader, we are the government. We only have the power to order business of the House. Therefore, all business we call in this House ultimately becomes government business.

So firstly, if they were to call this, there's a timeliness issue. They should have brought it up last night.

Secondly, from a point of history, we've always dealt with this business during late sittings.

Thirdly, by virtue of being the government and the only people who can order business of the House, we are the government, so it must be government business.

It is not an acceptable argument, Speaker. I put it to you to make the decision.

The Acting Speaker: On the same point of order, the member for Niagara Centre.

Mr Kormos: I would ask the Speaker and other members who are interested to refer to standing order 96, paragraph (f), which specifically refers to private members' public business and how private members' public business bills can only be called by the government House leader for third reading but still clearly retain their status as private members' public business.

You see, there's no other way for private members' public business to reach third reading other than by consent or if it's called by the government House leader. That's the case whether it's a Liberal bill that's private members' public business, a New Democratic Party bill like our anti-scab legislation that's private members' public business, or a government backbencher's bill, or quite frankly a member who is not a part of any given caucus or identified party.

So 96(f) clearly refutes any suggestion that somehow there's a metamorphosis of a bill. An opposition member's private members' public business can only be called for third reading by the government House leader. This suggests that somehow, if Mr Bisson's legislation as private members' public business is called for third reading, it then becomes a government bill—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Exactly.

Mr Kormos: I beg to differ. No matter how much Mr Stockwell wishes it were true, and I understand why tonight he wishes it were true, he can't wish away the ongoing status. Private members' public business remains a private member's bill throughout its passage through the House as long as it is in the name of that private member.

Secondly, Mr Stockwell argues some awkward proposition of estoppel by making reference to last night's debate.

One, the government chose to bring the bill to the House last night on a particular motion. It had another motion today. The motion the government purported to rely upon last night died at midnight last night. There was another motion voted upon today, which is now the operative motion. That makes this a very timely point of order, because this point of order by both Mr Duncan and myself refers not to any previous motions that permit evening sittings; it refers to the very specific motion for which notice was made and which was voted upon today and which the government relies upon for this evening's sitting. That's number one.

Two, I put to you that at the very worst—I put to you that it's not necessary to consider last night, because you can't create precedent by acquiescence. Precedent is created by active conduct. Precedent is created by a ruling.

If, for instance, Mr Speaker, you, or a Speaker, permitted me to use unparliamentary language with respect to any given government member over and over and over again, the fact that a Speaker at some point says, "Oh, member for Niagara Centre, that language is unparliamentary," cannot be defended by my saying, "But previous Speakers never prevented me from calling somebody a whatever." So you can't acquire precedent by acquiescence.

Three, with respect to yesterday evening, I submit that it was, if one refers to the record, prima facie out of order, but that at the very least there was an implied—if there were any implications—consent by virtue of there having been no objection made to the utilization of last night's session from 6:45 to midnight.

There ain't no implied consent today. There is a clear point of order before you. What you have to look at, with respect, is at the motion the government relies upon, at the bill and whether or not it's a private member's bill, government bill, and at whether or not that motion permits that bill or any other private member's bill to be called this evening.

I appreciate that the government House leader is not pleased about this turn of events. I wish I could do something for him. I wish I could make life a little more pleasant for him this evening, but I can't.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I just want to add two points, and I'm not going to belabour it. Clearly, our standing orders deal with private members' business and government bills separately. For the government House leader to say one and the other are the same is a complete stretch. If we look at the standing orders as they're written, we deal with private members' bills in one procedure and we deal with government bills in a totally separate procedure. So to accept the government House leader's argument that both types of bills can be dealt with in the same way at third reading is completely a stretch. All we need to do is take a look at our standing orders. How we pass private members' bills in this House is totally separate from how we pass government bills.

The second point is that the government House leader made the point that at times at the end of sessions, we have dealt with private members' bills. The key point, as my House leader has pointed out, is that that is only by unanimous consent. At no time are we dealing with private members' bills by way of a government bill. You've been here, Speaker, and you understand far too well how it works: only by unanimous consent do we allow a private member's bill to go forward.

For the government to put forward the argument that these private members' bills be dealt with as government bills I think is completely off the mark. Private members' bills are totally separate, as set out in the standing orders, from government bills.

The Acting Speaker: Is there anyone else who wishes to be helpful? I am going to take five minutes to consider this. This House will stand in recess while we do that.

The House recessed from 2221 to 2228.

The Acting Speaker: First, I would like to thank the member for Windsor-St Clair, the member for Niagara Centre, the member for Timmins-James Bay and the government House leader for their assistance in this matter.

I would bring to members' attention that standing order 9 states that a night sitting must be limited to government orders, private members' business, or both. I might be inclined to agree with the member if this was all the guidance I had. Yet standing order 96(f) clearly states that private members' bills, having been given second reading, shall be called in the same manner as government business. This is a standing order. This has been our practice. I therefore rule that this order is properly before the House.

The Minister for Northern Development and Mines had the floor.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): I'll just be quick and recap for the people at home that we're talking about Bill 30, An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997 in order to protect the employment of volunteer firefighters. This bill was put forward by the member for Waterloo-Wellington, Mr Ted Arnott, who has done an excellent job on this piece of legislation.

To me, it boils down to a very simple concept, the concept that's cherished by our society and is the raison d'être for this Legislative Assembly and all Legislative Assemblies in the British parliamentary system, and that is to preserve freedom. For the people at home, what the Professional Fire Fighters Association wants to do and has been doing, and it's even written into collective agreements, is stop their members from volunteering back home on their own time to fight fires in their local fire brigades.

If you live in New Tecumseth, Clearview, Grey county, most of Simcoe county, Huron county, all of rural and small-town Ontario, throughout this province and this country we rely on volunteer firefighters and we especially appreciate those volunteers who also have the full-time job of professional firefighter. They bring expertise, they bring knowledge, they bring experience and they bring in fact human power to our local brigades, and they're very much valued and very much appreciated. No union, no association, no body not elected by the people at large should have the power in any democracy to tell you what you can or cannot do on your day off. Many firefighters in my area who volunteer locally also are professional firefighters in the city to Toronto; for example, I have firefighters from New Tecumseth and Alliston who perform both roles. The fact of the matter is they have five days on, when they're firefighting professionally in Toronto, and they have five days off. Their association, because of a powerplay, simply wants to stop them from volunteering in Alliston, Tottenham, Beeton, New Tecumseth and throughout my riding.

It's a very clear issue of freedom, a question of justice, a question of fairness and a question of good citizenship. As legislators you have to ask yourselves a few questions. Is this fair? No, it's not fair. It's not fair that anyone tells you what to do on your own time in a free and democratic society. Is it just? I have a degree in religion. A simple test of justice for all of us is: does that firefighter who volunteers on a free basis in their local community on their own time deserve to be punished? Did he or she do anything wrong? I think most objective people would say no. In fact, they're upholding good citizenship. The best definition of good citizenship that I've heard in my life is that if at the end of the day the people you meet, the places you work in, the communities you live in are better for the very fact that you were there, that you were there that day, then you've embraced good citizenship that day. Are our communities better because volunteer firefighters who are also professional firefighters risk their lives, risk their safety, risk their loved ones to save other people's loved ones? Yes, they are.

On a number of fronts this bill deserves to be supported. Firefighters do not deserve to have their union tell them what to do on their spare time. It's a great Conservative principle and I wish it was a principle the New Democratic Party, who were rude last night, who were vicious in their attack on freedom and in fact on this member and many of my colleagues who stood up for freedom in this Legislature, and I'm glad they were, because I've had my doubts whether I'm running again or not, but my doubts were put to rest when I spoke at midnight last night. People have to defend freedom in this society, and if they won't do it and if the Liberals won't do it, then, by God, I hope the majority of members in my party will do it. People deserve to have their rights protected.

Mr Speaker, in the beautiful prayer that opens this Legislative Assembly, which you read on our behalf every day at the opening of the session, the beautiful words you recite on behalf of the people of Ontario to guide us in our deliberations in this assembly, there's the wonderful line that says, "Inspire us to decisions which establish and maintain a land of prosperity and righteousness where freedom prevails and where justice rules."

This is a bill that allows members to live up to those beautiful words, indeed a prayer to God, and to face their God and face their fellow citizens and say, "Today we embraced good citizenship. Today my community is better. Today the rights of volunteer firefighters are protected. Today I did what my constituents want, what my conscience dictates and what the people of Ontario deserve."

With that, I now put the question.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Wilson has moved that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2236 to 2306.

The Speaker: Mr Wilson has moved that the question be now put. All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 47; the nays are 30.

The Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr Arnott has moved third reading of Bill 30. Just so we're clear too, on both sides: for the side that doesn't favour, because this could be a close one, it's not going to be a shouting match. We'll try to get a consensus. That side that doesn't agree, five members stand. We can have bells. Just so you're clear on both sides.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will please say "aye."

All opposed will please say "nay."

We need a sound meter. We're clear on what can happen, so we do have a recorded vote with the standings. In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; this will be a 30-minute bell.

"Pursuant to standing order 28(h), I request that the vote on Bill 30, An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997 in order to protect the employment of volunteer firefighters, be deferred until December 10, 2002."

Interjections.

The Speaker: Sorry. I apologize; that it be deferred until December 11 after orders of the day.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I want to apologize. That was my fault, I say to the opposition.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS
AMENDMENT ACT, 2001

LOI DE 2001 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DE PROTECTION
DES ANIMAUX DE L'ONTARIO

Mrs Munro moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 129, An Act to amend the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act / Projet de loi 129, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la Société de protection des animaux de l'Ontario.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On a point of order, Speaker: I will be brief, but I rise on a point of order. I submit to you that this bill is not in order, with the same—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. I'm going to be very clear now, folks. Tempers are up. People are yelling and screaming and I'm not going to put up with it. I'm not going to be mad. We are going to simply remove people, and I'm going to remove them quickly. Tempers are up when we sit at night, and I'm not going to put up with it. I want it to be clear to everyone. I am not going to take abuse of people yelling at me or anybody else in this House, and you will be removed. The Sergeant at Arms is prepared to remove you, if need be. I will have co-operation here. It's because of the way you behave that I have to act like this, but I will control this place.

Mr Kormos: Speaker, I understand your ruling on the previous points of order, but I submit to you, consistent with the arguments made with respect to the calling of M30, the calling of this bill is similarly out of order with references to standing orders 9 and 96.

The Speaker: It followed the procedures. It was in order. The last one was for the same reason that was given. I agree 100% with the ruling of the other Speaker.

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): I think many of us understand the importance of this bill that we are looking at this evening. Many of us have seen the kind of media attention that has been given on numerous occasions to the appearance of animals that have been neglected, animals that have been kept for breeding and sale.

This act is designed to address that particular problem. It is clear when the Ontario SPCA is called in to those situations where animals are kept in a way that demonstrates neglect. It is on the basis of that particular issue that prompted me to consider looking at methods by which to strengthen the Ontario SPCA act.

If you look at the act today, when those inspectors make a raid, the most that they can do is seize the animals. The individual owner has the ability to appeal to the Animal Care Review Board. Again, the only mechanism that the SPCA has is to be able to seize the animals, go to the Animal Care Review Board and that board, then, makes a decision. If the owners are prepared, they can pay costs and have the animals back again. The SPCA can adopt a criminal process but the maximum fine is $2,000, so this has meant that for years people have seen this as the cost of doing business.

This is a market-driven problem. People are tempted to buy, very often on a whim, on the appearance of a cute little puppy or kitten. Many people are driven by the fact that they want to rescue this little animal. Unfortunately what they do is simply line the pockets of the individual who is keeping the animal in a way that's inappropriate. The person who is conducting the business in such a way doesn't care what the motive of the buyer is. The fact the buyer has paid for this puppy or kitten is all they care about.

That's one of the problems this bill tries to address. The limitations by which the current legislation provides tools for the SPCA is one of the problems, and the fact there are hundreds of animals that are kept in these circumstances to provide the market and meet that demand. This is what prompted me to consider looking at this issue and how it might be addressed.

I also looked at other jurisdictions. It's quite clear to me that this is not a problem that exists only in Ontario; it's a problem that exists across the country and in North America. When you look at other jurisdictions, they often seem tangled in legislation that is very prescriptive, very costly, and quite frankly, really only serves to identify responsible individuals, because just as with gun legislation criminals don't register their guns, so equally, those people who are raising their animals in inappropriate conditions aren't the people who are going to sign up for a registry to become part of any kind of program.

I think it's important to note that this is not a problem that is unique to Ontario, but it is a problem that obviously we, in this Legislature, have the power to make a difference on for the people of Ontario, and in this case I would argue, as importantly, for our puppies and kittens.

When I looked at the various jurisdictions and the kind of legislation other people were dealing with, I recognized some of the limitations: whether it's the cost, whether it's the problem of the wrong people being covered by the legislation, whether it's unduly punitive. Some jurisdictions look at numbers, and numbers are not the issue.

I began to consult with various groups of people, including a number of veterinarians who have participated in raids with the OSPCA, a number of veterinarians who have treated animals that have come from these circumstances, and a number of veterinarians who have had to tell their owners that while they have a really cute, harmless, sympathetic little puppy or kitten, they will also have a huge vet bill because they are looking at an animal that has not been raised with any kind of care or consideration.

I also talked to the Canadian Kennel Club, and from them had the perspective of the fanciers, the breeders, across the country who try to maintain standards that allow them to present themselves to the buying public as responsible breeders.

I also talked to the Ontario SPCA and asked them, if they were to look at the key issue around their raids, what was it that prompted them to go to a business? What was it they found? What was it that was most unsavoury about the kind of circumstances they came across? Their answer to me was very clear. It centred around the issue of neglect. That is the key point they observe when they go to any of these places. They saw animals that were inadequately housed. They saw animals that were put in situations that might be dangerous to them. That might simply be having too many in one pen. It might be having inappropriate age ranges of animals together. There were situations where animals were actually ill, where they had not been adequately treated in terms of veterinary care.

From that, I understood that the most important thing the SPCA dealt with was the question of neglect and therefore the question of care. What followed from that was that I created a definition, because so many jurisdictions struggle with, what is a puppy mill? In the public mind, there is the notion of numbers, the notion of crowding, the notion of adults being bred in an irresponsible way. There's the notion of puppies not being adequately cared for, not being socialized; for instance, having genetic testing and so forth. It became clear to me that was the critical piece we had to deal with.

Rather than get caught up with what had happened in so many other jurisdictions where they looked at numbers, where they looked at specific breeds, and looked at the number of breeds in some jurisdictions, it became clear to me that what we want as legislators, that what we want to be able to support the work of the SPCA, is to give them a clear direction that it is standards of care that is the key issue. None of the other issues are germane to the issue of neglect.

I think it's important to understand that what we are doing here is establishing landmark legislation that will provide the SPCA with a framework that allows them to look at care as the key issue, and gives them more tools by making this a provincial offence. This is something they have certainly asked for, because as I pointed out, currently all they can do is seize the animals, seize the dogs or cats, have a hearing with the Animal Care Review Board, and, looking to the federal Criminal Code, the possibility of a $2,000 fine.

Once the bill had been debated, I had the opportunity to visit with a group of veterinarians. It was really interesting to hear their stories. They supported this. They sometimes see the inappropriate choices people have made. These little creatures, because usually they are available at a very young age, come to them suffering from the long-term neglect they will have had in their very short lives. One of the vets told me he was involved in a raid in the 1960s. This problem has been there since then.

This bill, if passed, would give the SPCA the tools that would allow them to take that issue of neglect and be able to charge a provincial offence. That is the essence of this bill.

I think it's really important to understand why the key should be the importance of the standards of care. There are people who make it a business decision to have large numbers of dogs or cats. There are certainly businesses in Ontario that do have many dogs or cats, but these animals are kept in adequate housing, they're fed and cared for in an appropriate fashion and their inoculations are up-to-date. These are examples of the standards of care we're talking about. If those people wish to make that kind of business decision, they will not be impacted by this proposed legislation.

We will not walk down the path that others have, which has created registries and onerous limitations in terms of the number of animals and things like that, because at the end of the day that has nothing to do with whether or not the dog or cat is being well looked after. It is the responsibility of the SPCA to look after the welfare of dogs and cats.

To be able to give them this piece of legislation, which gives very clear standards about food and water, shelter, adequate medical attention, the appropriate size and space they are allowed in an enclosure, and the safety of that enclosure—those are things that are very clear for the SPCA inspectors when they go to identify if this is a place where those standards are met. It means, then, that by definition we're talking about a standard that all will adhere to, whether they have two or three dogs that are kept for breeding and sale or whether they have 60. I think that's the really critical piece that allows this legislation to potentially be landmark legislation. Those people who make the business decision to provide the market with a number of dogs, whether it's 100 puppies a year or six puppies a year, every single one of them is going to be under the same umbrella, the same legislative directive. I think that is the most important thing this bill does.

We need to look at the fact that in this legislation we have avoided the pitfalls so many other jurisdictions have fallen into by looking at a specific number of animals, of dogs or cats, that triggers some kind of special consideration. As we're looking at the time of year when people are often tempted to look at the purchase of a puppy or a kitten, we should also be looking at the manner in which that puppy or kitten has been raised, because it is that secure, confident puppy or kitten that is going to be the kind of pet people want as the family pet.

It is certainly clear from the kinds of evidence the SPCA has gathered over the years that there are those who have obviously been irresponsible in raising those puppies and kittens. I suppose one thing one could say about the bill is that for so many years there has been such an opportunity for people to provide animals to the marketplace that frankly have caused a lot of grief to their new owners because of the way they have been raised.

This bill, then, is all about making sure that does not continue to happen. It's all about creating a public awareness that people should expect that the puppy or kitten they purchase is going to have had the kind of careful raising that will serve them as that future pet in their own home.

I want to close by suggesting to you that the bill is based on the practical realities of what happens in our province on a daily basis and the need to provide the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals the kinds of tools that will allow them to do more than they have previously been able to do, which is simply to seize animals which the owner could then come back and claim. So we have clear guidelines for the SPCA. They have the power to lay a charge as a provincial offence. We are also looking at ensuring that the buying public has some measure of protection, that they can assume that the puppy or kitten they are about to purchase has had the adequate care, food and shelter that will ensure that it is in fact the pet they want to purchase.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): Thank you, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this bill that has been brought forward to us at 11:30 at night. I know why they want to bring forward this bill in the middle of the night: because they're trying to pull a fast one. I know the member for York North fails to inform the public out there that she has a financial interest in this bill because she's a breeder. Her family has been involved in breeding dogs for years. So I don't know why she wouldn't mention to you that she has a bias, at least, if not a conflict, if not a financial interest. So she comes to this piece of legislation from a different perspective. She's in the business of breeding animals.

I am not in the business of breeding animals. I do own a dog. I have been involved with a lot of caring people across this province who are just horrified at what has been happening to innocent animals right under the nose of this government, which repeatedly has done nothing to stop the systemic abuse of animals, whether it be cats, dogs, horses. This bill is really a very devious attempt to make people think something is being done, when the member for York North knows specifically that the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals told you that your bill would do more harm than good.

Let me quote from their press release of March 13. This is the group she says she's trying to help. Vicky Earle, the CEO of the society, said, "They have ignored these amendments that have been sitting on their desk since June, 2001, and instead have rallied behind Julia Munro's private member's bill which is so problematic that the Ontario SPCA cannot support it."

The Ontario SPCA wants real tools to do its job. This bill gives them nothing. It gives them more problems than they had before, because people will think the problem is going to be attended to. Well, it's not.

The member for York North was in committee when this bill was there, and I proposed all the amendments of the SPCA that they thought would make the bill somewhat more meaningful. She rejected each one of these amendments. She and her committee would not make the SPCA amendments part of her bill. She turned every one down.

Here's what she turned down. First of all, the SPCA asked that all animals in a state of distress be treated, not just kittens and puppies, because we have cases of people breeding birds that kill each other; we have horses that are in a state of distress. The SPCA says "animals" should be included, not just her narrow definition. She refused to listen on that.

She also refused to support making it possible for a judge to ban puppy mill owners from owning animals for the rest of their lives. She also refuses to allow SPCA officers to enter a property without being obstructed. That's the problem. She says there's an interest in the standard of care. Well, the SPCA officers can be obstructed by property owners. These puppy mill breeders can stop these officers from entering their property so they can't even find out what's going on.

This very weak, phony bill also refuses to recognize the fact that there are pet stores across this province that make millions of dollars a year selling animals in their little windows in the plazas across this province. This bill will not stop one pet store from selling truckloads of dogs and cats that come in across the border and that are probably coming in now for the Christmas season, where unsuspecting children and families are going to buy these poor animals that come from puppy mills in the States. This bill refuses to deal with that. That's the kind of bill we need.

She doesn't want to be tough on the breeders in these puppy mills. She doesn't care about them. She cares about the business interests who are behind the puppy mill industry, all these pet stores that make millions on unsuspecting children and families and abuse animals while they're making their millions. This bill doesn't include that kind of protection. That's why the SPCA does not support it.

She also refused to make it an offence to train animals to fight other animals. That should have been in this bill. It's not here. All over this province there are people who train certain breeds of dogs like pit bulls just for the sake of fighting and killing each other. She did not include that in this bill because this bill, again, is just an attempt by her and her party to respond to the outrage across this province where over 230,000 people have signed a petition asking for the OSPCA's tough amendments to be included. Some 230,000 Ontarians said they wanted tough amendments to protect animals, and she refuses to put those amendments in her bill. She doesn't support the 230,000 people who said they want tough regulations and they want these puppy mills put out of business.

Instead, this bill will continue to foster the puppy mill industry because it has essentially given no tools to the people who are underfunded and trying to cope with this plague across this province. They know that in Ontario anybody can be a so-called breeder. To own a dog in most municipalities, you need a licence. Well, if you're a breeder in Ontario, you don't need a licence. Anybody can claim to be a breeder: in a backyard, behind a barn, anywhere. You don't even need a simple licence to be a breeder. That's why we've got 400-plus of these illegal bandits, pirates, these scum across the province that are breeding these animals in conditions that are horrific. We've seen them on CTV, on CBC. They're in every community across this province, where animals are kept in their own feces and are basically not fed, not even provided with water. We've got 400 of these scum operators, and not one of them will be put out of business by this weak attempt to pretend they're doing something.

That's why advocates who have been fighting for a little bit of protection against this kind of abuse do not support this private member's bill, and that is why she refused to support my private member's bill and her government colleagues voted it down, because my bill asked for an outrageous thing: it asked for breeders to be licensed. They rejected that. If you own a restaurant, you need a licence. Most people in business require some kind of licence, but in Ontario a breeder can breed thousands of animals, make millions of dollars, with no licence, no inspection. You get inspected by no one.

You know what they do? They say, "I have a Canadian Kennel Club membership." Well, they're forged all over the place, plus with the Canadian Kennel Club, you pay your money and you get your membership.

A consumer who gets an animal that has possibly been a product of a puppy mill has nowhere to go to complain. Every day, there are ads in the newspapers; they're sold. Somebody just e-mailed me something tonight when they found out about this horrific attempt by this member to pretend she's doing something. It said there are people at the Pickering flea market selling these poor animals in horrific conditions at the local flea market every Saturday. This is the type of thing that's going on all over the province.

The SPCA just had to lay off 15 people. They can't keep up with it. They don't have the staff. For instance, they've been after the infamous Miesner family north of Toronto since 1968. They still haven't gone to court on their latest thing. They hire expensive lawyers; the SPCA can't afford to spend days and months in court. The Miesners have been in court now for the last three years. The case hasn't even come before the judge yet because of the money they have.

This bill will not put the Miesners out of business. In fact, I call this the Miesners protection act. That's what it does. It ensures that these bandits, these people who don't pay taxes—they abuse animals, they abuse consumers—are going to relish this bill; they're shaking in their boots when they see this bill brought forward by someone who's got an obvious bias because she's in the business of breeding. She doesn't like to tell people she does that for a living, and she should, because this is not about business. As a lot of people say, a civilized society is ultimately judged by how it treats the most vulnerable and defenceless in its ranks.

It doesn't matter whether or not you're an animal lover or an animal owner, a pet owner; it's about decency and humanity. We don't have to be extremely involved in animal protection, but we have to understand that there's a direct correlation between people who abuse animals and people who abuse human beings. That's why it's important to do something about this. That's been verified in study after study.

The thing that's astonishing—I've got a cabinet document here from last June, marked "Confidential Document: Amendments to the Ontario SPCA Act." It's for the Minister of Public Safety and Security, the committee for justice and intergovernmental policy. It says "Confidential document, Draft 7." It's a 38-page document that basically says that animal abuse in this province is a serious issue, that the government should do something serious about it. They tell us why it has to be treated seriously.

In 2001, there was considerable coverage of the rescue of 300 dogs from a number of puppy mills in Ontario. In April 2002, OPP officers busted a large-scale cock-fighting operation southwest of Collingwood. In Toronto, "...involving horrific animal cruelty resulting in convictions against two men." That was the famous case of the Kensington cat. I sat in the courtroom down here at city hall with people who were so upset that this type of cruelty could take place in this city.

It takes place because there are no laws to protect animals who are in distress. This bill will not stop these maniacs who are torturing animals. We saw the case two weeks ago of a person who horrifically set a cat on fire and threw it out the window of a car. We saw cases every couple of months of a poor animal dragged behind a car or a truck. This bill will not protect animals in distress. Those animals will continue to be abused by these lunatics because there's no prevention out there.

This is such a soft piece of fluff that it will encourage people who are in the business of puppy mill breeding, will encourage people who think it's a joke to abuse animals to continue to do so, because it leaves the illusion that something is being done and that it's not a serious matter. That's why people across this province are saying that protecting these animals is not going to cost any more money. What costs us money is spending all this time in court trying to put these puppy mill breeders out of business. That's what costs the government money. The police are called constantly.

I've been all over this province talking to the police, to the humane societies. I've been in Kingston, Belleville, London, Orangeville. These are people who care. They can't do their job because they're underfunded and they're spending all their time in court. If you put in good animal protection, you won't need to spend all this time in court, in federal court, hire lawyers, spend 25 years trying to close down the Miesners. It's really scandalous that those operators like the Miesners are operating all across this province and nothing is going to be done. This bill is going to give people the impression that everything is OK, that they passed a bill down at Queen's Park. That is what is so abhorrent. I don't know how to say this. Basically, I don't see the motives here.

We know from cabinet submissions that something could be done. Her own cabinet submission says, the experts in her government say emphatically that something serious should be done. She even contradicts the cabinet submission. The recommendation to cabinet was that the cabinet committee on justice and intergovernmental policy recommended that cabinet approve legislative amendments to the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act. The amendments would create provincial offences—failure to comply with duties of ownership; owner or person having custody, care or control of an animal causing or permitting animal to continue to be in distress—they talk about animals in distress. That should be included in here; it's not.

They also say that in the legislation—this is her own experts in the ministries, in justice—obstructing an inspector or agent in the discharge of duties or the exercise of powers under the OSPCA Act, the regulations. That should be included in there. Failure to comply would result in a fine. Also they said to include an offence for people who engage in the practice of training an animal to fight another animal.

These are all things in this very well researched cabinet submission that was given to the Minister of Public Security. It was turned down by this government. It was turned down by, I guess, people like Julia Munro, the member for York North. Instead she's trying to pawn off a piece of fluff that I consider dangerous, because as I said, it's going to let people let their guard down. That's the worst thing about it. She's going to go around telling people she has done something. There are going to be ads from the government saying they've done something. I really wouldn't want that on my conscience.

That is what this thing is going to do. It's going to give people a false sense of security that the government is doing something. In this cabinet submission the Ontario government even recommended all the things the SPCA wanted, and not one of them of any significance is in this piece of legislation. So we're going to have this ongoing systemic abuse, this profiteering, this inability of professionals who are out there trying to do their job to protect animals—they're not going to be able to do it.

It's especially an affront to all the caring people across this province who really want to see something done. This is not, as I said, just a small group of people. In the history of this Legislature, I don't know if there have been 230,000 people to sign a petition that said they wanted some tough rules in this area. I don't think there has ever been. These are people who are police officers, businesswomen, businessmen in Kenora. The petitions were signed. I went around getting them signed. Everybody signed them. They said, "Yes, please do something. That's what government should be for." That's 230,000 people who said "strong legislation."

Instead, what we have here is a denial of that request for all those people who said government should do something that is tough against these criminals—and they're criminals, because they're basically systematically abusing animals. I think that's a criminal act. And they're doing it for profit. We're not talking 100 dogs or cats; we're talking hundreds of thousands of defenceless animals. As I said, if we've got these people in our society, you can imagine what they're doing. If they're going to be cruel to an animal, you can rest assured they're going to be cruel to human beings. So if we as a society can't do the right thing here and take this expedient route—and we've even offered amendments, we've offered to strengthen it; and the government is refusing to do it.

Here's just a small comment from a senior citizen who contacted me today. She's a grandmother in her nineties who lives in North York. Her name is Shirley Baine. She said, "In the Torah, in ancient Jewish law, they have a great deal of respect for their animals, and they even have a saying that you should feed your animal before you feed yourself." That goes back to the time of Abraham.

Then I look at what we do in this province with all our resources, our ability to enact a piece of legislation that won't cost any money, gets respect back in many communities, relieves the pressure on police forces, OSPCA officers. Instead, what we come up with is this attempt to basically make people believe that something is going to be done when the member from York North knows that this is just a facade. Sadly, the systemic abuse will continue, the puppy mill operators will continue. The trucks of puppies will come across the border for Christmas, be sold in these pet stores, and they'll all be basically for dollars. It's a sad, sad day.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): There are just a few minutes left tonight, and I'm sure everybody is relieved about that, including the thousands of people across the province who have been watching tonight to see what would happen with private members' bills, the thousands of people from the adoption community, who were hoping very much that that bill might be called. I'm sad to say to them, as we discuss the puppy mill bill before us tonight, that that's not going to happen tonight.

In terms of the bill before us—cruelty to puppies, to animals—of course we all agree that something has to be done, and I have spoken to Ms Munro's bill before and expressed my view that I didn't think it was strong enough and, as Mr Colle just said, that it has a number of problems and will not actually protect the animals that it supposedly will protect, if passed. We all support doing something about cruelty to animals, which we know exists out there.

I think we also all support in this Legislature doing something about cruelty to human beings. I want to speak about cruelty to puppies and animals, and I want to speak about cruelty to human beings, the thousands of human beings who have been adopted and who are trying to get medical information, who are trying to connect and trying to find out who they are. There's untold grief and pain out there. I was one of those myself, and I'm in touch with those people and I see their suffering on a daily basis.

So here we are. It's peculiar to me because I find that here we are in a situation where last night and tonight we're discussing two government private members' bills. I don't know what the end result is going to be. There are going to be so-called free votes on those bills, and yet the government House leader refuses to call my bill, because he doesn't support it. But I know from canvassing members in this Legislature that the majority of people here do. In fact, a recent study showed that up to 75% of Canadians support opening up adoption records.

When we talk about cruelty to animals and puppies—and I do want to say again that we need to pass a strong bill, a real bill. Mr Colle had a bill that would in fact have done that. This bill, if passed, is just a facade and in fact adds some dangerous elements that may in fact cause more harm to the animals she's saying she wants to protect.

I also want to again come back to cruelty to people and talk about Kariann Ford, an adoptee, who said, "The adoption agencies are neglecting to pass on [medical] information given by birth mothers who are trying to help their adopted children. Life-saving information is being withheld by the very organizations that have been put in place to help and assist."

Miss Kariann Ford was diagnosed a few years ago with life-threatening liver disease, which she had passed on to her children. By the time she found out, it was too late for her. The children are now teenagers and have this life-threatening disease.

Another person who came before our committee said that her reasons for searching for her birth family had nothing to do with being unhappy in the adoptive family. "They were initially, crucially, for medical information, because at age 34 I had undergone two surgeries, neither of which corrected the problem but left me progressively worse. At age 39, with medical information from my birth father's family I was finally correctly diagnosed." She goes on to say, "One of the difficult issues for me to resolve was that the surgeries and the length of time had left me unable to conceive. I believe that if I had had my birth father's family information and been able to address the problem correctly at age 34, that my chances for conception would have been at least vastly improved."

While we stand here tonight and talk about rights and freedoms, human rights, the freedom to choose and all of these things, we recently had a doctor from North York General Hospital who came down to the Legislature to call on all legislators to pass the bill because, he says, with every day that passes adoptees lacking their family medical history are dying or are unknowingly passing genetic conditions on to their own children.

These are just a snapshot of the kinds of things that are happening daily to real human beings out there. So while I stand and talk about the need to bring in legislation to protect puppies and animals—and it's something I strongly believe in—I have to say to all of the legislators here tonight that you know that a majority of people want to see my bill, too, come for a vote; that my bill has everything to do with compassion and human rights. My bill deals with a person's right to choose.

Here we have tonight a situation where what they're talking about is a deal. Explain that to the adoptees out there. Explain that to them.

Mr Arnott got his bill tonight. It's going to be voted on.

Interjection.

Ms Churley: And you want to talk about deals, who broke a deal, who didn't break a deal. This has nothing to do with that. Explain that to the adoptees out there.

You're standing there saying, "You broke a deal." First of all, there was no deal broken. But that's beside the point now. It's off the table. Bill 30 is off the table. Mr Arnott got his way. The bill is going to be voted on.

The Speaker: I hate to interrupt the member, but it is 12 o'clock.

This House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 11 December 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mercredi 11 décembre 2002

*The House met at 1330.
Prayers.*

APOLOGY

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Late last evening, in a very in-temperate moment, I lashed out at you, and I wanted to stand in this House and publicly apologize to you, first as a friend and colleague but more importantly as the Speaker of this House and the person charged with keeping order. I was out of line both to you as a friend and to you as the Speaker, and I hope you will accept my humble apologies.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I appreciate that very much, and I definitely do. You're an honourable member, and I'm pleased to say we're still friends, if I can still say that. Thank you very much. That was a very, very honourable thing to do.

MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to highlight the actions of the member from Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant opposite. I have been appalled by the continuous attacks the member has made on the Grand Erie District School Board for the difficult decisions they were forced to make due to the government's continuous mismanagement of the education system.

The Grand Erie District School Board also represents the public schools in my riding of Brant, and I have been outraged as the member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant has consistently undermined and blamed the school board but has taken no responsibility for his own government's mismanaged and fatally flawed funding formula that forced the school board to announce many schools on a closure study list.

The member should look carefully at the Rozanski document. Dr Rozanski clearly outlined that the provincial government's mismanaged, fatally flawed funding formula has forced many school boards in Ontario to close schools that should never have been closed and should remain open. Dr Rozanski advised the government to increase funding for small rural schools, just as the Ontario Liberals and others have been advising this government since it created the crisis seven years ago.

The member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant was too quick to point fingers at anyone but his own government. Now we see that Dr Rozanski has identified single-school communities, like those in the riding of the member opposite and in my riding, as having inadequate funds due to the fatally flawed funding formula implemented by the Harris-Eves government. I challenge the member to accept responsibility on behalf of his own party and apologize for the vicious attacks on that school board.

Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals have had it right all along about this fatally flawed funding formula. The Ontario Liberals, with our leader, Dalton McGuinty, have a real plan to fix and improve our publicly funded education system.

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It's a tradition in this place that members' statements is not used to attack another member of the House. He can express his own opinions about the education funding formula or Dr Rozanski's report, but an attack on another member in this House during members' statements is against the tradition of this place. I wonder if you might point that out.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member for the point of order. The member does know that there is a tradition—we certainly have slipped a little bit in our tradition? I would ask all members to kindly keep that in mind when we do it. Quite frankly, members' statements didn't used to be very political; they were of issues affecting the constituency. That also has changed. But I appreciate the member's point of order.

RECOGNITION OF ACHIEVEMENT

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): In keeping with the spirit of the season, I rise to commend two people.

First, Dale Schott, a native of my riding who grew up in Glen Meyer, works as an animator here in Toronto, and his work could very well be viewed by some of our younger family members. Currently, Dale is a story editor for the animated Moville Mysteries on YTV. Growing in Norfolk, Dale enjoyed doodling and drawing pictures on his friends' muscle cars. It wasn't until he completed the animation program at Sheridan College that he realized he could turn this hobby into a successful career. Recently, Dale visited his hometown and talked to local students about his work. I commend Dale for his success, but most importantly I thank him for remembering his rural roots and sharing stories with others.

Secondly, I would like to commend Tom Millar, another resident of my riding, who recently received a Conservation Pioneer Award from the Conservation Authorities of Ontario. Tom is one of the founding members of the Long Point Foundation for Conservation. Since 1982 he has worked with the foundation, helping to invest more than $980,000 in direct conservation works. Tom is involved in Ducks Unlimited and many other organizations.

It's nice to see that the work of both Tom Millar and Dale Schott does not go unnoticed.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): It is with sadness and anger that parents, teachers and students in midtown Toronto St Paul's riding received the Ontario government's funding formula critique, the Rozanski report. For years now, Ontarians have been telling the Harris-Eves government that there weren't enough teachers, vice-principals, education assistants, guidance counsellors, special education assistants and resources, transportation, ESL teachers and programs, textbooks, supplies, busing for special-needs students, and the cancellation of outdoor education and music programs, to name only a few of the education deficits wrought under this government. Just in the last few weeks I've joined parents and teachers across the riding of St Paul's at schools—like Hillcrest, Humewood and John Fisher just in December—to protest these cuts. We were all shaking our heads at the prospect of the grand old North Toronto Collegiate being razed, re-housed and paved over in a fire sale to make up for the Tory cuts to education.

Ontarians told this government that there wasn't enough, that there were things missing from education because of reckless cuts and reckless underfunding. The government said, "No, no, you're wrong. Everything is fine. The funding formula is working." It turned out that when your education watchdog took a look at the numbers, you were dead wrong. The government was dead wrong. Now you say you'll fix it, and nobody trusts that you'll fix it. Nobody trusts this government with public education. Nobody.

WILLIAM KEACHIE

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I rise today—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member for Beaches-East York has the floor.

Mr Prue: I rise today to pay homage to a great man who recently passed away and to send condolences to his family and friends. That great man was Mr William Keachie. His funeral took place last week here in Toronto. He dedicated a lifetime of service to our community. Right to the end, even though he was 80-plus years old, he delivered meals every day for Meals on Wheels. He was active in the East York lawn bowling club and was one of the founders and one of the people who continually showed up for the East York seniors' games and the Ontario Games.

But perhaps people know him best from his work in the Boy Scouts. He was a lifelong Boy Scout for over 50 years. He did remarkable work for the people, particularly for the young men in the Regent Park-Cabbagetown area, where he was a scoutmaster at what was then St Enoch's church. For generations of young men he helped to make the difference in a lifetime and in the lifestyle of that particular community.

He certainly had a great influence on my life and I think countless others. We remember him with pride. We remember him with gratitude. To his family and friends we give our condolences, but we ask them to remember that his contribution will go on and on. Thank you very much, William Keachie.

SCHOOL TEACHERS

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): Yesterday both the Premier and the Minister of Education welcomed the Rozanski report's recommendations to improve education in Ontario.

I want to tell this House that I have proof that the education system is pretty good right now. That proof is in the work and dedication of a very special teacher, Mrs Peers. Mrs Peers happens to be the grade 1 teacher of my grandson Cameron at Donwood Park Junior Public School in my riding of Scarborough Centre. I prefer to refer to Mrs Peers as a professional educator. She is a mother and a Girl Guides leader and is actively involved in all aspects of community life. Above all, she puts kids first.

Recently, Cameron came home with his first report card. I don't particularly want to be a bragging grandma, but he did very well. More importantly, he enjoys school, largely because of his excellent teacher. He sings in the choir, he's learning how to play the piano and he will be enthusiastically participating in his first Christmas concert next week.

I want to salute the efforts of all hard-working teachers in Ontario who, like Mrs Peers, give their all so that our children and our grandchildren will have bright futures.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): The recently released report of University of Guelph president Mordechai Rozanski has exposed the damaging effect of massive cuts to education in Ontario since 1995 and has pointed the way to a solution to this mess.

According to the Eves government's own formula, there are 15,000 fewer teachers in the classrooms now than there should have been using the 1991 formula.

The Rozanski report is just the latest of several warnings given to the government about the damage that would be felt by underfunding the education system, including a lack of adequate books and other educational tools, an inadequate number of teachers, the closing of schools based upon far too restrictive guidelines, the disappearance of secretarial and custodial staff, the deterioration of existing buildings and the deletion of vice-principal positions. Transportation has been severely stressed for the past seven years as well.

The dire need for vast improvements for the support of special education has been brought to the government's attention by the opposition time after time, only to be greeted with accusations of scaremongering by successive education ministers and Premiers.

Now, yet another independent voice has called for an infusion of $250 million for special education to meet this obvious need. What Dr Rozanski has recommended is not new to the government. It is clear that many of his recommendations should have been implemented long ago.

This is an investment in education that is required. Dr Rozanski is an independent voice. Take action now.

JOHN HAYES

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): As we draw nearer to the festive holiday season, it is my pleasure to salute and give special thanks to a long-time organizer of the Brampton Santa Claus parade and friend, John Hayes.

John is semi-retiring this year as co-chair of the magical nighttime parade after a successful run of nine years. He was honoured at a special awards ceremony in Brampton recently for his leadership, dedication and hard work. He may be giving up the co-chair title, but he assures everyone that he'll be around to assist in more parades to come.

Organized by the Brampton Board of Trade, with the sponsorship of the Brampton Rotary Club, the parade has grown from a few thousand parade watchers in 1985 to the nighttime illuminated grand spectacle it is today. Over 100,000 people lined the streets this year to see 95 festively decorated floats and bands. It is the largest Santa Claus parade in Ontario outside of Toronto. Children personally deliver their wish lists to Santa's elves.

I applaud all the dedicated volunteers, such as the Brampton District Jaycees, who have helped marshal the parade since its inception 18 years ago. I'm proud to have been the founding chair of the Brampton Santa Claus parade, and I'm very proud to see the tradition that John Hayes carried on as the chair of that committee in making it the most successful parade in Ontario.

Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Joseph Cordiano (York South-Weston): The Rozanski report confirms all of our worst fears and those of parents and students out there: the fact that they have been getting shortchanged by this government for many, many years when it comes to education—severe underfunding—and it has led to the closure of many schools.

In my riding, the York Adult Day School is scheduled to be closed in January. Those 600 students, many of whom were here the other day, will have nowhere to go, because there are waiting lists at the remaining schools. There are waiting lists, and they are operating at full capacity, so they have nowhere to go. Six hundred students simply cannot continue their education, a second chance for most of these students. Single moms, parents who are struggling to make ends meet, who have kids in school themselves, need to continue with their education. What does this government say? They are turning their backs on those people who should be getting help to help themselves and help their families. This government turns its back and doesn't want to have anything to do with it.

Frankly, the Rozanski report confirms the fact that this government has shut the door when it comes to education, and adult education in particular. They have closed the door on all those people: new Canadians, single mothers. They really don't care about their concerns. They really have shut the door on them. Shame on you, government.

SIR SANDFORD FLEMING COLLEGE

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I'd like to take this opportunity to relate a good-news story from my riding of Peterborough. Our community college, Sir Sandford Fleming College, and its board of governors took a substantial risk this year in running an operating deficit for the first time in the history of the college. They took this risk in order to mount new programs and to expand additional sections in established programs in order to fulfill access obligations. Some of the new programs are computer security and investigations, pre-service firefighting and practical nursing.

Also, the college believed there would be a greater demand this past fall from students who are fast-tracking. This belief was confirmed, as first-year enrolment increased by 14.8% and winter intake registrations are presently running 40.8% ahead of registrations at this time last year.

I'd like to congratulate Sir Sandford Fleming's president, Brian Desbiens, its board of directors and its employees. The substantial risk in running an operating deficit paid dividends for the college, its students and our government. Everyone is a winner. Our government's recent announcement of a $500,000 increase in operating grants benefits Fleming college because it will assist them in closing their operating deficit for 2002-03, and the entire student body will benefit greatly from the added programs and increased access.

I feel this is a great example of the college and our government working together to provide excellent post-secondary education opportunities for the citizens of this great province.

VISITORS

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to introduce, in the west gallery today, some very special citizens from Brantford, Mr George and Mrs Evelyn Stapleton, and from Paris, Mr Doug and Mrs Eva Brockbank, who have joined us today in an event that raised money for our hospital system in Brantford and Paris. I want to thank them for participating. They got to see what's going on in our democracy and they are waiting with bated breath for question period.

I want to thank them for being here, and we welcome them.

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to welcome some very important visitors from eastern Ontario. They are from my own area: my brother-in-law Michel Charron and his wife, Madeleine, Colette Sarazin and Madeleine Hurtubise, who are here with us today. Welcome to Queen's Park.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Speaker: I'd like to welcome to the House the assembled chiefs of the Mushkegowuck council. We have with us today Chief Leo Friday from Kashachewan. We also have with us the chief and deputy chief from Moose Factory, Norm Hardisty and Charlie Cheechoo. We have with us as well chiefs from the assembled communities of Fort Albany and deputy chiefs from different communities.

This is a bit of an historic occasion: we'll be meeting later on this afternoon with various ministers of the crown, and we're looking forward to this opportunity for the chiefs to meet with the cabinet ministers. I'd like to welcome them to this assembly.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Welcome to our guests.

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I wish to welcome those of the Firefighters Association of Ontario who are here today as well. Please join me in welcoming them.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the 13th report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 106(e), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND PRIVATE BILLS

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on regulations and private bills and move its adoption.

Clerk Assistant (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended:

Bill Pr17, An Act respecting the Reena Foundation.

Your committee further recommends that the fees and the actual cost of printing at all stages be remitted on Bill Pr17, An Act respecting the Reena Foundation.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

AN ACT RESPECTING CANTERBURY UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

Mrs Papatello moved first reading of the following bill:

An Act respecting Canterbury University College.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): Canterbury College, the applicant, has applied for special legislation to alter its organizational and administrative structures, and to change its name to Canterbury University College.

SUPPLY ACT, 2002

LOI DE CRÉDITS DE 2002

Mrs Ecker moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 229, An Act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for the public service for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 2003 / Projet de loi 229, Loi autorisant le paiement de certaines sommes destinées à la fonction publique pour l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2003.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

ADULT PROTECTION ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002

SUR LA PROTECTION DES ADULTES

Mr Bartolucci moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 230, An Act to protect adults from abuse and neglect / Projet de loi 230, Loi visant à protéger les adultes contre la maltraitance et la négligence.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This Adult Protection Act provides for the appointment of the director of the adult protection office to provide protection for abused and neglected adults who are unable to protect themselves from abuse or neglect due to physical or mental disability or infirmity.

The bill provides for mandatory reporting of adult abuse or neglect to the director of the adult protection office and requires the director to make inquiries with respect to all such reports.

An abused adult is an adult who is either a victim of abuse on the premises where he or she resides, is incapable of protecting himself or herself from abuse by reason of physical or mental disability or infirmity, and refuses, delays or is unable to make provision for his or her protection from abuse.

Abuse means one or more of the following: physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse, medication abuse, financial abuse or abuse of the person's rights and freedoms.

I move this and hope that the House adopts it quickly.

EDIBLE OIL PRODUCTS REPEAL
DATE AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT
LA DATE D'ABROGATION
DE LA LOI SUR LES PRODUITS
OLÉAGINEUX COMESTIBLES

Mrs Johns moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 231, An Act to amend the repeal date of the Edible Oil Products Act / Projet de loi 231, Loi modifiant la date d'abrogation de la Loi sur les produits oléagineux comestibles.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The minister for a short statement?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): This amendment I am tabling today is a result of a great deal of consultation with many key individuals over the last few weeks, days and even hours. On the industry side, the Dairy Farmers of Ontario and the Ontario soy bean growers worked hard with producers and processors across the province. I want to thank them for their help and contribution in reaching this consensus position. Here in the House I want to acknowledge the agriculture critic, Steve Peters, and my wonderful friend the House leader for the NDP, from Welland, and I want to thank you very much for the work you've done to help me get a consensus in the House today.

At this time I believe I have, and would like to ask for unanimous consent to move both second and third readings of this bill.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

EDIBLE OIL PRODUCTS REPEAL
DATE AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT
LA DATE D'ABROGATION
DE LA LOI SUR LES PRODUITS
OLÉAGINEUX COMESTIBLES

Mrs Johns moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 231, An Act to amend the repeal date of the Edible Oil Products Act / Projet de loi 231, Loi modifiant la date d'abrogation de la Loi sur les produits oléagineux comestibles.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

EDIBLE OIL PRODUCTS REPEAL
DATE AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT
LA DATE D'ABROGATION
DE LA LOI SUR LES PRODUITS
OLÉAGINEUX COMESTIBLES

Mrs Johns moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 231, An Act to amend the repeal date of the Edible Oil Products Act / Projet de loi 231, Loi modifiant la date d'abrogation de la Loi sur les produits oléagineux comestibles.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

SAFETY OF CHILDREN IN SUPERVISED
PLAY SETTINGS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SÉCURITÉ
DES ENFANTS DANS LES AIRES
DE JEUX SURVEILLÉES

Mrs McLeod moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 232, An Act to enhance the safety of children in supervised play settings / Projet de loi 232, Loi visant à accroître la sécurité des enfants dans les aires de jeux surveillées.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): The purpose of this bill is to give cabinet the authority to establish minimum standards for the safety of children who are left in supervised play settings which are not now governed by any kind of regulation.

ASSESSMENT AMENDMENT ACT (IMPROVEMENTS FOR SENIORS AND THE DISABLED), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR
L'ÉVALUATION FONCIÈRE
(AMÉLIORATIONS À L'INTENTION
DES PERSONNES ÂGÉES
OU AYANT UNE INCAPACITÉ)

Mr Christopherson moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 233, An Act to amend the Assessment Act to more fairly permit exemptions from assessment to benefit senior citizens and disabled persons / Projet de loi 233, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'évaluation foncière pour rendre l'exemption d'impôt plus équitable à l'égard des personnes âgées ou ayant une incapacité.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I would like to thank Reg Michor for his significant help in drafting this bill. Reg has worked tirelessly for many years to improve the situation for the disabled who choose to live independently. There is widespread support for this bill. The need to enable more families to benefit from this kind of legislation is timely and, in my opinion, worthy of government consideration.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I haven't seen the bill and I don't know the contents of the bill, but I would just ask that you review the bill for its orderliness with respect to the cost components to the financial base of the province of Ontario. I'm not saying I'm against the bill or in favour; I just need to know whether it's in fact in order.

The Speaker: We do that on all bills and will on this one as well.

RURAL RED TAPE
REDUCTION ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 VISANT À RÉDUIRE
LES FORMALITÉS ADMINISTRATIVES
RELATIVES AUX AFFAIRES RURALES

Mr Coburn moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 234, An Act to reduce red tape with respect to rural and other matters / Projet de loi 234, Loi visant à réduire les formalités administratives relatives aux affaires rurales et à d'autres questions.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

FREEZE ON HOG FARMS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE GEL
DES EXPLOITATIONS PORCINES

Mr Lalonde moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 235, An Act to prohibit municipalities from issuing building permits in respect of hog farms / Projet de loi 235, Loi interdisant aux municipalités de délivrer des permis de construire en ce qui concerne les exploitations porcines.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell):

The bill prohibits municipalities from issuing building permits for the construction or expansion of hog farms until after December 31, 2003. Now that we know the health effect that hog manure could create and also since Quebec has a moratorium on all expansion and new construction of hog farms in 281 municipalities, this bill will give power to municipalities to turn down all applications or new construction until all regulations of the Nutrient Management Act are in place.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT (PRE-TREATMENT OF HAZARDOUS WASTE), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA PROTECTION
DE L'ENVIRONNEMENT
(PRÉTRAITEMENT DES DÉCHETS DANGEREUX)

Ms Di Cocco moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 236, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act to require the pre-treatment of hazardous waste before it is used as landfill / Projet de loi 236, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement pour exiger le prétraitement des déchets dangereux avant leur dépôt dans une décharge.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): This bill will change the fact that Ontario is the only jurisdiction on the continent of North America that does not require pre-treatment of hazardous waste before disposal. The bill amends the Environmental Protection Act by requiring the pre-treatment of hazardous waste before it is disposed of in a landfill.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that the standing committee on public accounts be authorized to meet for up to 12 days during the upcoming recess to complete report writing and to conduct its review of the 2002 annual report of the Provincial Auditor of Ontario. The committee shall also be authorized to release its report by depositing a copy of any report with the Clerk of the House.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce a bill that, if passed, will encourage economic growth, improve the environment for investment, and reduce red tape and remove barriers to jobs in rural Ontario.

The Rural Red Tape Reduction Act, 2002, amends provincial legislation to remove impediments to rural business development. These amendments respond to key issues and priorities identified by rural businesses, which the government has consulted with over the past two years.

The extent of these consultations demonstrates our strong commitment to rural Ontario. The latest of these was last June, when Premier Eves and Minister Johns held round tables with agriculture and food industries to establish key priorities to strengthen rural businesses. In the fall of 2001, the Red Tape Commission held consultations with 600 small business owners in 20 communities. In the summer of 2001, when I was the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, I hosted a series of small business round tables across Ontario as a follow-up to a report a year earlier of the task force on rural economic renewal, headed by the Honourable Doug Galt.

As a result of these consultations, we have developed a red tape reduction plan that recognizes the unique challenges facing rural communities. This bill is an important part of that plan.

Let me mention just a few of the highlights. The Rural Red Tape Reduction Act, 2002, includes measures to enhance self-governance of veterinarians, and if passed, it would give increased flexibility to farm implement dealers, distributors and manufacturers. This bill also provides amendments for the Co-operative Corporations Act to help improve the administration of co-operatives.

Ontario's rural communities are indeed a key part of the fabric of Ontario's economy and of our society. We recognize that our smaller and rural communities often face different challenges and opportunities than the urban areas. Yet they should have access to the same types of opportunities for economic growth as our larger urban centres.

The Rural Red Tape Reduction Act, 2002, is one component of a wider initiative to build sustainable businesses and stronger rural communities, giving them equality of opportunity. It's part of our government's comprehensive plan to strengthen rural communities and to create a better quality of life for everyone in our province.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): It was quite interesting to listen to the comments of the minister for rural affairs during the introduction to this bill. I guess my first opening comment would be: if these issues were so important to this government, why did they wait until the very last minute, as this Legislature is about to rise, and then introduce these changes? This is last-minute.

You look at this bill; we could have been dealing with these things much earlier. In the fall of 2001 the consultations took place for rural areas. The farm implements bill was introduced by Toby Barrett in the fall of 2001. Bill 87 and the amendments we just dealt with today with the repeal of the Edible Oil Products Act—again one year ago. Here we are, one year later.

This is a government that has had seven years to address issues facing rural Ontario, and for the most part they've dragged their feet. They've left rural Ontario behind. They've downloaded an undue amount of programs to rural municipalities. Rural municipalities are facing a real challenge right now, and here we are, at the very last minute, probably going to see closure on this bill to ram these things through the Legislature.

It is sad that this is a government that, when it comes to rural and agricultural issues, drags its feet. We can see that these issues were here over a year ago. They dragged their feet, they sat on issues, these consultations, so that here we are at the last minute dealing with the edible oils act, and these consultations should have taken place last year. But here we are, at the last minute.

The minister talks about the consultations in the past two weeks. I'd be very curious to see what the phone lines have been like over the last 24 hours, because these consultations should have been done a long time ago. I'm proud that the Liberal Party recognized early on that we needed to light a fire under this government, and we did that yesterday by introducing the amendment. They needed a fire lit under them. They hadn't moved.

The minister talks about rural economic development. One thing that's not addressed in the bill we have here is the whole question of taxation in rural Ontario. It is a huge issue. As the Ministry of Agriculture and the ministry of rural affairs, you've encouraged farmers to add value to what they do on their farms. Then the farmers go and add value to their farms, be it a fruit winery or a maple syrup operation, and then, because of the rise of their municipal taxes, they're questioning why they were encouraged by this government to do that. There's nothing in this legislation that I can see in a cursory review that in any way addresses some of the taxation issues that are facing the agricultural community in rural Ontario right now. Look at what's happening with assessments across this province right now. Who is taking the biggest brunt of assessment shifts in this province? It's agriculture. There's nothing in here to deal with that on behalf of the farmers.

Some of the changes in here dealing with food safety legislation: the question of biosecurity needs to be strictly enforced. We need to ensure too, though, as far food safety is concerned—we've seen the cuts that have happened in the animal health lab at the University of Guelph. The animal health lab is our first line of defence. We just heard recently from the Minister of Health that tests that had to be undertaken had to be sent out of the province. Had this government adequately funded the University of Guelph and the animal health lab, those tests could have been done right here in our own backyard and sent to another province.

Contained in this bill too—I don't have a problem with it—is the correction of Mr Murdoch's tartan bill. It's interesting that we had the wrong colour. Then what else was slid into this? Again, you're famous for your omnibus bills: something else with the 407, because you messed it up when you sold it. You gouged the taxpayers of this province when you sold the 407 and, again, you're going to benefit your friends Al Leach and SNC-Lavalin. You sold out the taxpayers. You told the taxpayers of this province, "Don't worry, we're going to hold the line on tolls. Nothing is going to happen with tolls." We've seen tolls skyrocket and go through the roof. So you've obviously messed up again with Highway 407.

But there's one thing I hope you have done. This is to allow you to have access to hydro corridors. I hope you put a provision in this bill that Hydro One vehicles aren't going to have to pay tolls on the 407, but I bet you didn't do that and we're going to have to pay tolls on the 407.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I'm pleased to respond to what the government calls the Rural Red Tape Reduction Act. I note that one of the major parts of this bill will be to amend the description of the first block of colour in the tartan of the province of Ontario. I wonder what that has to do with rural economic development. Has this government got a plan to turn every village and small community in rural Ontario into a tartan demonstration centre or something?

The government wants people in rural Ontario to believe that this bill is somehow addressing their issues. I don't see anything in here about electricity and the government's plan—scheme—to sell off 49% of the transmission system in the middle of the night, something which virtually everyone in rural Ontario is absolutely opposed to, because they know that once you sell 49% to a private company, the private company will want to raise the rates to make more profit, which means the hydro bill goes up. I don't see anything in here which is going to explain to people in rural Ontario why, even after the pre-election rate caps come into place, they're going to continue to pay more to Hydro for hydro distribution and more for hydro transmission and why, under this government's scheme, they're going to pay more of the GST and why they're going to pay more to IMO and why they're going to pay more for expensive imported power. None of these issues are addressed in this bill.

When I was travelling across rural Ontario in the public power bus, a lot of people in rural Ontario wanted to talk to me about the local school, because under this government's agenda the local school, in many cases, is being closed. Is there anything in this bill that's going to deal with the closure of small schools in rural Ontario, cutting the heart out of the community? Nothing—it's about tartans. This, according to the Conservative government, is the burning issue in rural Ontario today. I suppose maybe there are a few people who might be concerned about a tartan, but the people I talk to want to know about the community school. How do you sustain the community when the government wants to close the community school?

The other point they raised was, how do you operate the local community health centre or the hospital when you don't have enough nurses any more and when you can't get a doctor? Is there anything in this bill about that? No, it's about tartans.

So the burning issues in rural Ontario: what about those high electricity prices? Nothing. The second burning issue: what about our community school and the fact it's going to be closed? Nothing. The third burning issue: how do we get a family doctor and some nurses to work in the local health centre? Nothing. I gather, according to this government, the people of rural Ontario are all supposed to wear tartans and that'll fix the problem.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I rise on one final issue on this bill. It is indeed an omnibus bill, because most of what it contains does not involve the rural community but in fact all of Ontario. I speak especially about the 407. Here we have in this bill the authority to put transmission lines across the 407, but what it does not contain in this bill is all the problems related to the ordinary commuters who use the 407 every day, ordinary commuters who cannot get their transponders repaired, ordinary commuters who cannot get anyone to answer the telephone when they have a problem, ordinary commuters who are starting to pay far too much for the privilege of riding on that road, ordinary commuters who cannot have any action with that corporation at all—a corporation that is absolutely aloof, that is only good at one thing, and that is taking their money and not providing the services they should. It seems very good that we can put some electricity transmission lines across the road; what this government should be doing is putting some phone lines into the office and putting some people on those phones so that they're answered and so that the commuters can actually get some use out of that road.

VISITORS

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to let everyone in the House, all of my colleagues, know that I'm joined today by two people in the public gallery who are very important to me. They will be leaving before question period. This is my six-year-old daughter, Aynsley, and my four-year-old son, Spencer.

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to introduce the staff and students from a school in my riding. They've come here today from Monsignor John Pereyma to watch the proceedings in the House today, and I welcome them.

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I would ask my colleagues to join me in welcoming Mr Keith Butte here today, who is the father of our page Nicholas Butte, from the great riding of Ottawa-Orléans, in the east gallery.

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think everyone can tell that it's our Christmas party on this side of the House. I have my niece here, Danielle Hosick.

The Speaker: Order. I would ask if I could have co-operation so I can hear what the results are.

Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noises.

ORAL QUESTIONS

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Education. Madam Minister, yesterday Dr Rozanski pulled the rug out from under your credibility, the Premier's credibility and your government's credibility on public education. He confirmed and he validated everything that parents and students and teachers and entire communities have been saying for seven long and painful years, and that is that your cuts have compromised our kids' education.

In Kingston, Peterborough, Windsor, London, Kitchener-Waterloo, Niagara Falls, Ottawa—everywhere you turn—programs that help our kids succeed were underfunded by you and your government. For seven long years, Madam Minister, you or your predecessors have defended Ernie Eves's cuts to education, whether he made those in his capacity as Premier or as Minister of Finance. The question I have for you is, why should Ontario families, parents and students trust you, given your lengthy and abysmal record when it comes to public education in Ontario?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): Unfortunately, the Leader of the Opposition gets it all wrong. Yesterday, Dr Rozanski validated the funding formula that we had put in place. He said it is achieving the equity, the stability and the fairness for students in all parts of the province. He said that nobody wants to go back to the way it was. It was a clear, strong word of support for what we have undertaken.

We have been the only government, since 1995, with a plan, a plan to make sure that the students in the province of Ontario achieve success, a plan to do testing, a plan for safe schools, and you as Johnny-come-latelys just recently indicate that you think it's a good idea.

Mr McGuinty: I just can't understand how you can stand there and say that with a straight face. I don't understand it. For year after year after year, you or your predecessors have denied that your government's cuts have hurt our kids. You have blamed teachers, you have blamed the trustees, you have even blamed previous governments.

But Dr Rozanski has been the jury on this matter, and the jury is in. He's telling us that your cuts have compromised our kids' education. He says at the end of the day it was you who closed our schools, it was you who cut special education, it was you who refused to adequately fund textbooks and busing and school repairs. You did all of that and Ontario kids have paid a terrible price as a result. Now you say you want to fix things. Now you say you want to help students. Now you're experiencing some kind of death-bed repentance as you stare into the face of the next election.

I ask you again, Madam Minister, why should parents, why should students, why should those people in this province committed to public education trust you with the future of their schools?

Hon Mrs Witmer: This is unbelievable. I am more convinced than ever today, after the report that was handed to us by Dr Rozanski, that the proposals we have put in place to help our students achieve success are the right ones. I can tell you categorically, despite what you're saying, that Dr Rozanski has validated in every way he possibly could that what we're doing is right for the students in this province. Unlike you, I might add; what did you say?

Interjection: What did he say when?

Hon Mrs Witmer: In 1998 you said, "I don't want to talk about standards. I've got a proposal: provide an independent review of the funding formula." So we do it. What did you say yesterday? "Well, people want to know where I stand on public education." Question: "You're committed to everything in the report?" "No, I didn't say that."

Mr McGuinty: This is just too rich. This is surely a performance worthy of an Oscar nomination, if not a win. What is most disconcerting is that this minister still refuses to acknowledge the truth: that she and her predecessors and this Premier and this government stand in the way of our children getting a quality education in Ontario. Madam Minister, just to remind you, it was you and this government who took away the English-as-a-second-language program from our kids. You took away adult education. You took away our kids' guidance counsellors, their education assistants, their psychologists, their phys-ed teachers, their librarians. For seven long years you have been successfully robbing our children of the quality education that we believe they are entitled to inside our public schools.

Madam Minister, since you lack both, I want to assure you that we've got both the plan and the commitment to get the job done. I'm asking you, Madam Minister, when are you going to get a plan and when are you going to develop the commitment to stand up for public education?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I might ask of the leader opposite, what edition of his plan is he showing us today? And what edition will he show us tomorrow? Our government introduced the changes in education to make sure that all students in this province have the opportunity to achieve success. We introduced the student funding formula. We have now had a review by an independent reviewer. There is confirmation that we are on the right track. We need to update the benchmarks and we plan to do that. In fact, the Premier right now, as I speak, is making an announcement to demonstrate that we are taking immediate action.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question.

Mr McGuinty: I think we've heard more than enough from that minister. I'll go to the Minister of Finance. Minister, as you will recall, at first you opposed funding private schools, saying they would fragment our education system and would take millions of dollars out of our public schools; I'm sure you will remember that. You then flip-flopped and said that you supported giving public dollars to private schools.

During the leadership campaign, Ernie Eves called the private school tax credit ludicrous. He then flip-flopped and said he strongly supported putting hundreds of millions of public dollars into private schools. Yesterday, the Premier and the Minister of Education opened the door once again to flip-flopping and told us it might be true that they're in fact prepared to consider changing their minds. I'm asking you, Madam Minister, as the person responsible for this issue ultimately, are you now going to do the right thing and cancel your intention to put half a billion dollars in private schools?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): On this side of the House, this government believes in respecting parental choice. I know the Liberals, who say they respect parental choice—for them it's only parental choice that they approve of. Well, on this side of the House, we have a little more respect for the parents in this province and how they wish to raise their children.

Mr McGuinty: I guess you simply can't recollect what you said in your capacity as Minister of Education. In your letter to the United Nations, very public for all to see, you said that to fund private schools again would fragment the public education system and would take millions of dollars out of our public schools, where the money was needed. That's what you said.

Now, in your capacity as Minister of Finance, I suggest that you start getting real. You are facing enormous fiscal challenges. Health care is going to demand significantly more investment. As Dr Rozanski reminded you yesterday, public education is in need of significantly more investment. You are so desperate for cash that you are starting to sell off the Ontario family silverware. You're selling off Hydro One, POSO, Ontario Northland, Teranet. With all these tremendous financial pressures, tell me why you still continue to maintain that it is wise, prudent and fiscally responsible to put half a billion dollars into private schools.

Hon Mrs Ecker: I and my colleagues would not support something that would take money out of our public school system, and we've been very consistent on that. As a matter of fact, I put more money in, as the Minister of Education. The current Minister of Education is putting more money in. Even as we speak, the Premier of Ontario is announcing new investments into our public education. I know the honourable member across the way has problems with that, but we think those investments in public education are very, very important.

Mr McGuinty: Here is the fundamental difference between this government today and our government tomorrow: we are committed to public education for all Ontario children. We are committed to repairing the damage that you have caused to our public schools. We will not settle for test scores where one half of our kids are failing to meet the basic standards in reading, writing and mathematics. We will not force small schools to close. We will not tell kids in need of special education to get to the back of a waiting list some 40,000 long. On my watch, I can tell you that if there's any money at all available for education in the province of Ontario, we will not put that money into private schools. We will invest it where it's needed: inside public schools. We are going to stand up for public education.

I ask you, Madam Minister, when are you and the Minister of Education and this government going to start to stand up for public schools?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The honourable member across the way says he will not settle for students not doing well on tests. Well, they didn't agree with student testing. They didn't want student testing. So how were they going to know if our students were actually learning what they were supposed to learn?

On this side of the House, we respect parental choice. We believe in setting high standards for our kids and helping them meet those standards. We believe in putting new investments in the public education system. We believe in doing what we said we would do for the people in Ontario: lower taxes, balanced budgets, new investments in our schools and in our hospitals. We are following our plan because it works: one million net new jobs in this province for Ontario's families, new investments in schools, new investments in hospitals, $14 billion in tax relief. We're going to follow our plan—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up. New question.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have a question for the Minister of Education. Minister, your government's chronic shortchanging of students and schools has been exposed. Dr Rozanski says the trustees in Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa got it right and you got it wrong. They've told you all along that there isn't enough money in the funding formula for Ontario's schools, so your government should put the brakes on any cuts that are planned now at these boards and you should send your supervisors packing today. Will you blunt the axe of your hatchet men by reinstating the public school trustees who were democratically elected by the citizens of this province to do their job?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I appreciate the message from the member opposite, but what the member needs to understand is that for five years the trustees on the board in Toronto, if you want to use it as an example, unfortunately did not take the steps that were necessary to make sure there was equity of funding to all students in Toronto, no matter where they lived. Unfortunately, they have put the board in a very difficult financial situation.

Fortunately, the supervisor has put the Toronto board back on the road to sustainable financial health. I would only hope as well that there will be equitable funding provided for students at the end of the day, whether they are in Scarborough or in Etobicoke or in York or in downtown Toronto.

The Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Deputy Premier, your government said our trustees got it wrong. You said there was enough money for our schools. But Dr Rozanski said the trustees in Hamilton got it right. For four years you've been shortchanging salaries for teachers and support staff. For four years you've been shortchanging special education. For four years you've been shortchanging transportation and textbooks. For four years you've been shortchanging our students.

Minister, will you now stand in your place, admit you got it wrong and reinstate the Hamilton trustees who Dr Rozanski said got it right by refusing to cut any more money from Hamilton's education system?

Hon Mrs Witmer: Unfortunately, Dr Rozanski said no such thing, because Dr Rozanski was not dealing with Ottawa, he wasn't dealing with Toronto and he wasn't dealing with Hamilton. He was dealing with all of the students in the province of Ontario, and he wanted to make sure the funding formula that was put in place in 1998 was providing equitable, fair funding to all students, no matter where they lived.

I would just remind the member that in Hamilton there are many who say the budget could have been balanced, but as you know, they didn't even consider the balanced budget proposals that came forward. They had the chance; they chose not even to look at them.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I hope the minister understands that Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton are all in Ontario, and the people who live in those cities care very much about what is happening to their students. We care very much about our democratic traditions and we care very much about the people we elected to go out there and fight for our students. We are asking you today to put them back into their jobs. We are asking you today to do the right thing and to get rid of the undemocratic supervisors you've put there. If the problem has been solved by Dr Rozanski, then surely the people should be put back in charge.

It's very clear, Madam Minister, that your policies are wrong. The parents and the people of this province want their democratically elected people back in their place. Will you promise today to put them back in their place? Will you promise today to give them sufficient funds to keep our outdoor education centres open, our school secretaries hired and our youth counsellors on the job for the students of our cities?

Hon Mrs Witmer: Despite what the member opposite may say, there are many throughout the province of Ontario who have been very supportive of the direction that has been undertaken by the supervisors. They are very pleased that these boards have been put on the road to financial health, that there is a plan of action.

I think it's also very important to remember, yes, we have students in Hamilton, Ottawa, and Toronto, but we also have students in Thunder Bay, in Timmins, in Brockville and in Windsor. This review was all about making sure that no matter where you lived, you had to the same access to the same programs and the same services.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. Last spring, you raised the hopes of the 192,000 people who are forced to live in poverty because your government has frozen Ontario disability support payments for more than seven years. You promised to review the program and suggested that you believed they needed a raise. Six months later, we've heard nothing from you. That's six more months of poverty. You have had more than enough time. The disabled of this province have been more than patient. They want an answer today. Are you going to raise the ODSP payments?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way for the question. We on this side of the House have been very diligent in undertaking efforts to improve the lives of those who are disabled here in Ontario. My colleague has asked me this issue here a number of times in the House and I have to come back to him each time with this reminder: it's our government, following five years of disastrous government, with him as part of that whole debacle, that finally took a close look at the welfare system in the province of Ontario, the province where we saw 1.3 million people slide into welfare and the endless despair that that would bring if nothing changed.

Not only did we reform the welfare system but we also, for the first time, took those who were suffering with disabilities into a whole new plan that set them apart, that gave them an opportunity to partake in different benefits and also to become much more familiar with the whole concept of not just being disabled but having an opportunity to move into jobs and to be in equal employment.

Mr Martin: Minister, I want you to read my lips here. This is a simple yes or no question. Are you or are you not going to raise the ODSP payments?

Hon Mrs Elliott: I have indicated that we are certainly interested in doing more for those who are disabled in the province of Ontario, and I remind my colleague across the way that we have already done much more for those who are disabled in the province of Ontario. We took them out of the welfare trap. We added a number of different benefits and programs that had never been there before. We removed the label of permanently unemployed. We required that those who are disabled no longer had to go through that endless reconfirmation of their disability when that disability was not expected to improve; more generous and flexible rules for families and friends to help them with the cost of gifts and inheritances; increased asset limits, coupled with improved policies.

I can read through the whole list of things that are done here as part of the improvements for the Ontario disability support plan. Suffice to say that we have made a number of changes and we anticipate making more in the future.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): I have a question for the Minister of Education. Yesterday Dr Rozanski issued a stinging indictment of your mismanagement of education. Your rhetoric about directing greater resources into Ontario's classrooms has been exposed as a charade.

The Harris-Eves government has, without regard for the consequences, deliberately robbed our children of funding at the Toronto District School Board to the tune of $2,100 per pupil. Even worse, you appointed a supervisor to make further cuts. Minister, it's finally time for you to take responsibility and show some leadership. In light of Rozanski's findings, the proper thing to do is to terminate Paul Christie. The TDSB is having its organizational meeting tonight. Will you restore the authority of the Toronto District School Board trustees to allow them to get to the business of providing the best possible education for children in the city of Toronto?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): The member opposite talks about the right thing to do. I can tell you that at the present time, our Premier, Premier Eves, is doing the right thing. He is announcing 250 million additional dollars for special-education students. We are not only increasing the money by $130 million; we're also adding the remaining $120 million.

We're doing the right thing for students in this province. We're making sure that all the students, no matter where they live, are going to get the support they need.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): The Rozanski report was clear. It confirms what the leader Dalton McGuinty has been saying. Your funding cuts have hurt children in the classroom. When you removed adult education programs, you shattered the dreams of single mothers and a second chance for their education. When you eliminate English-as-a-second-language programs, you're hurting our kids and the diversity we cherish. Forty thousand kids are on waiting lists for special education.

Communities like Scarborough-Rouge River are the new face of Ontario, yet you don't seem to realize that. How can you reconcile all this? Will you admit that your course of action was wrong, and when will you rectify education funding and put it back in place?

Hon Mrs Witmer: I would just repeat one more time that yesterday was a validation of the student funding formula. Yesterday has been supported—if you had been in the room yesterday with the chairperson and the directors from across the province of Ontario, I can tell you there are a lot of very happy people in this province because they know that the plan we have had in place since 1995 is helping students achieve success. They also know that when it comes to international testing, at the present time our province is second to only one other country in literacy, and that's Finland. Our student funding formula is working. It is helping all of our students, no matter where they live, achieve the success that they deserve and that they need.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question is for the hard-working and straight-shooting Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. We all know that a skilled workforce is essential to a strong economy. Employers are demanding highly trained graduates who are ready to go directly into the workforce and contribute to our economy. Ontario colleges of applied arts and technology are essential to training the next generation of skilled workers in our province. Colleges provide programs that are closely tied to the job market and often deliver the classroom portion of apprenticeship training.

This year's budget committed new funding to upgrade the equipment and resources available to students in Ontario's colleges. Minister, can you give us an update on the status of this funding and the good work it is doing to ensure that Ontario college students have access to the modern equipment and resources that will help them to be more productive in the workplace?

1500

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): I would really like to thank my honourable colleague for this question. He has been the author of one of the most important research documents and public hearings in the province of Ontario on apprenticeship training, and I want to thank him very much for the Gill report.

We already have committed to increase funding for Ontario's colleges to support increased enrolment. Beyond that, we have committed some $50 million to help colleges purchase new equipment and learning resources to support high-quality and relevant education for Ontario students.

The college equipment and renewal fund will invest $10 million a year for the next five years to improve the resources that students need to help them learn. I'd like to thank the partnerships of the community and the businesses that are giving these students opportunities and participating in the purchase of equipment to make our colleges better than they ever have been.

Mr Gill: Minister, thank you for your support during the writing of that report. It was a very important report for Ontario.

Minister, every community in Ontario is different, and every college is different. Members who have met with the college community will know that colleges that serve northern and rural communities face different challenges. These can range from higher costs due to distance to the need to operate programs with fewer students in smaller communities.

Premier Eves recently announced $16 million in new support to ensure that both colleges and universities that serve Ontario's northern and rural regions remain strong and can continue to provide a high level of service to their students and those communities.

Minister, can you give us details of this funding and tell us how it will support a strong college system in Ontario?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: In response to my colleague, I will say that in Sault Ste Marie on November 28 Mr Eves did in fact announce $16 million in northern colleges and universities funding. Algoma University received half a million dollars. Sault College of Applied Arts and Technology received $1.1 million.

This is just an indication of our commitment to northern communities to make sure that in fact young people get the training they need, that we double the number of apprenticeship programs. Of the $16 million that was announced, $10 million will be used to support Ontario colleges that serve northern and rural communities. This northern and rural college grant was created especially so that we can provide these colleges with the opportunities for Ontarians where they live and close to their own communities so that they can be contributing members and help the economy of this great province.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Minister of Education. Minister, it is clear that despite interpretations of the funding formula, the Rozanski report did indicate that you've been underfunding education.

This afternoon, as you have stated, the Premier will be making an announcement. Shall we guess? More funding? This is the typical Tory story. First you create a crisis, you underfund something, and then you come in just before an election or a by-election and you throw money back in.

Minister, you suspended a democratically elected board of trustees in my city of Hamilton which refused to pass a budget that ignored the needs of students. Will you now at least agree that these trustees were doing their job in looking out for student needs and fire your highly paid supervisor and his highly paid spin doctor and reinstate the board of trustees in Hamilton?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I think the member opposite forgets one key point regarding the appointment of the supervisor in order to ensure that Hamilton had a balanced budget. What she really forgets is the fact that the trustees in Hamilton had the opportunity to actually debate and discuss balanced budgets that had been prepared for them by staff, and they just refused to do so. And so there was no choice whatsoever other than to send in a supervisor. I might say to the member opposite that the support of the public for the supervisor is very high.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): My follow-up question is for the same minister. Clearly the Rozanski report vindicated trustees in Hamilton. They made the decisions 'you didn't have the guts to. They made a decision in the best interests of kids. You sent a hatchet man down the QEW. He has now done his job: he's balanced his budget. I would ask you now to fire him and send him home.

On Tuesday night, he is going to make a decision that is going to affect 11 schools. Now, through this report, there has been an acknowledgement that you have underfunded public education. The reason many of these schools will be recommended for closure on Tuesday night is because of your flawed funding formula.

I'm asking you, Minister, as these schools, like Lloyd George in my riding, are going to close, you are cutting the heart out of this community. You are destroying a neighbourhood. I would ask you, in good conscience, in the best interest of these kids and public education, will you fire your supervisor? Will you also direct your supervisor not to recommend any school closures until a new funding plan is in place and the new money is allocated to the board, where we can make a decision based on the money available, not on some outdated, flawed formula that you brought in that has hurt kids in this city of Hamilton? That is the least you can do today. Reinstate the trustees, get rid of the supervisor and put on hold any school closures in the city of Hamilton.

Hon Mrs Witmer: The member opposite obviously doesn't understand that school closures have been a fact of life for a long time in the province of Ontario. In fact, between 1985 and 1990, during the Liberals' time in power, 37 public and Catholic schools were closed in Toronto. This is nothing new. Simply because people move and populations change, there is a need for new schools to be built where the population is. We continue to go through this process of building new schools to accommodate the needs of students in other areas and schools are closed when the population no longer is there to support them. It's a process that has been going on for many years, and it will continue to do so. There is also a process that allows for parental input, and at the end of the day, after that input, a decision is made.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): My question is for the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing responsible for rural affairs. Minister, I was very pleased to see today that you introduced the rural red tape bill. Can you tell this House about the history of this piece of legislation and what motivated you to develop this rural red tape bill?

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I'd like to thank the honourable member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for his question, and also thank him for his tireless work on the Red Tape Commission as well, in particular developing this red tape bill.

The good people of Ontario certainly deserve the same opportunities for growth and prosperity as our urban counterparts. Over the past two years—and this is through the extensive consultation that we've had—we've heard over and over again from these stakeholders who have made it clear there were barriers to their businesses, that they were facing barriers to economic growth. We identified a number of areas where we could make improvements, so we should make those improvements so that they can continue to prosper in our rural communities.

As a result of these consultations, actually with over 600 businesses and communities all across Ontario, we developed a red tape reduction plan that recognizes the unique challenges they face. This bill, if passed, will go a long way in addressing some of those disadvantages they face.

Mr Miller: This is indeed good news for all of rural Ontario. I'm delighted to see that our government, under the strong leadership of Premier Eves, is moving forward on removing needless and outdated red tape in rural Ontario.

Minister, for my constituents as well as this House, can you highlight some of the benefits that we will see from this bill?

Hon Mr Coburn: Certainly, rural communities are a key part of the fabric of Ontario and of our society. This bill, if it's passed, will strengthen those rural communities and provide a better quality of life and more opportunities for the business sector in these rural communities. By removing these barriers, they'll encourage the economic growth that they strive for, attract more investment and eliminate obstacles to job creation in rural Ontario. This process will help Ontario's rural communities to create their own vision for the future in their communities, so they can work toward that in collaboration with the residents who live there. They can be architects of their future in those communities and we can help them relieve the administrative burdens caused by unnecessary red tape. This legislation is certainly built upon some of the key issues and priorities identified by the rural Ontario stakeholders. This is another step in the process of eliminating red tape that stymies investment. That'll help us encourage investment and prosperity in rural and small-town Ontario.

HIGHWAY 406

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Transportation. Minister, in an announcement in 1999, the then Minister of Transportation promised the commencement of the four-laning and extension of Highway 406. Will you please explain to us the progress that's been made in that regard?

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): We have been working on the section immediately to the—I always have difficulty knowing what's north, south, east, west—toward St Catharines. We have been working on that particular section and we're continuing to look at improvements to the 406. As you know, there is some controversy as to how that next section will take place, but we're continuing to pour our resources into the area and we're going to continue to work on it.

Mr Kormos: Minister, the part of 406 toward St Catharines is already four lanes. You mean south of St Catharines; that's number one. Number two, you've got to understand that communities like Port Colborne, for instance, with the loss of Marsh Engineering, the loss of other manufacturing and industrial facilities in Niagara, are desperately in need of the extension of the 406 southward into Port Colborne, the riding of Erie-Lincoln, as well as the four-laning of that portion south of the current four-laning. The promise was made in 1999 by a predecessor Minister of Transportation. A commitment was made by this government to the four-laning southbound of the 406 and to the extension of the 406 into Port Colborne. This is of great interest, not only to people in Welland and Port Colborne, in the riding of Erie-Lincoln, but in fact to residents of every one of the four ridings of Niagara region, represented by four different members of the Legislative Assembly. We would really appreciate some more concrete advice as to the progress that's been made and the target date for the completion of this work.

Hon Mr Sterling: As everyone knows, when you go to build a highway, there's always problems with regard to unforeseen problems. As I understand it, there were some problems with regard to land acquisition in that particular area for us to go ahead. So all I can say to the member is that we continue to be committed to the 406, to living with the commitments we've made before, as well as being committed to the mid-peninsula corridor, which of course is very important to that area. I think in the not too far distant future I'm going to be meeting with the mayor of Port Colborne over the very issue and talking to him about his concerns with regard to it.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): My question is to the Minister of Education. Since I've come to the Legislature, many have raised concerns regarding the impact of underfunding of our public education system. Minister, your underfunding has had a traumatic effect in my community of Sarnia-Lambton. Many small schools have been closed, the latest being St Helen's. By the way it's a full, viable school. In schools in my riding there have been cuts to support staff. We have fewer librarians, custodians, vice-principals, school secretaries, specialist teachers and special education. Maintenance repairs have been put on hold. Yet the Minister of Education has constantly denied that there is an underfunding to the classroom. Well, the Rozanski report has now qualified what we've been saying all along. In his report, on page 16, he says, "Education, while centred in the classroom, is influenced by what occurs in the whole school." Will the minister now admit that the chronic underfunding has eroded the quality of education in our classrooms?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): What I will confirm is that we were extremely fortunate to have in this province an individual such as Dr Mordecai Rozanski who undertook to lead the task force to take a look at the funding formula, who did this without any remuneration whatsoever, who took the time to travel the province, who took the time to visit our schools, who took the time to read many submissions, and at the end of the day he has come forward with recommendations which validate what we have already done. He has made recommendations for further strategic investments, building upon the 3% that we've already added to the budget this year in order that we could continue to meet the needs of students everywhere in this province. That's what I'm proud of.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): To the same minister: Minister, we now have confirmed yesterday that education doesn't end at the classroom door. Schools are woven into the very fabric of our community. Rural schools have always closed because of declining enrolment. They're now closing because of declining revenue for the schools.

We now have expensive yellow buses travelling our rural roads every morning, vacuuming up our children and taking them to faraway places. We haven't measured what the effect is on the community or on these young people with that action, but I don't believe it is a coincidence that the crisis facing Ontario now is: where are our young farmers?

Minister, I'm asking you now to impose a moratorium on the closing of rural schools, to talk to school boards, to talk to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, to talk to parents, to talk to community leaders, to find a way to save our rural way of life, save our rural schools.

Minister, will you impose now a moratorium on the closing and the attack on rural Ontario?

Hon Mrs Witmer: The member opposite and I both understand, I believe, that there has always been a policy on school closures. In fact, I would like to quote Ernie Parsons, Kingston Whig-Standard, January 29, 1997: "As Hastings public school board chairman, Parsons agreed to sell the Belleville Collegiate school, realizing that school boards were responsible for school closures and the costs of running empty schools."

"He said, 'It became a cold, hard decision that we had too much floor space,' thus admitting his schools were grossly under their capacities."

HYDRO REBATES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): This question is to the forever hard-working and diligent Minister of Energy. Minister, with the passage of the Electricity Pricing, Conservation and Supply Act this past Monday, the government has introduced important measures to protect consumers from volatility in the price of power and provide them with real relief by issuing rebates for past high prices.

My office, Minister, has received numerous phone calls from constituents who are condo owners. They are concerned that the price freeze and rebates do not apply to them. Minister, what can you tell us to reassure condominium owners in my great riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale that this act applies to them as well?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I know, as does the member who asked the question, that when this government came forward with an action plan to provide support to ensure stability for people's electricity rates, we talked about families, we talked about small businesses, and we talked about farm operators, all of which needed relief, not just for the high bills on the kitchen table, but for those bills in the future, while we bring more supply on-line.

I want to thank the honourable member for his efforts and for the efforts of a good number of other members, like the member for Willowdale, like the member for Stoney Creek and the member for Don Valley West. They have worked tremendously hard on this issue.

Yes, let me clarify: condominiums and condominium owners and families who reside in condominiums are fully covered by Bill 210. We designated them under the designation section of the legislation to ensure that they benefit from this important policy.

Mr Gill: Minister, I want to thank you for the response. I'm sure condominium corporations and condominium owners will be very pleased to know that the price cap and refund introduced as part of Bill 210 apply to them as well.

Having said that, Minister, there are other consumers in Ontario who are also concerned. Can you please tell us what is being done to protect organizations like charities, seniors' homes and people who live in apartments under this legislation?

Hon Mr Baird: I'd also indicate to the member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale that all condominium residents in his constituency are covered by this as well.

To the member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale, this legislation provides support for our municipalities, for our universities, for our schools and for our hospitals. We certainly want to cover seniors' residences. We want to cover tenants in Ontario. We want to ensure that groups like developmental disability organizations funded through the Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services are covered. We want to ensure the range of agencies supported by the Ministry of Health are covered by this protection.

We also take note that the Minister of Culture and the Minister of Tourism have stepped in to ensure that the publicly funded cultural and tourist attractions are equally covered so that they can take advantage of this important legislation that received such overwhelming support this week in the Legislature.

SAVE THE ROUGE

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I have a question for the Minister of Culture. Save the Rouge, one of Ontario's most respected environmental groups and an advocate for 27 years, and the tireless volunteers of Save the Rouge have led the fight to create Canada's largest urban park in Rouge Valley and led the fight to protect the Oak Ridges moraine. They have learned, to their astonishment, that your Trillium organization, in an unprecedented, never-heard-of event, cut off the funding of this group.

According to a press release issued by Save the Rouge yesterday, when the group questioned your government's secret deal with developers, allowing 8,000 homes to be built on the Oak Ridges moraine in Richmond Hill, they were told by Trillium staff that if they criticized the provincial government on the moraine developments, their funding for habitat restoration would be cut off.

Mr Minister, can you stand up and justify this cut-off of funding of one of Ontario's leading environmental groups, which for 27 years has been fighting to save the moraine and fighting to save the Rouge? How can you justify—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Minister of Culture): Clearly, there are rules. The Ontario Trillium Foundation is an arm's-length agency of the government. They have specific rules.

There was a letter issued July 11 to the Save the Rouge Valley System from the Trillium Foundation. In the letter—this is July 11—it says, "While we appreciate the importance of having communities constructively involved in public consultation processes, Trillium's advocacy policy states that the foundation does not support organizations or activities that promote a biased viewpoint or advocate a political position on issues of public concern."

These were the rules under which the application was made. The letter indicated to Save the Rouge Valley System their concern about that. Despite the warning, they continued the activities.

Therefore, as I am told by the Trillium Foundation, that precipitated the action they took. These rules were there when they applied for their grant. Clearly that was what they were—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up. Supplementary.

Mr Colle: Save the Rouge was involved in removing dams and other barriers from rivers, planting streamside vegetation, stabilizing riverbanks, enhancing spawning habitats, planting native trees. They were involving church groups, Boy Scouts. They've been doing this for 27 years.

Here's what Save the Rouge thinks happened. Glenn De Baeremaeker, one of Canada's leading environmentalists, said, "It's financial blackmail.... Say nice things about the government, we'll give you money. Criticize it and we'll cut you off." Glenn De Baeremaeker and Save the Rouge had the integrity to stand up and say, "Put 8,000 homes on the moraine and you're killing wildlife, you're killing the Oak Ridges moraine." Because they had the integrity to state the truth, your political hacks at the Trillium Foundation have cut off their funding. How can you justify that by your political hacks?

Hon Mr Tsubouchi: This is somewhat of a surprising question from the member in light of the fact that earlier on this week we were dealing with the Provincial Auditor of Ontario indicating that there are rules to be followed. We've indicated that we're sprucing up the rules. Now the member is saying that even though there are rules, it's OK to break the rules; it doesn't matter. Frankly, we disagree with you. Rules are there to be obeyed. That's why we're sprucing up the rules right across the public service. Here's an indication of rules not being followed and being enforced, and you don't like it. The rules were there before the application.

TFO

Mrs Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): Ma question s'adresse à la ministre responsable pour TVOntario et la composante française, TFO. Minister Dianne Cunningham, we all know that TFO has been serving Ontario's francophone community since 1987. We know that TFO is an essential tool to French-language education in Ontario. TFO is currently governed by a 13-member board of directors of the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, only two of whom speak French well enough to watch and understand the network they govern.

Minister, on October 3, I presented to this House a resolution that carried, requesting that you look into the matter of granting TFO autonomy in its direction and development. At that time you said that you were "interested in seeking out new ways to do things better." What has been done? You said that you would be speaking further with your colleagues with regard to the effects of the resolution on TFO. What has been done? You said, "Let's sit down and talk with the French-speaking community about improvements that we can make." What has been done so far?

Hon Dianne Cunningham (Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, minister responsible for women's issues): I welcome the question from my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier, only to say to her that there has been great progress at TFO with regard to strengthening the network itself.

Since you last asked the question, I of course have been in touch through the chair, and I will say that there has been an increase in the range of in-house production focusing on francophone needs. This is just since you and I talked. There has been an extension of multi-media products such as CD-ROMs, and professional development workshops, I might add, for French language teachers. These are all needs that the francophone community has defined with regard to this wonderful service. In the end, they told me the professional development workshops for these French language teachers are in addition to a redesign of the TFO Web site.

Mrs Boyer: Minister, I hear you and I know progress may have been done, but it's not giving me the concern about autonomy. I have a solution. It is non-partisan. It is grassroots. It comes from the very people who watch TFO, the hundreds of thousands of francophones and francophiles across Ontario, those very people with whom I thought you should talk.

Here are letters of support from over 100 francophone organizations. Their solution is to create a French-language section at TVO to govern TFO exclusively. What does the minister have to say to these more than 100 francophone organizations across Ontario? How does the minister plan to improve the services provided by TFO? Can the minister assure me that she will take action to see to it that TFO is governed by people who speak the language of the network?

Hon Mrs Cunningham: Again, I will look into the specific requests, but I will say that I did make an effort to show you improved services. In addition to the three that I described, the centre for excellence in lifelong learning which has been established at TFO will offer students the opportunity to take instruction in either English or French.

What I'm trying to say here is that the English network does not exercise editorial influence over the French, and vice versa. I will also say that in 15 years—this is a celebration for TFO—the services have been improved significantly. There are more people involved.

But I did hear your specific question. You are asking about the number of francophones who are involved, and I will look into that and get back to you.

MINISTRY OF ENTERPRISE, OPPORTUNITY AND INNOVATION

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): My question is for the minister with the luminescent Christmas tie that clearly demonstrates enterprise, opportunity and innovation.

Promotion of a culture of innovation has been a major guiding principle of your ministry. As members of the House know, the first rung on the ladder of innovation is research.

Interjection.

Mr Spina: The member from Rosedale has no idea what he's talking about.

Minister, would you please inform the members of the steps this government is taking to support research in this province.

1530

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I thank the member for Brampton Centre for this important question. Ontario's world-class researchers working at universities, colleges, hospitals and research institutions are creating knowledge, which fuels innovation. Our government recognizes that it's important to reward researchers and their excellence. To this end, we've created the Premier's Research Excellence Awards. The program provides early-stage support for researchers to help attract talented people to research teams. The total government investment is $85 million over five years. To date, we've awarded 438 researchers with $43.6 million.

Another program is the Premier's Platinum Medal for Research Excellence. This was created in the 2001 budget, with a commitment of $10 million over six years. The Premier's platinum medal underscores Ontario's commitment to R&D.

Mr Spina: Minister, as well as turning on your tie to ensure a bright future for innovation in Ontario, you know we have to invest in those who represent the future: our young people, people like my daughter.

Take a moment and tell the details of the Youth, Science and Technology program to the members of this House. And we'd really like to see that Christmas tie.

Hon Mr Turnbull: Our government certainly plays an important role in promoting science and technology literacy. The Youth, Science and Technology program, announced in September 2000, increases youth awareness of science, technology and innovation. Our government has committed $5 million over five years. To date, 35 projects have been approved, which benefit over 100,000 youths annually. Projects span a wide range of subjects, including astronomy and biotechnology. Research varies and the youths are taking advantage of this in classrooms, laboratories and even under nighttime skies.

PETITIONS

WATER EXTRACTION

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly and to the Honourable Chris Stockwell, Minister of the Environment, concerning the OMYA Canada Inc appeal of the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal in a matter of a permit to take water from the Tay River, Perth, Ontario.

"For the past two years, a group of citizens has opposed the taking of a large amount of water from the Tay River for a consumptive industrial use. In February 2002 the Environmental Review Tribunal reached a decision that was a compromise between the needs of an expanding industry and the concerns of local citizens for the protection of water.

"The company, OMYA, now seeks to overturn the tribunal's ruling and has appealed the decision to both the Divisional Court and the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment has agreed to hear the appeal to him first.

"We, the undersigned, urge the Minister of the Environment to uphold the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal and its precautionary and ecological approach to the management of water. In doing so, the minister upholds the government's commitment to the principles and recommendations of the Walkerton Inquiry report."

I affix my signature. I am in complete agreement with this petition.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): These are more petitions on adoption disclosure. They read:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in Ontario, adopted adults are denied a right available to all non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

"Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

"Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

"Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person's amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling."

I will sign this petition because I support it.

CAT SCANNER

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas various local partners have contributed capital funding for a CAT scan to be purchased by the Woodstock General Hospital; and

"Whereas a CAT scan is an essential piece of equipment for the practice of modern medicine; and

"Whereas a CAT scan is standard equipment for a hospital of this size in North America; and

"Whereas all hospitals associated with a city the size of Woodstock in southwestern Ontario have at least one CAT scan except for the Woodstock General Hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care approve the placement of a CAT scan at Woodstock General Hospital and provide the hospital with necessary operating funds to continue with its use."

It is signed by a great number of residents in the city of Woodstock and in the county of Oxford. I affix my signature to it, as I agree with those who signed the petition.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I've received thousands and thousands of names in regard to this particular petition. It's to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases."

I too have signed this petition.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO SAVINGS OFFICE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office was created in 1922 by united farmers and labour as a unique banking facility that allowed Ontarians to invest in their province; and

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office enjoys a strong popularity among Ontario residents, with over 100,000 accounts and over $2.8 billion on deposit; and

"Whereas the Province of Ontario Savings Office offers customers attractive interest rates, generous chequing privileges and personalized efficient service, and every dollar deposited is guaranteed by the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas POSO has 23 branches serving 17 communities across Ontario, including Hamilton, Windsor, Ottawa and small communities in northern Ontario not served by other banks or trust companies. Places like Pickle Lake, Armstrong, Killarney, Gogama and Virginiatown; and

"Whereas the Tory government announced in its latest budget that it will put the Province of Ontario Savings Office on the auction block, even though it is a consistent revenue generator, and even though this revenue could help Ontario's crumbling infrastructure after years of Tory neglect;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To save the people's bank, the Province of Ontario Savings Office, so that it can continue its historic role of providing excellent banking services to families in communities across Ontario; so that people in small towns will not be forced to go farther afield for banking services and forced to go to private, for-profit banks.”

I agree with the petitioners. I have affixed my signature to this.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): I have a petition with many hundreds of names on it from the constituency of Dufferin-Peel-Wellington-Grey, and it reads as follows:

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas Genuine Springs Inc, located at lot 17, Concession 3, town of Mono, Dufferin county (land within the escarpment protection area, a world biosphere controlled by the Niagara Escarpment Commission) is planning to extract water from four wells that have been dug in the above-noted property, and bottle such water for commercial purposes at a different location; and

“Whereas a temporary permit to take water (No. 02-P-2077(T)) has been issued on August 6, 2002, in relation to the above-noted location, expiring September 30, 2002; and

“Whereas the residents of the town of Mono and Dufferin county are not aware of any scientific, objective and independent tests and studies having been conducted, assessing the implications of such water extraction, including the impact on the water table (the Amabel aquifer) and the surrounding environment;

“Now therefore the residents of the town of Mono and Dufferin county respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to halt the extraction of water for commercial purposes at lot 17, concession 3, town of Mono; Dufferin County, unless and until complete scientific, objective and independent tests and studies have been conducted, assessing the implications of such water extraction, including the impact on the water table (the Amabel aquifer) and the surrounding environment and until the results of such tests have been presented, received and understood by the residents of the town of Mono and Dufferin county. Furthermore, the petitioners respectfully request that no further permits to take water be issued to Genuine Springs Inc until the tests and studies herein referred to have been conducted and dealt with as noted in this petition.”

I have affixed my signature as well, as per the rules of this House.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): This is from OMYA Canada Inc—appeal of the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal in the matter of a permit to take water from the Tay River in Perth, Ontario.

“For the past two years a group of citizens has opposed the taking of a large amount of water from the Tay River for a consumptive industrial use. In February 2002 the Environmental Review Tribunal reached a decision that was a compromise between the needs of an expanding industry and the concerns of local citizens for the protection of water.

“The company, OMYA, now seeks to overturn the tribunal’s ruling and has appealed the decision to both the Divisional Court and the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment has agreed to hear the appeal to him first.

“We, the undersigned, urge the Minister of the Environment to uphold the decision of the Environmental Review Tribunal and its precautionary and ecological approach to the management of water. In doing so, the minister upholds the government’s commitment to the principles and recommendations of the Walkerton Inquiry report.”

I will affix my signature to this petition, because I am in full agreement.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO SAVINGS OFFICE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): This petition has been signed by many people who live in Guelph, Ontario. It reads as follows:

“Cancel the decision to sell the Province of Ontario Savings branches, as many account holders are seniors and long-time account holders, among many other ... satisfied customers. These banks and staff are a credit to their province.”

I agree with the petitioners; I have affixed my signature to this.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

“Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government’s flawed electricity plan; and

“Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protections; and

“Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

“Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

“Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario’s debt burden; and

“Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

“Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Harris-Eves government and its leader Ernie Eves call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

In support, I sign my signature.

MEDICAL REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the OHIP schedule of benefits is often unclear about its definitions of good medical practice for many serious medical conditions: general checkups, re-checks, psychotherapy counselling and often major illness care by specialists;

"The medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons has been aggressively clawing back payments to hard-working, conscientious doctors on the basis of these flawed definitions and skewed statistical analyses.

"We, the undersigned, request the Minister of Health to suspend further reviews by the medical review committee; return the monies with its penalties, pending a negotiated agreement of an unambiguous schedule of benefits with representatives of affected practising physicians."

HYDRO RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government convene a legislative committee to oversee electricity issues in order to inform and protect the public interest."

This petition is signed by numerous members of my riding, including Mitch Hepburn, the great-grandson of the former Premier of this province from 1934 to 1942.

OPTOMETRISTS

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I have a petition to the Ontario Legislature.

"Whereas the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario will be considering a private member's bill that aims to amend the Optometry Act to give optometrists the authority to prescribe therapeutic pharmaceutical agents for the treatment of certain eye diseases; and

"Whereas optometrists are highly trained and equipped with the knowledge and specialized instrumentation needed to effectively diagnose and treat certain eye problems; and

"Whereas extending the authority to prescribe TPAs to optometrists will help relieve the demands on ophthalmologists and physicians who currently have the exclusive domain for prescribing TPAs to optometry patients; and

"Whereas the bill introduced by New Democrat Peter Kormos (MPP, Niagara Centre) will ensure that patients receive prompt, timely, one-stop care where appropriate;

"Therefore I do support the bill proposing an amendment to the Optometry Act to give optometrists the authority to prescribe therapeutic pharmaceutical agents for the treatment of certain eye diseases and I urge the government of Ontario to ensure speedy passage of the bill."

This was sent to me by R.D. Lidkea of Fort Frances, Ontario, and accompanies many others.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): An important petition to the Ontario Legislature:

"Whereas the Conservative government plans to sell off Hydro One and Ontario's electricity transmission grid—the central nervous system of Ontario's economy;

"Whereas the government never campaigned on selling off this vital $5-billion public asset and never consulted the people of Ontario on this plan;

"Whereas Ontario families want affordable, reliable electricity—they know that the sale of the grid that carries electricity to their homes is a disaster for consumers;

"Whereas selling the grid will not benefit consumers—the only Ontarians who will likely benefit are Bay Street brokers and Hydro One executives;

"Whereas selling Hydro One and the grid is like selling every 400 series highway in the province to private interests—selling the grid means the public sector will no longer be responsible for its security and protection;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature as follows:

"To demand the Conservative government halt the sale of Hydro One until the government has a clear mandate from the owners of Hydro One—the people of Ontario."

This is signed by good citizens from Ridgetown, Blenheim, Chatham, Thamesville and Muirkirk. I too have signed this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): The Chair recognizes the chief government House whip.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Because I'm the only government House leader. That's why I'm the chief.

Mr Speaker, order M186.

COLLISION REPAIR
STANDARDS ACT, 2002
LOI DE 2002
SUR LES NORMES DE RÉPARATION
EN CAS DE COLLISION

Mr Sampson moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 186, An Act to further highway safety and establish consumer protection through the regulation of the collision repair industry, and to make a complementary amendment to the Insurance Act / Projet de loi 186, Loi visant à améliorer la sécurité sur les voies publiques et à protéger les consommateurs en réglementant le secteur de la réparation en cas de collision et à apporter une modification complémentaire à la Loi sur les assurances.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Mr Sampson has moved second reading.

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Third reading; I'm sorry. The Chair recognizes the member for Mississauga Centre.

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): Thank you, Speaker. I hope I said third reading. Indeed, that is what we are doing here.

Before I start, I want to say thank you to a number of people who have been involved in the preparation of this bill, the process the bill has gone through since its first introduction, actually in June of this year, and then its second first introduction in October of this year. Right off the top, I should probably thank the House leader for—well, I know he's a little disappointed that he wasn't promoted to be the chief House leader, but there's always next year, you know, subject to promotions.

Interjection.

Mr Sampson: You don't want the job. But he has been helpful, of course, as have been the other House leaders, frankly, in allowing this bill to move through the process, allowing members of all the parties to speak to this in a fair and open way and—

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): Give him a kiss. Pucker up.

Mr Sampson: No, I think he's done a good job in doing that.

But let me move on from there, because there are more people involved in it. The member from Oak Ridges, who originally sponsored this bill in June of this year was promoted to be the Minister of Tourism and of course had to then leave his private member's bill for somebody else to pick up. I was more than happy to do that, because of course it was that member and myself who originated the work on this in 1986 when it became clear to us that the industry needed a good looking at as it related to the regulation of what was done in the collision repair industry. Both that member and I started the work of listening and talking to people who were in the industry, asking them for their opinions and focusing them on issues that would try to improve consumer protection in the area where consumers are dealing with having to get their car repaired, whether it's as the result of an accident or just to get their car repaired as a result of some sort of damage that was otherwise caused to the vehicle.

That brings me to the Minister of Consumer and Business Services, who has kindly and with full enthusiasm accepted the concept of the regulation, self-regulation if you will, of this particular industry. It's a concept that's not terribly new to this House or to this province, since there are a number of other professions, I shall say, and businesses that have embraced the concept of self-regulation to establish and maintain and police a fair and equitable level of performance standards across the entire industry. So I want to thank the minister for his support on that, his continued support of the bill. Should the House decide to carry this bill, I hope he will continue to enthusiastically support this concept as it goes through its development phase.

I also want to thank the members of the opposition, who have taken their partisan hats off, which is difficult in this place, and worked with me to improve the bill that was not only tabled in June but, as I said, re-tabled on October 7 of this year. It went through the committee process. We had deputations from a number of people; either they came before the committee or they wrote to the committee and made some suggestions for amendments. I would say to you that in a spirit of co-operation that is not usually seen in this House, unfortunately, the bill has been substantially improved over the version that was originally considered by this House at first reading. I want to thank members of the opposition for their efforts, non-partisan efforts, to try to improve this piece of legislation for the benefit of consumers.

I also want to thank the many shop owners throughout the province of Ontario and their relative associations. I say associations, because there are a few of them. Some of those members are here in the House today watching the proceedings. I want to thank them for their efforts in taking a look at the concept of self-regulation and embracing it and agreeing that it's indeed something that has been called for in the industry for some time. It's time has come. It's not an easy concept to embrace because it does mean there will be this oversight on your operation; there will be this process that will determine standards of performance, the type of qualifications employees have to have etc. It's not easy to accept those. Those, of course, will have to be paid for somehow. I think the industry has agreed that they are going to have to be part of the process that helps fund this. Don't look toward government to pay for this. These are difficult issues to grasp.

When Frank and I originally proposed this concept, it was a group that, I would argue, was not very cohesive, was a bit fractioned, if you will. There were groups that didn't particularly want to work with other groups. They have gotten over that. I think there's a little bit more to be done in that area as we proceed, should the House agree to this bill, to implement self-regulation in the auto repair, collision repair industry. That's my eight minutes of thanks for your support.

Now just a few minutes, if I can—because I know other members do want to speak to this—about what this bill is doing. To the people watching today, to the people who will read these debates in Hansard going forward, to those who will have to work with it, should it get passed, the bill is quite simple. It simply creates a framework that will involve collision repair people, consumers and government people though the ministry. It creates a framework that will involve those people and engage them in the creation of the standards that will be applied to everybody in the collision repair industry in Ontario in order to do business in that business in this province. It simply establishes the framework for that committee and that oversight group.

As a related issue, it also establishes some principles, which I have called in this bill the motorists' bill of rights, as to what consumers can and should expect from this bill and their involvement with collision repair and the related involvement with the insurance industry. They will have the right to be able to pick, among certified shops, those shops that they would like to have their business done at. They can receive some recommendations. The bill calls it "a statement advising the consumer that an insurer may suggest that the work be done at a particular ... shop," but that's the extent of the direction that insurers can provide. But all the work must be done at a certified shop. So the core principle, which actually exists today under current legislation that is buried in the Insurance Act, I've decided through this bill—and I hope this House will accept—to elevate to this particular legislation to clearly outline that the consumer has a choice among certified shops. I know the member from Niagara would agree with that.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): And the member from Niagara does agree.

Mr Sampson: The member from Niagara does agree. That's why I said earlier that I'm pleased to see that members like the member from Niagara and other members in the House have taken off their partisan hats in dealing with this particular issue. There is nothing partisan about consumer protection, and the member for Niagara knows that. There's nothing partisan about protecting the little guy. There's nothing partisan about protecting shop owners who've invested a sizable amount of their family wealth in the business of collision repair. There's nothing wrong with making sure that they are competing on a level playing field with other people in the collision repair industry. I know the member is speaking from the floor and he should normally be at his seat, and he supports that statement. I can tell that by what he is saying.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: You will, and I'd ask that you would address your comments through the Chair as well.

Mr Sampson: I will do that because while I was—

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Niagara Centre, come to order.

1600

Mr Sampson: While I was slightly distracted, I do know that you are keenly interested in this subject, Speaker.

All this bill does is simply establish the framework for the regulatory environment to come. It doesn't establish the exact rules, guidelines, if you will, that the shops will have to speak to. That will come from the group that will provide the oversight, which includes the people who are actually in the business. There's no rocket science to this design. It simply says that those who are in the business and those who are paying the bills to keep the business going, the consumers, should have a say in setting the standards of what is expected from a collision repair in this province.

It's not acceptable that we have repairs being done that produce unsafe cars. It's not acceptable that we have repairs done that are not in accordance with other provincial standards, whether they be environmental standards around the use of paint hoods or employment standards around who is qualified to do this work. What is acceptable is that when consumers take their car into a shop to get repaired, they expect it's done effectively, efficiently and to safety standards that attempt to return that vehicle, as much as possible, to the state of repair it was in before the accident.

These will be the challenges the oversight committee will have to face, should this bill be passed and they're given this responsibility to come up with these standards. It won't be easy. I know some work has been done by some groups on what those standards might look like, and that's probably a good place to start. I know other provinces have tried this. BC has a program around collision repair standards, and we might be able to borrow from some of the work they have done. Other jurisdictions, no doubt, have faced this issue. We don't need to re-create the wheel here, but what's needed is the fundamental framework, the footings if you will, of this brand new building we're creating around collision repair. I think this can also be a model that could be applied to people in the related collision repair industry, the glass industry, in this province. Perhaps there are some models here we can modify to deal with mechanics, people who repair the engines. Many consumers have come to me and suggested that perhaps that's an area we might want to expand to.

I would encourage the House to support this sooner rather than later, because we do need to get on with the job. There are people around here—

Mr Caplan: It's up to the House leader.

Mr Sampson: It's up to you to, I say to the member opposite. This is a private members' issue, it is called and surely your House leader will allow you the flexibility to deal with this as a private members' item. I am encouraging support of this item. I think it's the right thing to do. We have bridged traditional partisan positions in this House to get to the point we are at now. I think it's a tremendous statement of democracy in this Legislature that we have gotten so far on this one, and we can get to the finish line.

It's the right thing to do for consumers; it's the right thing to do for people who are in this business, watching today. We're talking about their livelihood. They are expecting things of us as legislators on this subject. I encourage the members of this House to work with me and the ministry, because that will be involved, in making this dream that we now have on paper here as a third reading item a reality for the people in this province.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Steve Peters): Further debate?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): The concept of this bill is one that is very supportable. There's an implicit criticism, though the member would not want to say this of course, that other consumer bills presented in the House by his own government did not include the provisions of this bill. It is unfortunate that he has had to introduce this bill himself rather than have the Minister of Consumer and Business Services introduce it. It just shows that sometimes when one part of the government is not functioning as he sees fit, that he is able to then find a way around that through the provision of the private members' hour on Thursday mornings and now a debate that's taking place in the House today.

What we have out there is an industry that has a lot of good people in it—the member has acknowledged that—a lot of good businesses, honest, reputable people who take a good deal of pride in doing the job they do, that job being repairing vehicles that mostly have been in some kind of collision, others that have had some problem that has caused the vehicle to be damaged in some way.

Everyone wants to ensure that when the repair work is done, it is done in a fairly priced manner and in a very competent manner by competent individuals working on the vehicle, that there's satisfaction on the part of the consumer, and of course the insurance company will want to be satisfied as well, because they're another player in this.

There are a few players involved in this. I was reading some remarks from Monte Kwinter, who was at one time the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, as it was called then, who was dealing with this and had made some comments. I don't see the date on this, but he was talking about Bill 186, so I'm sure it was this bill. He pointed out that there are a number of different groups of people who have a stake in this.

First and foremost, and I think the member points this out in his initial remarks, is the consumer, the person who is paying to get the service, the person whose vehicle requires repair. A second component is going to be the insurance company, which is often the entity that is paying for the repair. Third are the tow truck drivers, who are sometimes making the decision as to where the vehicle shall be towed. Fourth is the government of Ontario, which oversees this matter.

The complaints that the member has talked about and that prompted him to bring this bill forward are quite legitimate complaints. We all know some extremely reputable and competent companies that undertake this work, but we have also received as individual members of the Legislature, and simply as individual citizens in conversations, horror stories about the experiences some have had with repair shops, that the work was done in a very standard way, that there was an overcharge, that sometimes a vehicle was kept for an excessive period of time. There are complaints in some cases that insurance companies are going to quarrel over the kind of work that is done and whether they're going to pay for part or all of the work that is done. So there are many issues here to deal with.

The member also knows, and he would be interested in this in a former position he held, that there's a great problem arising out there in the field of insurance. My understanding is that the reinsurance aspect of the insurance industry is now charging the insurers a good deal of money for their premiums. I take it that the insurers must pay what amount to premiums themselves, and then they insure people at the front line. There is a concern that the reinsurers, for a variety of reasons, have hiked their rates considerably and that is now being reflected in rates across the province.

I raised an issue yesterday by means of a letter to the Minister of Health about insurance concerns for people who are delivering a service that is called a respite service. These are medical workers who visit homes where there are people with Alzheimer's and other kinds of dementia. They offer a respite to the people who on an ongoing basis, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, are caring for individuals who through no fault of their own have many problems and pose many challenges for the caregiver in the home. Their insurance rate last year, for instance, I think was $52. This year it is expected to go well over $500. These are people who make $9 or $10 an hour in that job. They can't be expected to pay the greater premium. The Ontario government obviously, through the Ministry of Health, will have to provide greater financial funding to this service to enable the people to do their job appropriately.

I'm not diverting from the bill. It just points out that there are so many areas now where we are encountering two things: first, the inability to get somebody to write an insurance policy for a particular area, and second, when they do write it, the extent of the premium. All of us have had our premium notices for our homes, where you own homes, and found they have gone up. I see mine has gone up well over $100 for a premium in a year. If you look at auto insurance premiums, they are going up. Premiums for virtually any kind of insurance are going up.

What is even more worrisome is the fact that not only are they going up, but many people are unable to obtain the coverage they want. Part of that is tied in to this bill. I think if the member's bill is put into practice, we will see an improvement there because all of the shops are going to be certified. He says in his bill that he wants all the shops and ultimately all the people who work in those shops to be certified professionals, people who are competent in the business, so that insurance companies will not be balking at having a vehicle sent to one particular shop and there's a quarrel between the individual and the insurance company, and then in the middle is the shop owner.

We will also eliminate, presumably because there will be a mechanism to police this, a problem that will exist, which will be the problem of overcharging, where people are given some kind of estimate and then ultimately it comes back and it's a higher cost. Second, the quality of work will be a matter at issue. If they are licensed, if they are certified, this reduces the risk of that happening.

I have to say that it is unusual for a member of this government to be looking for more regulation. It's refreshing in some cases. I don't think the member is presently a member of the Red Tape Commission. Heaven forbid they get hold of this bill somewhere along the way and attempt to gut it, because we have seen the work of the Red Tape Commission in many cases.

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): Ah.

Mr Bradley: The former Treasurer of the province dramatically indicates what can happen to a bill of this kind, and that is that the bill can be, shall we say, torn up, whether in a tangible or an intangible way. I wish the member well in avoiding the sharp teeth of the Red Tape Commission.

I well remember, and I know from conversations with people—I'll say in general because I never like to reveal the content of private conversations. There are people who have held the position of minister in the government, and still hold that position, who have not always spoken fondly of the Red Tape Commission and its meddling in the affairs of individual ministries. I am sympathetic to them.

Certainly the Ministry of the Environment, back in the days of the Walkerton tragedy, and particularly in the days of the dramatic cuts to the ministry and the change from public laboratories to private laboratories—I think we know from the testimony before Justice O'Connor and his commission on Walkerton that the interference and tampering of the Red Tape Commission had a chilling effect on that ministry when it came to ensuring there would be an appropriate regulatory framework put in place when the public laboratories operated by the Ministry of the Environment, with the very best of people in them, highly competent laboratories, were closed in favour of private laboratories and a proper protocol not put in place to ensure the protection of the consumer, of water in this particular case. So I wish the member well in that regard.

I am pleased that the president of the Collision Industry Standards Council of Ontario has endorsed this bill, saying, "The collision and auto body industry in Ontario appreciates the efforts of," the member "for bringing forward a bill that will protect the motorist public from unethical shops that provide unsafe repairs." So the association itself is not there to defend the bad actors.

It's always so unfortunate in business, when you have so many good people, so many reputable business people, that the reputation of an industry at large can be tainted by a few bad apples in that industry.

The member for York Centre, the Honourable Monte Kwinter in years gone by—we don't hold the term "Honourable" after we've left that position; it's not that we become dishonourable, it's just that they take the "Hon" out in front of our names. Federally that doesn't happen. In fact, if they've served in the cabinet, they can have "PC" behind their names. The member from Mississauga can have "PC" beside his name. Even though I was in the cabinet at one time, fortunately I don't have that. That stands, in that case, for Privy Councillor, not for Progressive Conservative. Heaven knows, we'd have to go a long way to find a progressive Conservative anyway, but I'm told there are a few in the government caucus still in existence.

Mr Caplan: Name names. Who?

Mr Bradley: The member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale claims that he is, but I notice that he has been—you can't use the word "shill" because that would be too condemning—the spokesperson for the polluters who don't like the Kyoto accord.

Mr Caplan: Is that Raminder Klein?

Mr Bradley: I've often say, when he rises in the House, "I see Raminder Gill and I hear Ralph Klein."

On some issues I would agree with Raminder more than I would with Ralph. On this, they seem to be on the same wavelength, unfortunately, and there's not a counterbalance from the Minister of the Environment to be able to hold back on this.

I would say as well, and this is a bit of a stretch, that the passage of this legislation would be good for the environment, because when they are repairing their vehicles, people are going to ensure that not only are they going to be up to safety standards, and that is paramount in this legislation, but also up to environmental standards. Their vehicle wouldn't be left in such a state that, for instance, it would have emission controls that would not be working appropriately. So I would certainly see an environmental component in this.

I notice there is an advisory board, called the collision repair advisory board, that will be established. It's going to include individuals who know the business. Unfortunately, I recall seeing that it says they're appointed by order in council, which means by the cabinet.

There are some members of the government agencies committee, of which I am chair so therefore I have to be neutral and not pass judgment—I was told that when I assumed the position. So I will say there are people on that committee who have suggested that the major criterion for being appointed to a government position is support in some tangible way for the government of the day. Many have been presidents of the Alliance and members of the provincial Conservative Party. Members on the other side, such as Marcel Beaubien, would tell me it's purely coincidence that 95% of the people have been supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party.

The fact that a large portion have actually tangibly sent a cheque before appearing before the committee as a person to be appointed has nothing to do with it. I'm sure the contribution made to the Conservative Party has nothing at all to do with the fact that they've been appointed by the government.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): If it's a Liberal, it's 100%.

Mr Bradley: Well, there are some appointments that are made, and I would hope they would be on the advisory board, of members of the Progressive Conservative Party that I think are quite appropriate. I don't think that being a member of the governing party—in this case the Progressive Conservative Party—should preclude anyone from being appointed to the advisory board.

However, I would hope that, in the spirit of the debate taking place in the Legislature this afternoon and the spirit in which this bill was introduced, critical as it is, by implication, of the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services for not bringing forward this kind of legislation, and ecumenical as this afternoon is, I would suggest that the member would want to ensure that those appointments to his advisory board are clearly non-partisan, or at least are very competent people in the field, that a donation to the Conservative Party is not an essential entrée to an appointment to this board—

Mr Beaubien: What about owning golf courses or parts of golf courses?

1620

Mr Bradley: That's something I'll have to think about. I'll have to think about that one. I don't want to get distracted. I've been trying to stay on the essence of the bill all afternoon, and the Speaker knows I've been trying to do so. Therefore, I don't want to talk about golf courses because I'd have to get into some golf courses in the North Bay area, and having—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Honourable member, it would be nice if you could come back to the debate at hand, please.

Mr Bradley: I will not mention—is it Ostrey?

Mr Caplan: Osprey.

Mr Bradley: I will not mention Osprey Links in North Bay, because I know it would be embarrassing to the member, and I know the other member for Mississauga and Brampton—Brampton, in this case—agrees with me entirely. I can tell. He's nodding now, either in agreement or nodding off, one of the two, at the scintillating speech that is being delivered on this bill this afternoon.

I think that advisory board's going to be important to lend credibility to this bill. We'll want to see top-notch people. The member, I think, has been wise by looking at the categories of people to be appointed in order to get input from all the people who are involved. I want to make sure that it's simply not another patronage home for Progressive Conservatives, members of the Alliance and others who are supportive of the government.

I also want to say that I'm glad to see there's a review component for complaints against certified collision repair shops, because people will say, "Well, OK. This excludes the ones who are not certified, so you don't have to worry about those in the mix." The member has been wise enough, I think, to include a review of complaints even against those who had been certified, because it's difficult on an ongoing basis to watch every aspect of the business. So there should be that mechanism open. I think good repair shops are going to welcome that. They'll be able to defend themselves if they feel that they have done an appropriate job and that the complaint is not valid. They would welcome the opportunity to be able to respond to that, rather than simply having somebody mumbling in the background about it and passing bad news along about the repair shop. It would be right out there to be dealt with in a quasi-public way, if not an entirely public way.

I see the minister is the one who "may ... decertify collision repair shops ... and refer matters concerning the collision repair industry to the advisory board for review and advice." That is a bit of power. One always hopes—and I'll tell you where this comes in—if you were to lower the amount of money that people could donate to individual candidates or political parties instead of raising it, as you did last time, and lower the amount that individual candidates and parties can spend in an election campaign, then this wouldn't be as big a component. Somebody said to me, who will remain nameless at this time, "Wouldn't you worry that one of the ways of getting certified, because it says the minister may certify, would be to make a sizable donation to the government?" I suggested this couldn't possibly happen in Ontario, but this person was not as confident as I that it couldn't.

I wish the member well in the implementation of this bill. I hope he keeps a watchful eye on the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services and his colleagues in the government caucus.

Mr Kormos: I am pleased for the opportunity to speak to this bill. I used to accuse the author of this bill of being in the back pockets of the auto insurance industry. Indeed, I used to tell folks that he was so deep in the back pockets of the auto insurance industry that he was spitting out lint. It's nice to see that he's come up for air for enough time to come to the aid of small business people who have been victimized by the auto insurance industry in the same way that the auto insurance industry continues to victimize innocent victims and premium-payers across this province.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Look, we didn't have a chance to debate Bill 198. The government made it quite clear it wasn't going to go to committee because hidden away in Bill 198 were some of the most egregious attacks on innocent victims that this province has witnessed—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Well, they were—all dictated by the auto insurance industry, speaking into the Dictaphone. I don't know whether it was the author of this bill, because he was the member of the government caucus who did the consultations—he was their mouthpiece here in Queen's Park. I don't know whether he sat on their laps while they were giving dictation, writing it down in longhand and typing it out, or whether we got it via e-mail.

But it's refreshing to see the author of this bill finally understand that the auto insurance industry is not the consumer's friend, that the auto insurance industry has been scamming and scheming its rate payers for decades in this province—the auto insurance industry, with its short arms and deep pockets; the auto insurance industry which is oh so efficient when it comes to collecting premiums and oh so eager to ensure that it's done properly, but, oh boy, when it comes to paying out benefits, all of a sudden they become recalcitrant, to say the least. And part of the process has been the sweetheart deals the auto insurance industry has had with selected collision shops, the deals meaning that insured vehicle owners are required to take those vehicles to those shops. New Democrats stand firmly with the proposition that the owner of a vehicle, once that vehicle is in a collision, should be able to choose the collision repair place, the one that they have confidence in, the one where they have a rapport with the—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Whoa. Don't get ahead of yourself. So far, so good.

Mr Sampson: I only trying to help you, Peter.

Mr Kormos: Trust me, Mr Sampson, I neither need nor want your help when it comes to the auto insurance industry. You've helped too much. My premiums, like everybody else's in this province, have gone up 10%, 15%, 20% since this government came into power. This government passes more sweetheart legislation in Bill 198, and the auto insurance industry says it's going to help control costs. They get their legislation, but they're also promising double-digit premium increases, notwithstanding the legislation. Those guys are crooks and you're a collaborator. If those guys are the bank robbers, you're driving the getaway car. Here we've got small business people who know what it's like to have to take on the big auto insurance industry, to effectively be blacklisted by the industry.

You see, what happens is that the auto insurance industry, which could give a tinker's damn about the welfare of its insureds, has been, among other things, ensuring with its sweetheart deals with select collision shops, that consumers are forced to take, let's say, substandard glass, windshields. Am I right? That's what's happening. When you've got the auto insurer saying, "No. No. No. We get to choose who the repair shop is," you end up getting some Saran Wrap in that window in front of you or behind you instead of something that meets the minimum standards to the original manufacturer's equipment.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: I don't give a tinker's damn about any glass supplier that's putting Saran Wrap in, because I want my windshield or my rear windows—because, as you know, Mr Sampson, the windshield is an integral part of the structure of the vehicle.

Mr Sampson: Especially your Corvette.

Mr Kormos: Yes, especially when you drive a North American car that's a little exotic. From time to time I've had occasion to borrow friends' sports cars. They've let me drive them. I remember one of them was a convertible. I got to borrow it for an afternoon, and it was nice. I concede it was nice.

One of the problems that I've got, though, is that a lot of tinkering went on in committee, didn't it? Be careful, folks. Don't read the bill as it was presented at first reading. Read the bill as it flowed out of committee.

The bill, I am confident, will serve consumers. Most importantly, it'll protect those small entrepreneurs who are out there, yes, like the folk up there. I've talked to some of them on the phone who've been gracious enough to telephone me or write me with their views regarding this bill and the propositions contained in it.

1630

But I've got a little problem, because in the original version of the bill, the Insurance Act was amended, basically telling an insured that he or she could have a repair performed at any certified collision repair shop. So be it. We understand the need for the certification. It's to prevent unqualified fly-by-nighters, let's say, from doing jobs, charging the insurance company and then everybody getting scammed. I understand the industry has no quarrel with certification. Let's make sure that we understand the certification is going to be fair and accessible and not overly expensive.

But I don't know if everybody read how the government amended this bill in committee. Here is a little bit of caveat emptor.

Mr Bradley: You mean it has changed?

Mr Kormos: Oh yes, it's changed. The antennae should be ascending.

Mr Sampson: Those changes actually were brought forward by you guys.

Mr Kormos: Oh no, not this one, brother. Take a look at where it qualifies the right to take your vehicle to a collision repair shop of one's choice "subject to any rules that may be made in regulations under subsection (3)." Yikes. You see, the first version of the bill is clean. You've got the right: bingo, bang on, done and over with. Mr Sampson, that wasn't an NDP amendment.

Mr Sampson: Yes, it was.

Mr Kormos: No, it wasn't. That wasn't an NDP amendment. "Subject to ... regulations under subsection (3)"—the problem is that those regulations are going to be made behind closed doors, in secret.

Look, I've got to give the author of this bill some credit, but my fear is that he won't be around when those regulations are made. What if he's not with us? What if he has taken an appointment to the Senate? What if Mr Sampson has gotten a job with a high-priced international banking operation? What if Mr Sampson gets a job as a cowhand on a spread down in Oklahoma? Any number of things can happen, because Mr Sampson is connected, Mr Sampson knows powerful people, knows important people. Mr Sampson is close, a seatmate, with people who pull strings around here.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough Centre, come to order.

Mr Kormos: So I'm just warning everybody, a little bit of caveat emptor: "Subject to ... regulations under subsection (3)." That causes me some concern. At this point we have to, I suppose, take what we've got and hope for the best, which is all too often the case. But I want to wish the participants in the industry the best.

Mr Bradley, what's that fellow's name down in St Catharines, the Red Tape Commissioner type of guy?

Mr Bradley: Frank Sheehan.

Mr Kormos: Frank Sheehan, yes. He used to be well known down there. Did he run against me?

The Deputy Speaker: Order. If you want to ask a question of somebody else and give up your time, go and do it quietly and we'll go to some other. Other than that, we won't tolerate it, and we won't have questions answered out loud in the House either.

Mr Kormos: Speaker, I appreciate your firm hand in these matters. I invite you to throw people out who are heckling me from their seats. I will quietly stand by to permit you to do that, should the occasion arise, because it's unsettling for me to have people speaking while I'm speaking. I find that a distraction and most disturbing. Thank you, Speaker.

This didn't come from the Red Tape Commission. I have no two ways doubt about it, not in a million years. You see, the Red Tape Commission doesn't believe in fettering the hands of the of the big corporations. Mind you, the Red Tape Commission believes in tying the hands of the little guys and gals, of little business people. The crux of this is recognizing that the market out there works but doesn't work for the little operator; that the market out there can generate a whole lot of profit, but at the end of the day, a Wal-Mart can come into town and shut down half a dozen hardware stores and small business people. It's the small business people who need the help. That's why governments are involved, Mr Sampson, in the process of regulation. That's what your bill acknowledges and appears to understand, and I give you credit for that.

I see a progressive bent in Mr Sampson that he quite frankly didn't have when he was first elected here. When Mr Sampson came here, he was a deregulator. It was, "Let the market prevail. Let the more powerful survive," this Darwinian economic perspective that somehow he had cultivated within him, perhaps due to his previous work culture.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. Sometimes there has to be a line drawn in the sand. I don't like it. I like the line to be a little wavy and so on, but you want to push the line over on to my toes. No way. If you want, I'll just make it that whoever says the next word other than the speaker will be out of here. You've given me the job of making sure that there's decorum in this House. I want to do the job that you've given me to do.

The Chair recognizes the member for Niagara Centre.

Mr Kormos: Thank you very much, Speaker. The member who authored this bill was testing the Speaker, pushing the limits. I want you to know I'm on your side in this matter. I support you entirely in the exercise of your discretion, should you decide to throw him out. I wouldn't blame you in the least. I, as Speaker, wouldn't put up with this sort of stuff, either. It's an assault on the traditions of this House.

I do note that Mr Sampson—and I trust that it's in no small part due to his intimate dealings with the auto insurance industry. He came to this chamber as a hardened libertarian right-winger: "Let the markets prevail." Darwinian capitalism, "If you end up disappearing as a result of the might of the big guys, too bad, so sad." It's the old Hula-Hoop syndrome that his leader, to whom he was very faithful, Mr Harris—that is, Mr Sampson was very faithful to Mr Harris, and Mr Harris awarded him appropriately. Here is Mr Sampson, this libertarian right-wing capitalist, who now has come a long way, who now is more sensitive to the fact that big corporations use their weight and their might to snuff the life out of the little guys.

I have no doubt that Mr Sampson, the author of this bill, acquired that bent from his dealings with the insurance industry. He has been courteous enough to them not to divulge any of the confidential information that they shared with him. I wouldn't expect him to be anything less than discreet. But boy, if I had been a fly on the wall in some of those meetings and seen the insurance industry and heard them giving marching orders to Mr Sampson, playing with him like one plays with a marionette, bidding him to do their will, whether he agreed or not—because it wasn't just a matter of him serving their interests. They felt as if they owned him.

Now here we are today with Mr Sampson displaying far more charity to the little guy than we would ever have seen from him however many years ago. How many years ago was it, Speaker, that Mr Sampson got here?

The Deputy Speaker: Seven.

Mr Kormos: Some seven years ago now.

We have my colleague from Sault Ste Marie, Tony Martin, who understood what it was about if you're a small business person. That's why Tony Martin has been fighting for fair franchise legislation in this Legislature just darn near about as long as he has been here—first elected in 1990. It's nice to see that more than a little bit of Mr Martin has rubbed off on Mr Sampson. It's nice to see that Tony Martin has influenced not only his colleagues in the New Democratic Party but that he has also—Tony Martin is a progressive. He's a left-winger. He's a person who believes that we live as a community, that we have to work with each other, that we have to share our burdens if we are going to enjoy any successes.

1640

Mr Martin has been a champion for small business, and it's nice to see that Mr Martin's admittedly left-wing bent has had some significant influence on Mr Sampson. Why, Mr Sampson, I see now, is almost in tears upon his reflection of the conversion that he has undergone. He's silenced by the immensity of the realization that he has made perhaps a 180-degree turn in his life. He's making efforts to speak, but he can't. He's so moved by the fact that this conversion is being recognized; I believe in some circles it's an epiphany. It's fascinating to see Mr Sampson silenced, choked up perhaps by understanding that he now finds himself on the left. I want to welcome him. It's about time. Lord knows, people like Tony Martin and other New Democrats have been fighting alone for small business people too long. It's nice to have allies. It's nice to see people come over to our side, in our support and advocacy for small business people.

In encourage the industry to play an active role—

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): You want his side?

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Kitchener Centre, come to order.

Mr Kormos: Are you going to throw him out?

I encourage small collision shop operators to insist on playing an active role in the drafting of the regulations. The bill to date shows a marked improvement for the status of those small collision shops. I want to indicate that in my instance from time to time, when I need bodywork, I use my local Chev dealer, David Chev Olds down in Welland. I have never had an insurance claim yet, thank goodness, because if I had, Lord knows I wouldn't be able to afford the premiums. One claim, even if it's not your fault, and the insurance industry will basically pull the tires off your car, or you end up paying three times over for the work they perform. But I use David Chev Olds and it happens to be a unionized shop, which is one of the attractions. I know there are good workers in it.

But I also know other small collision shop operators down where I come from in Niagara region whom I would trust as readily, who I know have been excluded from the opportunity to do collision repairs, whether it's a windshield that's gone—look, I'm a fan of the independent operator, the small owner-operated business, because those men and women in those small owner-operated businesses work incredibly hard. They work 40-, 50-, 60-, 70-, 80-hour weeks; they don't have vacation pay, the whole nine yards. But as owner-operators of small business, they contribute to the community economically. It's that work in that shop that sends kids through college and university. I'm a fan of those types of operations.

Let's be vigilant and make sure, when the critical part is reached, the drafting of the regulations, that those regulations are as consistent with the bill as we would hope they are and that those regulations remain true to the spirit of the bill. This is an anti-auto insurance bill, no two ways about it. I'm proud to join with Mr Sampson in taking on the auto insurance industry. I welcome him as an ally in this critique of the auto insurance industry and in the understanding and recognition that they're a greedy gang. The auto insurance industry is a greedy gang that'll rob you blind if you don't have regulations protecting the consumer. This is that very sort of regulatory regime that protects consumers, that protects the small business people who otherwise would have been squeezed out. If the regulations are done right, this can end up being a good thing for everybody here in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: I just wanted to use an example, if I could, from the member from Niagara Centre about, I think it was socialism rubbing off, but it's also directed at those from the centre. I'm addressing my remarks particularly, I think, to the member for Mississauga Centre and the member for Kitchener Centre. I want you to try to use that example of influence from the member for Brampton Centre.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I am somewhat surprised that with all the government members who are in the House right now, there's no other government member who would lend support to this good private member's bill. I applaud Mr Sampson, as he's known in private members' business, for bringing this kind of legislation forward. It's very progressive legislation. I think the fact that he hails from my hometown of Kingston, which we all know to be a very progressive community in this province, may have something to do with it. It may have something to do with his upbringing in the Kingston area, where I know his family has always played a very prominent role and where he is well regarded. That may have something to do with it, whereby he has finally left those ultra-right-wing views he had when he was minister of privatization.

We all remember those days. I think the only things he ever privatized as minister of privatization were a number of tree farms, if I remember correctly. I don't remember the exact terminology. That was the only thing that was actually privatized. When it came right down to it, he stayed away from the LCBO. He stayed away from TVO, which is a good thing now. What would the Premier's life partner be doing if TVO were privatized? She probably wouldn't be the chair of that illustrious organization. He has come to his senses and has brought forward a very progressive bill. I pay tribute to him for that, because it's quite obvious that that is a result of the very progressive upbringing he had in the very progressive community of Kingston.

Remember, Kingston is the oldest settled community of Ontario. It was the capital of Canada for three years, back in the 1840s. During that period of time, many of the beautiful limestone buildings that we enjoy in our city, both public and private, were built with the great expectation that we indeed would become the permanent capital of Canada. Events intervened, mainly the threat of an American invasion from the south. As a result, Fort Henry was built to protect us from the Americans. But in fact what happened was that the capital was moved first to Montreal and later to Ottawa. Now we have Fort Henry, to which both the federal and province government after much urging have now committed some funding to have the fort restored. The irony is that Fort Henry now welcomes—probably about 80% to 90% of the visitors that come and visit there annually are Americans, and the fort was specifically built to protect us from the Americans. We welcome them all. I'm diverting. I should be speaking about the bill and I will get back to the bill.

I find it very interesting that this is a private member's bill, the third private member's bill that has been called before the House this week, and I think they should be called. I'm a great believer in that private members have a lot of good ideas. When their ideas are endorsed in this House by way of second reading debate, and then it goes off to committee and comes back here, it should almost be a fait accompli: once a bill has been given second reading and has gone through committee and the committee has endorsed those recommendations by way of amendments, the bill should come back here as a matter of course. The irony is that of the three private members' bills that have been called back into this House for some sort of determination, every one is a government member's bill.

We had the double-hatter bill that was voted on today, a bill that probably led on Monday evening to the most interesting debate we've had in this House in a long, long time. There were members from literally all sides of the House who had different opinions about it. It replenished my belief in democracy, that you could have a very controversial bill about which there was division within the various parties in this House, except for the New Democrats, who were against the bill. Other than that, there were members on both sides of the House who had various opinions about it, and that's good for democracy. That's the kind of debate you get on a private member's bill. Finally, we had a vote on it.

Good for Mr Arnott for bringing it forward. His bill wasn't approved, but more power to him.

Interjection.

Mr Gerretsen: I voted against the bill because I did not think it was the way to go. But as I stated to him earlier, I think he should continue to put pressure on the government to put a task force together so that the issues can be talked about some more and maybe some refinement can come out of that. I'm all in favour of that.

That was a government member's bill. The second government member's bill was what we refer to as the puppy mill bill. It was debated here at some length yesterday—also a government member's bill. And here we have the third government member's bill that has been called forward. There are many other bills that deserve to be here as well.

I give full credit to Marilyn Churley of the New Democrats for bringing back her adoption bill. I know there are many people in this House who feel differently about it, but I think that bill should be called for debate and we should vote on it, in exactly the same way we did on the Arnott bill. And while we're on the topic, I think my Bill 5, the Audit Amendment Act, should be called back as well.

We're dealing here with a government that likes to build its reputation on the notion of accountability. It was talked about by Premier Eves back in 1996 when he was finance minister. He said, "We're going to make amendments to the Audit Act so that there can be a level of accountability for the money that's being spent here, whether it goes to universities, hospitals, colleges, school boards or municipalities. We want to give the auditor the power to follow that money to those grant recipients." It was a notion that was brought forward by a government member back in 1996, after Mr Eves's own government was unwilling to move on a recommendation he had made in his throne speech.

Then we come to 1999, after the election. What's the first meaningful thing that was mentioned in the throne speech after that? It was that the government was going to pass a Public Sector Accountability Act. It's not quite the same as amendments to the Audit Act, because under the Public Sector Accountability Act the different ministries were going to hold the grant recipient of the funding that was going to go to these various sectors. I mentioned before more accountable to the ministries. I think it should be more accountable to the auditor, because he, after all, is an officer of this assembly and serves all sides of the House, or the individual members, from an independent viewpoint in that regard. So that's what I think should have happened. What happened to the Public Sector Accountability Act after it was announced in the throne speech and after it was introduced here? It died by the wayside.

Now we get to my bill, which was introduced the exact same day the new session of Parliament started, in April 2001. I said, "Look, you want public sector accountability. Pass my amendments to the Audit Act." The reason I felt they should be passed is because two thirds of all the money we spend here in this House, all of the taxpayers' money, money that we collectively collect from the taxpayers, is given out to the grant recipients. So we had a debate on it here one day during private members' business. It was unanimously approved on second reading and it went to committee. There were various amendments made at committee, just this past November, again unanimously approved by everyone. So now it's ready for third reading debate. Is it here? Will it be called for debate? Will it be passed by this House? I don't think so.

I know the government House leader and other members get a little upset when I say it seems to me that the only bills that get called here are government members' bills and not opposition members' bills. That, I think, is completely and totally regrettable. I realize full well that the government has to live with the consequences of whatever bill is passed here. There's no question about it. They, after all, have to implement whatever it calls for in that bill. So if there is a problem with my bill, let's hear about it. It certainly didn't come up during second reading debate. It certainly didn't come up in committee. Why is the government blocking greater accountability to the taxpayer of Ontario by not passing Bill 5, or not putting it on the order paper, or not calling it? I'd like to know that. I think, personally, that the government wants to have it both ways: they want to talk about accountability but they really don't want to do anything about it.

In any event, I'm not going to talk about that any further. I will just simply hope that the government will call the bill between now and, I guess, Thursday, although I understand now we may be sitting on Friday as well. We welcome the opportunity to sit on Friday. We may be sitting next week as well. I think the longer an assembly sits, the better it is for everybody. The more opportunities we have for question period, when we can ask the questions—we don't always get the answers, but at least we can ask the questions. As they say, it's question period; it's not necessarily answer period.

I remember a couple of years ago, I think we sat until December 23, and I welcome that. The pages may not like it. Some of the other people here may not like it. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Energy certainly doesn't like it, with what's been happening in his portfolio. We could be speaking for the next week and a half just about what's happening to energy and to the poor people of Ontario. They didn't know whether they were coming or going as far as their electric bills were concerned.

We welcome the opportunity to sit, and if they want to call us back in the first week of January, we'll be here. We'll have the questions. Of course, the difficulty is always that we may have the questions, but we hardly ever get any answers. That's why it's called question period and not answer period.

Interjection.

Mr Gerretsen: Mr Spina, the member from Brampton Centre, totally agrees, and he thinks it's funny, but the people of Ontario out there want answers to the questions that are being raised here. They want to know why you have short-changed our education funding by the $1.8 billion that Dr Rozanski talked about today in his report.

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I thought we were discussing the auto body bill, not the education report.

The Deputy Speaker: That is a point of order, and you're absolutely right.

Mr Gerretsen: I will talk about this bill, because this is, as I said before, a very important piece of legislation. But it's kind of interesting that they don't want to talk about education and the underfunding. They don't want to talk about the underfunding and the long line-ups that we have in our hospitals. They don't want to talk about doctor shortages. All you want to do is talk about your government members' private bills. They think this is all right. The good ideas that come from this side of the House and that have been embodied in legislation by way of second reading and have gone to committee—whether it's the adoption bill of Ms Churley, which should be called here, or whether it's my Bill 5 that should be called because it's gone through committee—you don't care about. Let's have all the bills. Let's have a free and open debate. It's good for democracy to talk about these things.

This is a progressive piece of legislation. There's absolutely no question about it. Small business needs help, and I'm very pleased to see that Mr Sampson has come up with this bill. I still think it has a lot to do with his upbringing in such a fantastic community, the community of Kingston, where I come from. It's a progressive community. Finally, these ultra-right-wing views he held as Minister of Privatization he has now overcome. He is now a private backbench member of the again. He is no longer cloaked with this notion, "We've got to advance the right-wing agenda," and he's actually come up with some good ideas. This bill embodies one of those ideas.

I'll just read to you and to the people out there what the purpose of this bill is: "To further highway safety by promoting the proper and efficient repair of automobiles that have sustained structural or body damage." Who can possibly be against that? Nobody. It goes on to say, "To protect consumers from dishonest, deceptive and fraudulent practices in the repair of such motor vehicles." Excellent terminology: nobody wants to be deceived by fraudulent or deceptive practices. "To provide a fair marketplace for the collision repair industry and those who have an interest in it.... To implement a regulatory framework"—whenever I see the terminology "regulatory framework" I get a little bit worried, and the reason is that, as you know, we only pass in this House the broad, general framework of any piece of legislation. How it is actually implemented on the ground is by way of regulation.

It seems to me that in the seven years I've been here, we see more and more incidents where the laws we pass are in such general terminology that it leaves great regulatory powers to the cabinet and to the minister in charge to actually implement the piece of legislation. You know the old expression "the devil is in the details." This is a perfect example of that. How this will be implemented remains to be seen, because the irony of this whole thing is that even though I totally support a bill like this, it is going to cause—this may come as a surprise to the members on the other side—more red tape. The more regulations you put in, or the more licensing requirements you have for any kind of shop you set up under this kind of legislation, it is going to require more regulation and more red tape. It may be good red tape, and I think it is, and I hope the regulations that will be passed will be beneficial to all concerned, but it is more red tape. So this notion that all red tape or all rules and regulations under whatever act we're talking about are bad for the system is rubbish as far as I'm concerned.

There may be some very good laws out there where you need some good, strong, tough regulations to implement that law. Let's hope that happens in this particular case. But when I see terminology such as, "The Lieutenant Governor in council"—which is the cabinet basically—"may make regulations setting out rules for the purpose of this act," that's pretty broad; that's about as broad as it gets. I know somebody on the other side will say, "That's the standard terminology," but I think that if we were to limit it a little bit more—of course the best thing that could possibly happen would be if all the regulations were, in effect, published before they were actually put into regulatory form, so that the industry and the people affected by it, the consumers, could have some input into the system. That to my way of thinking is the ultimate, the best possible way.

In other words, what would be wrong with the government saying, "We intend to implement these regulations. However, if you have any comment on them"—they could post it on their Web site. They could send it out to the repair shops they know about that are already out there and, let's say, give them 30 to 60 days to respond as to what the practical implications of a particular regulation may be. Then they could take a look at it again in the ministry and say, "Yes, we should make some changes to this before we actually implement these regulations." If they did it that way, then at least the industry would have an opportunity to respond to it, which we don't have right now. We don't have any guarantees at all that the industry will be able to respond to it. I can see from the attention the members are giving to what I have to say here that they're really wrapped up in this issue as well.

Mr Speaker, in the last 50 seconds that I have, let me just implore you: you are a very honourable Speaker. You have been very fair-minded in your rulings over the years. I would hope that you will have some influence on the government House leader over the next day and a half. Let's bring more private members' bills forward, the ones that are ready for debate at third reading. But let's not just pick the government members' private member's bills; let's bring all the private members' bills forward. Let's debate them all, like we did today with the double-hatter bill, and let's vote on them.

That is true democracy, and if there's anything this place needs a little bit more of than what we've all witnessed here over the last five to seven years, it's democracy.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm going in rotation. I'm looking at my right; that's your left and that's because we're facing the opposite direction. If I don't have a speaker here, just bring the noise level down a little bit; it will help me out a lot. I'm looking to my left; that's your right. If I have a speaker here, I will recognize the member for Essex.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: You stand corrected. I was right. That is, the only time we don't go in exact rotation is when the time is divided. I'm looking to my left for a speaker. The Chair recognizes the member for Essex.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): I too am pleased to stand today to speak to Bill 186. I'm also pleased to have had a small part in bringing this bill to third reading. I was on the committee that reviewed the bill. I was pleased—and I will cover it in my comments—that there were even a couple of amendments to the bill that I proposed that were accepted by the government. That is a rarity, just like it is that we're standing here today debating this private member's bill, because rarely in the nine years that I've been here have we seen very many opposition amendments adopted on a bill.

This bill is essentially a consumer protection bill. It's one that I think is going to go some way in regulating an industry that, for the most part, has given the people of the province of Ontario good service over the years. Like many professions, industries and businesses, there are always those who try to take advantage of someone. I'm pleased to say that in this particular instance, that certainly was the minority. This bill will give those who are in the business and who are qualified and who are good, solid business people the opportunity to further their businesses in a good, competitive manner.

We talk in this bill, if it's passed, about certified collision repair shops. It means "a collision repair shop that has been certified by the minister in accordance with the regulations." As my colleague from Kingston and the Islands just alluded to, if there were a fault with the bill, it's the fact that much of what this bill is going to end up doing is going to be contained in the regulations. I would hope that the government consults, to the extent that they have on the bill itself, with the industry, with collision repair shops, with those with experience, so that the regulations, when they are written, will certainly have the objective of enhancing this bill.

Collision repair: I think we have to recognize that there are different types of repair shops. There are those that make minor repairs that may not amount to any more than taking out the dents and scratches and repainting a vehicle. There are repairs like, as was mentioned earlier, replacing damaged windshields. But in this case, we're speaking about repair shops that will carry out collision repairs that are identified in the bill as repairs that are needed as the result of:

"(a) collision with another vehicle,

"(b) collision with the roadway or any object on the roadway,

"(c) an act of theft or attempted theft,

"(d) fire, or

"(e) vandalism."

That, then, covers those repairs that are required to automobiles and vehicles that go to the structure and safety of the vehicle.

1710

That's one of the reasons I'm able to support to this bill, because it will in fact result in vehicles that are repaired as a result of collisions being safer on our highways. In fact, it's mentioned in the bill that it is "to further highway safety" and "to protect consumers from dishonest, deceptive and fraudulent practices in the repair of such motor vehicles."

As I say, it's unfortunate that too often we have to bring in legislation and regulations and we have to have rules and red tape because we have to guard against that minority who might be dishonest, deceptive or fraudulent in their practices. This, then, sets up that regulatory framework that will allow the bill to do this.

I want to speak a bit too about the board that's going to be set up, in that this is going to be a self-regulatory part of the industry. The board that's being set up is to help the minister not only set the regulations and carry out the intent of the bill, but it will be able to advise the minister in those instances where it's required. There's going to be an advisory board of 10 members; four of them shall be persons who work in the repair industry. I think that's an obvious part of the board that we should appreciate. Obviously, when it comes to a self-regulatory industry, you have to have people who have the experience. The minister has to be advised by those who best know what is going to be done in the industry.

Four persons will represent the consumers of Ontario who do not work in the collision repair industry. That too I think is a good part of the board, because it brings to this board and brings to the minister when the board advises him the real feelings of consumers, who want the kind of protection we're trying to provide.

Two of the board members shall be employees of the government of Ontario. I can only assume, but one would expect, that these would be employees who would perhaps be from the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services, so that, again, the protection of consumers will be one of the paramount protections that we will have with this bill.

The advisory board, in its responsibilities, is going to "make an annual report to the minister concerning its activities, including an annual budget indicating the advisory board is self-financing, and make the report available to the public." I hope in that report will be contained some sort of indication of the satisfaction level the consumers of Ontario received. In other words, if this board and this legislation are functioning the way they should and if the regulations that are put to this legislation are appropriate, then I would think that there would be little complaint about the work that's being done by the certified collision repair shops. That is one of the objectives of this bill, so that we can assure the public that they're getting good value for the money that they spend, whether they spend it directly when they pay bills themselves or whether that money is spent through insurance companies.

Part of the board's responsibility, though—and as good as it might be and as good as the shops might be, we almost invariably will run into some complaints—is that this board can or will have the authority to review complaints against any certified collision repair shop. In reviewing those complaints, I would expect that the board will take into consideration how well these shops are serving the public, and, for example, if there are too many complaints against any one particular shop, that then will go toward determining whether that collision repair shop can in fact carry on business and keep its licence.

This board too will act as a clearing house for complaints and settling disputes as sometimes arise. As good as the shop might be and as much as it may attempt to satisfy the customer, we know that on occasion there are of course going to be, probably, some disputes between the customer and the collision repair shop. Therefore, the owner of the vehicle will have some place to go to express those concerns and hopefully have that dispute mitigated and handled by an independent, arm's-length adjudicator. Where it is of the opinion, after giving the proprietor of a certified collision repair shop a chance to be heard, that the repair shop should be decertified according to the standards set by the regulations, the board will advise the minister accordingly. I think that's extremely important. If we go to all of this effort, and certainly some expense, there should be penalties in place, and one of the most severe, of course, would be the fact that the shop may become decertified and subsequently suffer a significant loss of business.

When I mention expense, this bill, in carrying out its protection, in carrying out its mandate, won't be without some cost. That's something that we have to continue to follow.

As has been mentioned here earlier today in the debate, most of the work that's carried out by these collision repair shops will be carried out as the result of an insured accident, and we all know that insurance rates are a hot topic of discussion these days. As a matter of fact, just as an aside, this past August I got my own automobile insurance renewal. Just so the folks at home can understand that we are sensitive to these kinds of issues, I was anxious and interested to see what my insurance renewal would be this year, and I was horrified when my insurance went up 46%. That was without any change in risk; in other words, there were no accidents or tickets or any claims that I'd had on my policy. That was the same vehicle; I'm driving a three-year-old vehicle that's just getting older all the time. Yet my insurance went up 46%. So my first reaction was, "Obviously this insurance company doesn't want my business." So I go to my broker and I say, "Look, there has to be somebody out there in the insurance companies that you have access to within your company who does want my business and who won't charge such an exorbitant"—

Mr Gerretsen: What did he say? Did he say no?

Mr Crozier: What happened was—my friend from Kingston and the Islands asks—he didn't say no. He went to his market and, lo and behold, could only save me $100 a year on my new premium. I'm not about to change insurance companies for $100 a year, because I have had good experience with this company. Some might suggest that the premiums I was paying were too low and that this company was just catching up. We've heard a bit about that in the insurance industry, and there is a lot of upward pressure on insurance rates for several reasons. It was mentioned earlier that one of them is the reinsurance market. It may be difficult to understand, but very briefly, the reinsurance market is where insurance companies go to insure the risk they have. They lay off some of that risk in the reinsurance market. Another cause for this, we are told, is the significant upward pressure on the cost of accident benefits and the fact that there is a significant amount of fraud in the area of accident benefits.

My point here is that, as good as this bill is, I would caution the people of Ontario that it will come at some cost, but we hope it's a cost benefit, because we hope you get better service for your dollar.

During the hearings there was some concern from the insurance companies that have preferred shops that they would not be able to continue on in this. I was anxious to hear from those companies because we want to work with them to provide the very best insurance we can in Ontario. We understand that they too want to keep their costs down. I would hope, and I hope this is not a vain hope, that when those costs are reduced, they pass them on to the consumer. But under this bill, the insurance companies can still list preferred shops. They will have to be a certified collision repair shop. They can still have a preferred shop, but the consumer really has the last say, and provided the consumer is going to a certified collision repair shop, the consumer can go to the shop of their choice.

As part of that right of the consumer, there is in this bill a Motorist's Bill of Rights. When the motorist takes the vehicle to a certified collision repair shop, there are some things they have a right to know and that will have to be right in the estimate documentation they get.

"At the time of providing an estimate to a customer, every operator of a certified collision repair shop shall provide every customer with a copy" of this bill of rights, and it "shall contain at least the following elements:

"1. A statement advising the consumer of his or her right to select a certified collision repair shop for auto body damage."

"2. A statement advising the consumer that an insurer may suggest that the work be done at a particular collision repair shop but may not require this work to be done at a particular collision repair shop."

The statement of consumers' rights will also have to advise the customer "of his or her right to be informed about whether the auto body repairs will be made with new original equipment parts, new aftermarket parts, or other types of parts." That, to me, is extremely important, because for what we pay these days, the cost of these things, as a consumer I should at least be able to have some confidence and some choice in whether those are new parts or whether they in fact are used parts that come out of another vehicle that has been torn down.

I would suggest that in those cases where these are insured repairs, most consumers, if not all, will probably want to insist that they are new parts, notwithstanding the fact that there may be just as good quality aftermarket parts and/or parts out of other vehicles. But the consumer at least will know what they are getting. As I mentioned, not all collision repairs are paid for by insurance companies, so if the consumer is advised that they are aftermarket parts or parts out of another vehicle, the consumer may be able to reduce their cost in that respect.

In the last couple of minutes I have, the part of the bill that I want to emphasize, and the amendment that I appreciate was accepted, was that in the original bill it would have permitted that uncertified collision repair shops would have been able to carry on business. Once we got the definition in here of what a collision repair shop really is and once we amended it so that once decertified, that business couldn't carry on as a collision repair shop, I felt a lot more comfortable about this bill. If we're really going to give the consumer protection and if we're really going to give those good businesses the opportunity to work on a level playing field, I felt that it was necessary that if you weren't certified, if you didn't have the proper technicians doing the work, if you weren't a business that carried on in a fashion that you could be certified, you shouldn't be a business that can operate in collision repair at all, and that's what we have in this bill.

In concluding, I want to add to the comments of others that this is one of those too rare occasions where we've been able to work on a piece of legislation in a significantly unpartisan way. It's my hope, and we always live on hope, that we can see more legislation come forward like this. A big step in that direction would be, as my colleague from Kingston and the Islands suggested, that not all of the private members' bills that we're debating to this extent are government members' bills, but that the opposition does have that opportunity too.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill 186. At the risk of some of my colleagues falling out of their chairs and hurting themselves, I will advise you that I likely won't use all my time.

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): It's Christmas.

Mr Christopherson: An early Christmas present for my friend from Stoney Creek.

Let me just say in short order, in terms of the substance of the bill and what it attempts to do and what it actually accomplishes, that it's a good bill. I don't think there's a single one of us in this place who either hasn't personally experienced or known someone who's got a horror story in dealing with a repair shop. The fact that the leading proponents of this, outside of this place, are actual repair shop owners and representatives of associations that represent those shops says a lot about the industry itself and the fact that the overwhelming majority of them are honest, upright, legitimate businesses that provide a good service at a fair price. It's their desire to see a level playing field so that there aren't the fly-by-night shops and those who ignore the consumers and quickly go for the fast buck. And it's so easy to do, especially as cars become more and more complicated. It was always easy for anyone who wasn't too involved in auto repair to be sort of conned or spun in terms of the message of what's wrong with your vehicle but, boy, that's a lot easier to do now as the complexity increases.

So I think it says a lot that we've probably got a very few that are doing the damage and that the majority are prepared to come to us and ask us to provide a legal framework. Let's keep in mind that business as a rule, from Hamilton anyway, doesn't jump in the car and head down the QEW, come to Queen's Park and say, "Please, please, please, give us more regulation. We just don't have enough regulation. We want more, more, more." So the fact that they've taken that step says (a) that something needs to be done and (b) that they are prepared to put their reputation on the line and to use whatever political influence they can to bring about a bill that, yes, helps them, but helps them by virtue of the fact that the consumer is given more protection.

It seems to me that in the best design of our economic system, that's the way things ought to be, and this bill achieves that. There's always more that can be done, and time will tell when that will happen, but in terms of taking an important, significant step forward now and providing the initial legal framework—notwithstanding the fact that we don't know what the regs will look like yet—the legal framework that's provided here is of benefit to consumers. It's of benefit to those legitimate operations that want to lay down roots in our respective communities and provide jobs and provide investment into our community. That's what we're doing with this, in my opinion.

As chance would have it, I was the representative on the committee for the NDP caucus, and I want to spend just a few minutes talking about the process, more to make sure that it's in the history books and there for anyone who wants to take a look at when opposition members said, "This place can work." This was one of those few times. I want to say right at the outset of commenting on the process that Mr Sampson came forward to me. I have to say, given his previous portfolios, you wonder exactly what's at play here. I suspect that, given the fact we're both former corrections ministers, I was prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt. I heard him out. He told me what he wanted to achieve.

I've been around this place going on 13 years now, and I can remember days when you didn't have an agreement if it wasn't written down, every word. Even then, hours would be spent negotiating the words, commas and periods, and then all House leaders would have to sign off on it—

Hon Mr Clark: In blood.

Mr Christopherson: "In blood," says the Minister of Labour. Even then there were times the deal would have to be taken to the Speaker and asked if he or she would make an interpretation.

In this case, I was approached by Mr Sampson and asked to take his word about what he was attempting to do and the procedure he was prepared to follow. There was a bit of a leap of faith on my part, and I suspect on the part of my colleagues in the Liberal opposition caucus also, because there were no guarantees.

What we did was speed up the process, truncate it, and I literally went on the word of Mr Sampson that, if we got to a certain point in the process, having already given my acquiescence—and we identified that juncture—and there wasn't unanimous consent and continuing unanimity between the three parties, then I had the word of Mr Sampson that he was prepared to bring everything to a halt, we would take a step back, look at what the issue was and, if a compromise and an agreement could be reached, then we would move forward. If not, the whole process that we had started literally would stop, we would be back to square one and we'd look at the usual procedures.

I had some real trepidation because obviously for any one of us who does that, especially in the opposition, if things blow up and the government ends up taking advantage, if you will, and running with something, ramming it through, it's something your caucus is opposed to and you were the genius who helped to get the caucus into that predicament, you're in a lot of trouble, not to mention the fact that you would have facilitated a law that you strongly believed shouldn't be on the books.

I thought that Mr Sampson was a man of his word. I want to say that indeed he was. We did reach the point where there wasn't unanimity at that junction, and at that moment, had he wanted to, there was no rule I could call on to stop the government from continuing to ram it through. Mr Sampson, being an honourable member, said, "OK, I agreed with you that if we didn't have unanimity at this junction, we would take a step back," and we did that. Mr Kwinter, Mr Sampson and myself then spent the time necessary to work through those issues.

We reached agreement, put those agreements into play vis-à-vis the amendments that would come to the committee, put the whole thing back on track and moved forward. So I want to say to Mr Sampson that you are indeed a man of your word. I enjoyed the process. I can tell you, should any of you have the misfortune of having spent time in cabinet and then, in the blink of an eye, find yourselves in opposition, after a few years of that it's sometimes difficult to get excited about the process. When you're in the third party, you don't have any power and you have limited influence.

As an individual parliamentarian, I enjoyed the fact that there were the three caucuses with three individual point persons acting on behalf of their caucuses working together to try to find and create language that would let all of us achieve the worthy goals Mr Sampson had set forward, and we did that.

It wasn't without a little bit of consternation along the way. There were a couple of times when we locked horns on some issues, which is the nature of the beast in terms of drafting legislation, but in the end we were able to find common cause and the language that let us move to this point so that we now have legislation that is likely, as I understand it, Rob, to receive unanimous support of the House, certainly majority support from the two opposition caucuses and, I suspect, your own or you wouldn't even be at this point. I think that says a lot about what can happen in this place, that when we want to we really can act in a democratic fashion where your word means something, when you look somebody in the eye and say, "You've got my word on this," and that when even things don't go that person's way, they honour their word. It makes you want as an individual to say, "OK, let's roll up our sleeves and really get at this and see if we can find a way," because it's like oxygen. You don't often find that kind of willingness to work together.

I want to say that Mr Kwinter—I won't speak for him but I will say in terms of having worked with him—seemed to enjoy the process just as much. It really was a matter of give and take between all of us, recognizing what the goal was, the goal always being to protect the consumers and make sure that we've got the best auto repair industry that we can have in Hamilton. I know I was influenced by good advice. We had good advisers. People came in and they were good presentations all the way through. My friend and fellow Hamiltonian John Norris is here today. He has been very concerned about this and involved in making sure that we do the right thing so they can do the right thing. So, all in all, it's a good bill. I'm pleased to have participated. I enjoyed the process. I think we are making the province just that much better today as a result of hopefully passing this bill.

I want to close my remarks by again emphasizing the integrity and honour that Mr Sampson and Mr Kwinter brought to this. It was a joy, truly, to work on this project for the betterment of the people of Ontario. To be able to say that in a truly non-partisan way is about as close to the spirit of the season as I'm likely to feel between now and when we adjourn.

Upon seeing my friend the Minister of Labour clutching his heart in a feigned heart attack over some of my comments, I will now take my place.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I will be taking my 20 minutes here this afternoon because I have a lot of things I want to say with regard to this bill. In the context of this bill there's a whole lot that we need to consider as we look at this piece of public business before us here today. Anybody taking their job seriously, coming to this place, understands that that's the task in front of us.

I want to say at the outset that I don't think there's any guarantee yet that this bill in fact will see the end of the process in the way that the member who has brought it forward is anticipating, because it's a private member's bill and private members' bills by their very nature call on all of us to consider very carefully what's put in front of us. We're asked, in as much as we can, a non-partisan way to consider the issues and the material that's in front of us. Then each one decides whether it is we are in support of or whether we see that there is required further work on a piece of public business that's on the table.

We saw here this afternoon and over the last couple of days just such a very democratic exercise. The member from Waterloo-Wellington brought a bill before us that he felt very passionate about and committed to, put it on the table. It was debated at second reading in the Legislature here on a Thursday morning, and voted on at that point and moved forward in the process. There was committee time allocated. There was lots of consultation, certainly lots of lobbying from various groups on that bill back and forth in this place. As it unfolded, we began to see that in this instance there were those on all sides who felt differently about this bill. This afternoon we had the vote here, and we saw members of the Conservative caucus vote both for and against that bill. We saw members of the Liberal caucus vote both for and against that bill. In this instance, the New Democratic Party caucus were in harmony and solidarity in terms of our position. At the end of the day the bill lost. I think what it should do is indicate to the member for Waterloo-Wellington that he needs to go back to the drawing board, speak further with the people affected and involved to see if there isn't some other way of resolving this very controversial and difficult relationship that exists out there.

I'm actually happy to see this piece of legislation before us here today. Some of you who were here on the Thursday morning when it was first presented and debated will remember that I spoke to it. Our caucus at that time supported it going forward. My view hasn't changed since then; however, I do still want to put on the table, into the record, on Hansard, speak to the people in the chamber here this afternoon and to the folks across the province and explain to them how important it is that we in fact move to regulate some parts of the public business of this province.

We have a government that doesn't believe in regulation. We have a government that believes that if you simply turn things over to the marketplace, at the end of the day everything will find its proper depth or level, fairness and justice will work out and everybody will be protected and served appropriately. Well, we understand and know now, having spent a number of years under the rule of thumb of this government, pushed ever so aggressively with each week that goes by in a way that reflected a lesser and lesser role for government, lesser and lesser regulation in the province, more opportunity for the private sector—"big business and industry"—to dictate and take over more and more pieces of the life and activity that we all participate in, count on to provide us with a livelihood, to take care of us in our time of need and to give us comfort that our children will be looked after and that we will have something to rely on in our retirement and old age.

We've found, as we've watched the tumbling of big corporations like Enron and Bre-X and a number of other examples of private sector industry, corporations, their attitude in this country, in the United States and around the world—and we should understand now that there are some things and some parts of all of the sectors of society and life in our communities and in our province that need to be regulated. This is one of them.

I had the experience of working with small business over the last three or four years in a very direct and clear way when I brought forward regulation to rule or govern how franchising would unfold in this province, how the relationship between franchisees and franchisors should be restructured so there was some fairness and opportunity for everybody involved. In that instance it became more and more obvious to me and to small business across this province, as we went out for public hearings, that in fact there was a need for comprehensive, strong and enforceable regulation where small business and franchising was concerned in this province. And yet when the government finally agreed—and I gave tremendous credit at that time to Mr Runciman, the Minister of Consumer and Business Services, that he sat down and worked with me. But alas, the strong hand of cabinet and the Premier's office, influenced by their friends and colleagues in the larger corporate sector of our business community to say, "No, ease up here. Don't go too far. Yes, introduce some regulations but be careful that you don't interfere with the free market," with the ability of some of these large franchise systems to come into Ontario and, as they've often said, take advantage of it as if it was the Wild West and hurt, very seriously, many well-meaning, hard-working small business people who invested their life savings in some of those businesses only to find out that they were either stuck for life because of the investment they made that wasn't going to produce for them or generate for them the kind of return they had hoped for and thought they would get and would provide for them some comfort in their old age.

I would suggest that what we're doing here today by way of regulating this particular industry is not dissimilar from some of the concerns that were raised and then, ultimately, the work we were able to do in that respect. We were able to bring forward a very modest package of regulations where franchising is concerned. However, as it has played out now, the fact is that we didn't go the distance, we didn't have the political courage in this place to go the distance and truly regulate this industry and give some ability to some of those small business people who found themselves in disagreement with their parent franchisor to go to some arbitrator or board of mediation provided by government. They find themselves still having to go to court, having to endure the cost that that represents, and ultimately, at the end of the day, really, not being much better off than when we started.

As a matter of fact, and this is the warning that I give to those who are very excited and waiting in anticipation for this bill, is that you want to make sure you have everything you want here, that all the t's are crossed and all the i's are dotted, because in the franchising legislation it turns out that in some instances it might have been better had we not done it at all, given the little bit that we won at that time, because it presents a sense of comfort to small businesses out there, or to people who are looking at investing in small business out there, that somehow they are protected, that somehow there is regulation in place that's going to look after them, and if they get themselves in trouble or they find themselves in disagreement with the parent franchising corporation, that there is some facility for justice to be had and for fairness to have its day or have its way.

This, for all intents and purposes, is a good bill and should serve the industry well. As the member for Niagara Centre suggested earlier, it indicates to us one of those very few moments in the last seven years where in fact the government across the way understands the importance of small business and the small business investor in this province and is willing to do something other than simply focus on getting rid of red tape and regulation, is willing to do something to in fact put a regulatory regime in place that will protect and support the interests of small business people across this province.

I just wanted to, though, raise a flag of caution. I had suggested back in June when we discussed this bill on that Thursday morning that the folks in the gallery needed to ride gunshot on this, that in fact it wouldn't get back before us. Well, to give the member who brought it forward, Mr Sampson, the member from Mississauga Centre, some credit, he obviously stayed on top of it and so here we are, discussing it and debating it for third reading. However, I say to those who are watching this and who are anticipating its passing sometime in the not-too-distant future that they need to be concerned that the advisory group that is being formed in this instance continues to be a well-balanced operation, that the membership that is set out in the bill and that is hoped for in fact is the membership that finally ends up being who is at the table. In our experience, it's not too long into processes like this before a door or a window opens and we find that the big corporate interests again—in this instance it's often the big insurance companies—find their way to the table. If they don't find their way to the table, they find people to be at the table who will represent their interests. You end up no better off than you were in the first place, and in some instances worse off, because now you have this body that's supposed to protect you and act in your interests and isn't. How do you get rid of that? How do you deal with that?

I have a concern that this advisory group is to make recommendations to the minister, and then the minister will decide, I would think, if you follow the logic in this, how this industry is to be regulated. The minister has ultimate power and final say in what the regulations will be. You have to understand that when regulations are made around here, unlike the passing of legislation, it's done primarily behind closed doors by bureaucrats in consultation with their bosses, with the minister and his staff. How do you have influence? How do you make sure the advice you've given as an advisory body to the minister actually works its way through the process and is what comes out the other end at the end of the day to support you in your effort to find some fairness and justice here? It's a real concern. I'm not sure if it has been addressed yet by the government side. They will have an opportunity here this afternoon as we debate this, or later as it comes back before us again, to somehow ease my concern if they want to put some thoughts on the table.

It says here that the bill allows the advisory group to set the standards for the minister's approval. So if the minister doesn't approve, the standards you advise should be in place may not happen. It also goes on to say that the bill allows for the right to set standards, but does not specify what standards—back again to the power of the minister. It is expected the standards would be adopted, but it's not guaranteed the standards would be adopted, and that's a very real concern.

As you look at how the public business of this province has been ordered or reordered or restructured or reorganized over the last seven years, you have to understand why we, in this caucus anyway, become very nervous when, as is suggested in this bill, the final say is at the desk or the table of the minister. It's easy for anybody to do: you research who influences this government, who funds this government in terms of its ability to go before the electorate and run election campaigns, who it is this government sits down with over and over again to consult, to get advice from, to listen to. It's not the small business sector. It's not the mom-and-pop franchise operators, corner stores or small businesses, certainly in Sault Ste Marie, Sudbury or North Bay. It's not those folks this government sits down and talks with. It's the big corporate entities. It's the banks and the insurance companies that have their offices not far from here on Bay Street.

We know what their interest is. It's maximizing ever more generously their bottom lines, their profit margins, because it's no longer acceptable or accepted practice that a big corporation would simply make a profit at the end of the year. The big corporate entities that drive these small businesses in towns across this province are interested in increasing, improving on, the profit they made before. For example, if they made 10% or 15% last year, they not only want to make the same 10% or 15% this year; they want to make 10% or 15% on top of that.

How do you do that? Well, you do that by squeezing the little guy at the bottom end to produce ever more profit or to reduce his cost ever more aggressively. That, of course, at the end of the day ends up cutting into his profit margin. You end up trying to organize the industry such that you have people out there working for the least amount of money that you can get them to work for, and using businesses or folks who perhaps don't have the best of worker health and safety in mind.

As I said, I think this is a good bill. It goes a distance to allaying some of the concerns that both consumers and small business operators have where this industry is concerned. It has in it things that every caucus in this House could support, but I say that with the proviso, as I've already put on the record here this afternoon, that we need to be ever vigilant, that we need to be ever mindful of the track record of this government where small business and communities and people are concerned. We need to be mindful of the efforts, for example, of the Red Tape Commission as they go around this province trying to find ways to get government out of the life of communities and people and small businesses so that the private sector, à la big corporate interest, can have its way and improve its bottom line.

I think unions will be happy with this bill. Anything that speaks to improving environmental standards, anything that speaks to improving labour practices and workers' health and safety, they will be supportive of, and they will be supportive of us if at the end of the day we decide we want to support this bill. I suggest that we will.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I'm proud to be able to stand and speak to a private member's bill in a time other than private members' hour. You see, I believe that private members' bills are extremely important. They offer the individuals on all sides of the House the opportunity to affect policy, to put forth good ideas, to ensure that Ontario is a better place because of the ideas that you put forth through private members.

The bill that Mr Sampson has put forth is a bill worth considering. It's a bill that should be fully debated. It's a bill that certainly provides I would think a sense of security for the consumers in Ontario, but it's also going to provide confidence in the system. I think that's very, very important.

Let me speak a little bit about private members' business and how, by and large, we refuse as government or as this place exists to allow for private members' business to be fully debated. To be perfectly honest, Mr Sampson is very lucky to get his bill before the House today. The government ran out of things to call, so they started calling private members' business. The problem is that it's obviously slanted in the government's favour. They're only going to be granting private members' business that has been started by government members, and that's sad, because I think there are a lot of great ideas on all sides of the House worthy of open, frank, honest debate.

Mr Caplan: Like Bill 128.

Mr Bartolucci: My colleague David Caplan has mentioned Bill 128, the highway memorial bill. It was put forth by me. It's a bill that would name bridges after fallen police officers, police officers who have died in the line of duty. I think it's an excellent bill, but I dare say that if I were to ask for unanimous consent—and I'm not—there would be people on the government side who would say no, not because it's not a good idea, but because it's put forth by a Liberal and you can't have a Liberal getting all-party support on a private member's bill because that would send the wrong message. The reality is that it would send a very, very good message.

I know my time is up; I can't wait to finish my 16 minutes at another time.

The Deputy Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:45 tonight.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Evening meeting reported in volume B.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 11 December 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mercredi 11 décembre 2002

The House met at 1845.

VISITORS

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Just before we start, because we never know what's going to happen here in the evening, I'd like to welcome the cub troop that we have in the gallery today. They're very important people. They are the future leaders; there's absolutely no question. I'd like to commend those adults who are ensuring they are taught properly to be great leaders. Welcome to the Legislature, welcome to the debate you're about to see, and keep up the good work, leaders, cub members and scouts. Keep up the effort. Nice going.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): As you know, that is not a point of order, but welcome.

The government House leader.

Interjection.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): That was way out of order, but they're from Leaside.

Order M129.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DE PROTECTION DES ANIMAUX DE L'ONTARIO

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 10, 2002, on the motion for third reading of Bill 129, An Act to amend the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act / Projet de loi 129, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la Société de protection des animaux de l'Ontario.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I'll start where I left off at about six or seven minutes to 12 last night, when I began my remarks. Things have changed somewhat since then. I was talking about the need to bring in legislation to protect puppies, to protect animals, because we all know there's a problem out there. I also said that I didn't think the private member's bill that's being debated here tonight goes the distance to make that happen. I am not convinced this bill is worthy of support.

I also was talking last night about the need to protect people in this province. I was talking about the protection of puppies and the protection of people. Let me continue on that theme tonight. Here we are, debating a private member's bill tonight. We are debating the third government private member's bill tonight. This is the Ernie Eves Ontario now, the Ernie Eves who took over and said he was going to be a kinder, gentler Premier, that he was going to listen more to the opposition, the Ernie Eves who stood on his feet and said that Bill 77 should not be treated in a partisan way because it involves human beings.

That's the kind of Ontario we're in tonight. I'm standing here talking about cruelty to puppies. I applaud the fact that the bill is being called. I applaud, or I did applaud when the government said they were willing to call important bills from all parties.

I know that Bill 77 is controversial. I understand that. So was Bill 30. We debated it, we voted on it, it's done, it's off the table. We have not seen—

Interjections.

Ms Churley: Stop showing such disrespect for me. Let me tell you what I'm talking about here. This is what I'm talking about tonight. I'm talking about a report from the chief of genetics at North York General Hospital, Dr Philip Wyatt, who said this: "There are more than—

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My understanding is we're debating M129. She's off topic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): I'm sure the member will relate her comments to the bill we're discussing, but I would like to urge members to show a little bit of decorum and a little bit of restraint and understand we're here to do the work of the people.

1850

Ms Churley: I would say, don't tease the bears here tonight.

"There are more than 2,500 inheritable diseases. We now can emphasize that every individual must understand his or her medical background so that he or she may decrease his or her chances of suffering from a potentially fatal inherited condition such as breast or prostate cancer."

Did you know, talking about cruelty to animals and cruelty to people, that adult adoptees cannot access their own medical history until after they show symptoms of a fatal disease? How would you feel if one of your children had that at their feet?

"Current laws make it impossible for adoptees to take informed, preventive action. Without accurate patient information, doctors can misdiagnose illnesses and prolong suffering. Adoptees are dying because of this injustice, or unknowingly passing on conditions to their own children."

These doctors are calling for this Legislature to pass my private member's bill, which may I remind you, as we stand here talking about cruelty to puppies and animals—

Interjection.

Ms Churley: They're saying to me—everybody out there, a Tory just said to me, "Your bill is dead." That's what they're saying, and they're getting great pleasure out of this, let me tell you.

As we stand here tonight and debate a third government private member's bill—I notice that a few of my Tory friends are not laughing and teasing me. They look pretty serious about this, because they know I'm talking about a very serious issue here. I'm talking about a bill that received all-party support in this House, a bill that went to committee, a bill that's been languishing for over a year, the third bill I've brought forward to this House. I had the Premier say we could bring this bill forward along with other private members' bills from the Liberals and the Tories.

The first thing that happened is that the government House leader came and said, "We want to make a deal with you." Part of that deal would be Bill 30, along with four other bills from them, four from the Liberals and one from us, maybe two, but we only wanted one.

This is so vitally important to tens of thousands of people in Ontario. This bill is not about me. I found my son. I found him. This bill is about others who are suffering the results of having antiquated laws because this Legislature will not do the right thing. A few members over there are willing to get up and discuss cruelty to animals, or firefighters or small business legislation this afternoon, and I'm trying to bring forward a bill for a vote that has had incredible research. This is the third attempt I've made, and it had all-party support.

I'm telling you this bill is not about me. People say to me, "We admire your passion on this subject." This passion is not about me. This passion is about the thousands of people out there I've been working with over the years to try to help. They are desperate for the same compassion and fairness that Mrs Munro is trying to bring forward in a vote tonight in this House for animals.

Let me be very clear. I applaud the member for bringing forward something that deals with cruelty to animals. I have no problem with that. We should be debating it and we should be trying to resolve that issue. But for heaven's sake, the so-called deal that never was, that fell apart: we had nothing to do with it, but Bill 30's done. It's off the table. So the House leader comes to us today and says, "Let's talk some more." I want to say to the House leader that I appreciate that. I appreciate the fact you did that today. I know yesterday was a very difficult day for me. I had a talk with you and I had a talk with the Premier and with others. I appreciate the fact that the House leader came forward today and said, "Well, we've got a lot of government bills"—I believe they have up to 50—"the Liberals have some and you guys only want one, but let's talk some more." We said, "OK, let's talk some more. Let's see if we can find a way to deal with this and get Bill 77 called." We were being extremely co-operative because this bill is about real people, thousands of people who need this bill passed. In some cases, it's a matter of life and death. It really is.

I talked last night about a woman and her children who inherited a kidney disease that she didn't know ran in her biological family. By the time she found out—because she couldn't access her medical records—she had her three children. They all have that disease now too and they're all going to require kidney implants. Another woman is infertile, sterile, because she wasn't diagnosed early enough to have the preventative action taken to prevent that. These are just two examples. There are thousands of people in the same situation.

When you hear that there are 2,500 inheritable diseases—I can tell you from my own experience; when I had my child, I was a teenager. That's the case with the women I'm here trying to protect today and help, and the adult adoptees. We didn't know very much about our family history as teenagers. Many of us went away and had our babies in shame and secrecy; didn't even tell our parents. We didn't even know about what they knew at the time.

So these children grow up in adoptive families and they know nothing about their genetic background—nothing—and these terrible things are happening. Women are having miscarriages and they don't know why. People are suffering emotionally. Talk about cruelty—the cruelty of not passing this bill when we have an opportunity.

You know what the worst of it is? The majority of people in this Legislature support it. Seventy-five per cent of Canadians support it. A survey was just done; I have it here, a survey done by the University of Guelph. It's very accurate. Some of the government bills that are being called may not have majority support, just like Bill 30. It was a very controversial bill, a very difficult bill for us and for many others. It tore people apart in rural versus urban settings. But it was called, we debated, we voted on it. That's all I'm asking.

But do you know why the bill isn't being called? The bill is not being called because the majority of legislators here support it and because the bill would pass; because a few members sitting on that side of the House have some vehement opposition to it. I, frankly, don't understand what it's all about. If you read my bill—

Interjection.

Ms Churley: Oh, Brenda Elliott, the minister responsible, would like me to get back to puppy mills. Puppies are important, but so are people, the area you're responsible for. Minister, you have reviewed these documents and you know the suffering that's going on out there.

The Acting Speaker: I'd just like to remind the member that she needs to make her comments through the Speaker.

Ms Churley: I'm almost done here, Mr Speaker. What I'm going to do is tell the government this: there is still an opportunity to come back to the table and negotiate a deal here. But in the meantime, we are not playing ball here tonight.

I want everybody out there to know people are off at parties tonight, having their Christmas parties. So what I'm going to do now is move adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a half-hour bell.

The division bells rang from 1900 to 1930.

The Acting Speaker: Ms Churley has moved adjournment of the House.

All those in favour will please stand and be counted.

All those opposed will please stand.

Deputy Clerk (Ms Deborah Deller): The ayes are 12; the nays are 42.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The member for Toronto-Danforth has the floor.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to congratulate the whip's office and Lynne Demers for all their hard work in getting 42 members out.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: I guess it's going to be that kind of night.

The member for Toronto-Danforth.

Ms Churley: I say to people who might be watching and listening that you've just witnessed the power of the majority, the power of the dictatorship as we stand here tonight dealing with the third government—

Interjections.

Ms Churley: Oh my God, now they're taunting me because they don't understand the importance of why we're doing this tonight. We're debating the third government private member's bill and the government refuses to bring forward one New Democratic bill. They should be ashamed of themselves. They're actually enjoying themselves.

I'm now going to call for an adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1933 to 2003.

The Acting Speaker: Ms Churley has moved adjournment of the debate.

All those in favour will please stand.

All those opposed will please stand.

Deputy Clerk: The ayes are 10; the nays are 37.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Further debate?

Interjections.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Now he's driven Garry out of the House.

Hon Mr Baird: Don't say a bad word about my friend Garry Guzzo.

I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the bill presented by my colleague the member for York North. She is a tireless worker for her constituents. She fights hard on every issue that she feels strongly about. She's an honourable member. She has worked tremendously hard to get this bill before the House and I want to congratulate her.

Applause.

Hon Mr Baird: It is well that my colleagues should congratulate her for her leadership in this regard.

Interjection: She's the top dog.

Hon Mr Baird: She's definitely the top dog.

I can tell you that my constituents in Nepean-Carleton, whether they be in Stittsville, Barrhaven, Greely or Metcalfe, are tremendously concerned about the safety and well-being of animals, particularly dogs and cats, with respect to those people who breed and sell animals. They should be treated humanely. Whenever there is a tragic incident involving abuse of animals, the public outcry is incredible because people in Ontario, particularly in my community of Nepean-Carleton, feel tremendously about these issues. They think the government can do more, as the member for North York feels. She brought forward this bill as a reasonable and meaningful bill to try to better protect those who don't have a voice. I want to congratulate her for this.

There have to be some basic protections and safeguards for these animals. I operate in Nepean-Carleton, which has a substantially large rural population. About 40% of the population of Nepean-Carleton—the Carleton part of the riding—live in rural parts. That area was very well represented by Norm Sterling for many years. I'm so glad that the member for Lanark-Carleton is back in the House today to participate.

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): And still in the House.

Hon Mr Baird: And still in the House. They were tremendously well served by Norm Sterling in the Ontario Legislature.

There has been some issue with respect to the agricultural industry. I was pleased that the member opposite tried to separate her bill from the general agricultural bills, because generally speaking I don't think you'll find a group of people who better protect their animals—

Mr Bradley: There's the orders.

Hon Mr Baird: "Don't put the question," is what it says, Jim.

You won't a group of people who are better stewards of animals than most farm operators. There will be the small number of bad actors who have a dairy or hog operation, but the overwhelming majority of farm operators right across Ontario are good actors. The member's bill certainly recognizes that the plight of domestic animals, of domestic pets, is of tremendous concern and she's brought forward this legislation.

There are a small number of puppy mill operators who operate in disregard of the safety and security of these animals, and that causes all of us concern. I know it causes people concern in Espanola and on Manitoulin Island.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: Some would say, I say to the member for Erie-Lincoln, let sleeping dogs lie. But the member for York North, Julia Munro, said no. She wanted to step in and put legislation forward. She brought it to the Legislature for second reading. I was quite impressed to see the support of all members of the Legislature from all three political parties.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: I hear one member complaining in the corner. She's been carping regularly throughout the evening. This is a private member's bill. This is a bill that the member for York North brought forward because it was something that was important to her. That's something that's tremendously important, that all members of this House, be they sitting on the treasury bench, in government or in opposition, have the ability to bring issues that are important to them and to their constituents. I am someone who strongly supports the report of the committee that was chaired by Margaret Marland, the member for Mississauga South, capably served on by members of both sides of the House, which says there should be a bigger role for all members of this Legislature, regardless of whether they're on the treasury bench. And that bigger role shouldn't be contingent upon whether you agree or disagree with them. It should be contingent upon the ability of members like Ted Arnott, the member for Waterloo-Wellington, who had the courage of his convictions to tackle a difficult issue, to bring a bill to the floor of the Legislature, to have the courage to face some pretty stiff opposition in all corners of this province, to stand up for what he believes in, to have a debate on the floor of the Legislature. It was a healthy thing to have an open vote on that issue earlier today.

2010

I want to congratulate the House leader of our party for helping make that happen. Chris Stockwell has been pushing for a greater democratization of this place than we've seen in recent times. I don't think that ever in the history of the province of Ontario have we stayed after hours to work on issues that are important to members who don't sit on the treasury bench and who don't sit on the executive council. It's because Chris Stockwell, not only when he sought the leadership of this party but after the leadership and after the election, when the votes were counted, continued his plea to make backbenchers' issues on all sides of the House a major priority. I want to congratulate him. There is no prouder role I've had in public life than to serve as Chris Stockwell's deputy. It's been a real honour and a privilege for me to get to know the member for Etobicoke Centre and his capable executive assistant, Peter Hardie. I woke up to watch Breakfast Television on Monday, and there was a Peter Hardie from Etobicoke, aged 39, who was charged with abusing an animal, which is very pertinent to the member for York North's bill, and I want to assure all members of this place that's not the Peter Hardie who works for Chris Stockwell. I know that Peter Hardie feels as strongly as all members do of the need to step in and provide protection for our four-legged friends. So I want to congratulate Peter Hardie.

There have been a number of cases in various parts of the province. The member for York North will know the case north of the city of Toronto a number of years ago. I can recall speaking to the Solicitor General at the time, Bob Runciman, who spoke about the number of calls and complaints that they got in his office with respect to this tragedy and believing that there was an important role for government. Now, I'm not one who believes that there should be an expansive role for government in all areas, but I do believe there is an important social responsibility that we have, whether it's to protect those who are developmentally disabled, whether it's to protect those who are perhaps down in their luck and who need assistance, whether it's to protect those who need health care, regardless of their position in life, and I think that the rights we afford to dogs and cats should be something we're concerned about. We should stand up and make a statement that for those in pursuit of profit in a market economy who would put profit ahead of basic decency—there should be some recognition of that in law, in the statutes of Ontario. I am pleased that the legislation brought forward by the hard-working member for York North reflects that.

I do believe that there is an important role for all members of this Legislature in presenting legislation. Again—

Interjection: Regardless of party.

Hon Mr Baird: Regardless of party, regardless of whether they're in the executive council or not. We saw earlier today the member for Waterloo-Wellington, someone who has been known right across the province of Ontario as a freedom fighter, stand up and fight for what he believes in.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: "He's a courageous man," the member for Stoney Creek says, and I want to underline that. The ultimate verdict on that is, whether people agreed with him or disagreed with him, they can respect him. Whether they agreed with him or disagreed with him on Bill 30, they can acknowledge that when a private member brings forward a meaningful bill that's important to them and their constituents, there should be debate, there should be a vote. A decision is part of the political dialogue in this province, and we had that earlier today. But too often this place becomes very political.

I see the member for Sudbury here tonight. The member for Sudbury has brought forward a good number of meaningful private member's bills that I think we should have had the opportunity to debate in this place. But that requires that there be an amount of give and take. Too often in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in recent times we haven't seen that. It's become an all-or-nothing struggle to say, "Unless I get everything that I want, there's not going to be democracy." As someone who as fought for the rights of individual members of this Legislature, it can't be contingent upon whether you happen to agree with them. That's what the calling of Bill 30 was about earlier today.

I would have liked to have sat in this place and debated Bill 77. I went to the member who brought Bill 77 in and begged her, "Don't put the union bosses ahead of the adopted people in the province of Ontario who want their rights and freedoms respected. Don't put the interests of a narrow constituency controlling your political party ahead of the interests of the important people who are affected by this legislation." I went to her last week and I said, "Don't do it." I went to her this week and I said, "Don't do it." But the union bosses won out. They didn't want a democratic vote in this Legislature on Bill 30.

The bells of democracy rang hard earlier today, where we had a vote and people could stand up and be counted. A majority did not agree with the member for Waterloo-Wellington. I did, but a majority didn't. That's democracy. I respect that. Part of democracy is not just having a debate, but it's to have an opportunity to have a vote on it. Too often, members on all sides of this Legislature bring forward partisan issues motivated by political partisanship for debate and a vote in this House. But that didn't happen for the member for Waterloo-Wellington; it didn't happen with the member for Toronto-Danforth. They brought forward bills that in one case the riding cared about and in the other case the individual member cared about, and I respect them both. I respect the member for Waterloo-Wellington and I respect the member for Toronto-Danforth.

Earlier, I checked my e-mail from my constituents. I had a constituent send me an e-mail who said, "Why did your party stop a vote on this?" I said the Premier of Ontario made an earnest effort to say, "I think there should be a free vote on both members' bills, on the government side and on the opposition side." The government House leader once again went to bat for democracy to say there should be a free vote on both those issues. But they approached a brick wall, saying, "It's not the constituents of our individual ridings who count; it's not the right that all members have to eventually get their bills called for third reading. The union bosses are going to control what happens in this Legislative Assembly." And I said, "Well, Bill 30 probably won't even pass. What's wrong with a democratic vote?"

Premier Eves last week said that we should have more, meaningful private members' bills come up for debate and to have decisions. What's wrong with that? Isn't that democracy, Mr Speaker? But that's not what happened in this place. So I'm not going to sit back and allow any one in the province of Ontario, whether it's the member for Toronto-Danforth or anyone, to say there wasn't a legitimate, meaningful offer to have a vote on her bill, because there could have been a vote on this bill. We could have debated the bill, and we could have rendered as a decision. I think it's pretty obvious that the bill would have passed. But the brick wall went up and they said no. And when people complain as to why Bill 77 wasn't passed for debate, the finger will be pointed at one person and one person only, the member for Toronto-Danforth, who had an opportunity to have this bill called, but her House leader—and she, because she supports her House leader—said they wouldn't allow it to come for vote. I think that's regrettable. I really do.

It's not just the member for Toronto-Danforth. The member for Sudbury brought forward two or three good private member's bills for debate in this chamber and hoped to get a vote. He's also a loser in this, and all the people in Ontario are losers. There should have been a vote. We should have had a meaningful debate and decision on the bills from the member for Sudbury. Representing his constituents well, he brought forward bills and they got caught up in the brinkmanship of politics. That's something I know the government House leader didn't want to see happen. That's something I know that no member of the government or the official opposition wanted to see happen. That's got to be put on the record, because I'm not going to allow any constituent in Nepean-Carlton or around Ontario to question why that happened.

2020

With respect to the House leader for the third party, I respect him. He has strong opinions. He cares. It may surprise him that I do respect him, but you can't put the brick wall up, have somehow a legislative battle where you draw the line in the sand and nothing moves forward, and then think there is no consequence to it. I think that's regrettable, I say to the House leader for the third party, because I do have a tremendous amount of respect for him. I'm disappointed that that happened not only in the spring but also happened now.

I supported Bill 77 on second reading, as Minister of Community and Social Services. It sailed through without a single moment of debate. I said, "Let's send it to committee hearings. Let's find out. In principle, we'll support the bill. Let's send it out to committee hearings. Let's have more debate. Let's allow the public to have an opportunity to come forward and discuss the bill." It was something we and the House leader of the day, Janet Ecker, offered up. It sailed through.

There was a legislative compromise. A whole bunch of good legislation went through that day. We repealed the Homes for Retarded Persons Act, which was an omnibus bill, removing offensive and outdated language and terminology affecting the developmentally disabled of the province. That was one of the good pieces of legislation that went through in this House.

I want to credit the House leader of the third party. He was very helpful in that, and I would be dishonest if I didn't put that on the record. That type of legislative co-operation is far too often not present in this place, and I regret that.

I look to my House leader. Is that still the case?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Yes.

Hon Mr Baird: We are continuing the debate on the bill brought forward by the member for York North. I want to indicate that the constituents in Nepean-Carleton, whether they be in Bells Corners or Craig Henry—or in Hamilton and other parts of the province, in Stoney Creek, Napanee, greater Kingston, Oakville, Mississauga and Etobicoke—care about this issue.

Whether there is a young girl in Napanee who wants to ensure that puppies and cats are cared for, that they will be protected by this bill from those who, in the pursuit of profit—there will be protection. Whether it's a young girl growing up in Mississauga, she too will know that there will be legislative protections in the statutes of Ontario.

This is important for our humane societies around the province and for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It is important that they have the tools to step in to protect innocent lives, to protect the puppies and kittens of this province. We don't want to see any creature in Ontario abused or neglected, particularly in the pursuit of profit.

I want to congratulate, if I could, in my last two minutes, the member for York North for her tireless dedication and effort. The unscrupulous puppy mill operators of this province have a real enemy in the member for York North.

This legislation is perhaps not the most consequential piece of legislation ever debated in this Legislature, but it nonetheless is important for those of us who care passionately about protecting those who are vulnerable, whether it be in the amendments we brought forward to children's aid societies, whether it be in the good number of protections to provide supports to those who are developmentally disabled or, in a small way, to provide support to our law enforcement officers, to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to our humane societies. Too often, people turn their backs.

Earlier, in my first term in Parliament, the former member for St Andrew-St Patrick, Isabel Bassett, brought forward legislation to provide supports and strengths to this area. That was tremendously important and meaningful. We should, on this day, congratulate her for those efforts.

I hope the member for Sudbury is going to speak next. Is that the case? I think a lot of members are sticking around for the vote and to hear the member for Sudbury speak.

We look forward to more debate and, most importantly, at the end of this process—we approved this bill at second reading unanimously. The third party had no comments on the bill other than to talk about other issues and to move adjournment motions. I hope at some point we will be able to have a vote, which is an important part of democracy, on third reading of the bill.

Mr Bradley: On this auspicious evening, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on a bill of some significance in that it is at least a part of a bill that was introduced by my colleague Mike Colle, the member for Eglinton-Lawrence and a passionate defender of the rights of animals in this province. In fact, he's had press conferences, introduced legislation and campaigned vigorously across the province for meaningful legislation which would protect animals in this province.

Bill 129, of course, was introduced by the member after the bill that was introduced by Mike Colle in November 2001. Unfortunately, this bill is very limited in that it applies only to dogs and cats raised by breeders. My colleague Mr Colle has referred to this as the breeders' bill as opposed to a bill that really would protect all animals in all circumstances. His bill contained fines for violators and allowed for tele-warrants. This bill, I guess, does. This bill, I understand, is rejected by the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and they are the ultimate people, I think, in making a judgment on whether legislation is truly meaningful or only a token step toward what the member for Eglinton-Lawrence was trying to achieve.

The member herself, I know, is a dog breeder and has some familiarity with this issue.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: The member for Don Valley East refers to a conflict of interest. I can't make that judgment. I'm not the Integrity Commissioner, so I can't make that particular judgment, but that is a contention that my colleague has enunciated in his contribution to this debate.

Let's look at what's missing from this bill and perhaps get a hint as to why the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has rejected the bill as not suitable for passage in this House. First, it is restricted only to dogs and cats that are bred for sale. Second, it excludes all other animals, such as horses and birds, bred for commercial sale and animals in distress, like Holly, the dog—we remember that particular incident of Holly—who was dragged behind a car last year. There were mutilations of cats, dogs and other animals. Animal fighting is still going to be allowed under this proposed legislation, and this in the year 2002. There is no new power for inspectors. They can be obstructed, essentially, without penalty. There is no licensing for breeders, and anyone can breed animals in the backyard or in basements without an inspection and licensing. So you can see that the limitations of this bill are very substantial.

I want to share with members of the House what the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals thinks of Bill 129, the bill put forward by Ms Munro. I'll quote from the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals press release on March 13, 2000. They said, "Contrary to what the Harris government and many of our MPPs have been saying, the Tories are not showing the leadership needed to pass reforms for animal protection,' says Vicky Earle, CEO of the Society. 'They have ignored these amendments that have been sitting on their desk since June, 2001, and instead have rallied behind Julia Munro's private member's bill which is so problematic that the Ontario SPCA cannot support it.'"

Then, there's an SPCA press release on March 13 that adds more to it. It says, "Mr Colle's concern over the crisis of puppy mills in this province compelled him to introduce private member's Bill 100, the Puppy Mill Ban and Animal Cruelty Prevention Act, last fall—a bill that unfortunately was defeated by the Progressive Conservative government."

2030

Again in the press release of March 13: "The society said it could not support the private member's bill introduced by Progressive Conservative MPP Julia Munro (York North), yet the Tory government has continued to point to her bill as its display of effective action.... The Ontario SPCA did not work with Ms Munro in the drafting of her bill and has explained categorically its concerns with her bill. Meanwhile, the government has failed to introduce the numerous amendments"—

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: This is significant, I say to the member for Stoney Creek, who is attempting to interject. I'd ask him to listen to this portion of it, because it's very important that you listen to something instead of simply trying to intervene for the purpose of blocking something said.

It says the following: "Meanwhile, the government has failed to introduce the numerous amendments the Ministry of the Solicitor General did work with the Ontario SPCA on, along with other ministries, over nearly a two-year period."

In the spring of 2002—here's a significant fact for all members of the House and those at home who are watching this debate attentively—the Ontario Tories were set to introduce, and I would have applauded this, as would my friend Mike Colle, a comprehensive animal protection bill. The details were contained in a draft document approved by the cabinet committee on justice and intergovernmental policy. The proposed legislation would have included the amendments that the OSPCA was asking for. Mr Eves and Mr Runciman, after concentrated lobbying by the puppy mill industry, suddenly withdrew the proposed legislation.

That's of great concern to me, because it looked like the government had come to the edge of making a good decision, a decision I would have led the applause for, as would my colleague Mike Colle, who has championed this cause for such a long period of time. But there was great pressure put on the government by a lobby group. This government says, "We don't listen to special interests."

Hon Mr Clark: No.

Mr Bradley: Well, they do, quite obviously. They listened to the puppy mill industry and backed off, took three, four, five steps back on legislation that could have been introduced, legislation for which the government could have taken some considerable credit because it would have responded to the concerns expressed by Mike Colle, the member for Eglinton-Lawrence, who obviously would have received a lot of the credit. But the government could have shared in that credit. Instead, there was a major retreat, a major change when the puppy mill industry got wind of what was happening and decided to put pressure on the Harris-Eves government.

The September 17, 2002, leaked cabinet document shows that Mr Eves and Mr Runciman have abandoned comprehensive legislation in favour of a soft, PR approach by deciding to put forth Ms Munro's Bill 129. Bill 129 was rejected by the OSPCA and supported only by the puppy mill industry and their supporters. I can understand why the puppy mill industry would support it: because it protected them. It protected them finally. There was somebody, obviously, within the government who cared enough about this issue, who was heartened by what was happening inside the government, to move this issue along, who said, "It's time this got leaked to the public," about what the government was really doing. I suspect that there were people on the government benches—because not all of them are right-wing zealots; there are one or two or three or four—

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Name names.

Mr Bradley: Well, as I look in the House tonight, I see at least three, perhaps four, who I wouldn't classify as right-wing zealots, who may be, if not red Tories, at the very least very light blue Conservatives who I think might have supported that initiative originally and themselves would have been deeply disappointed when somebody put the kibosh on this in the cabinet procedure—likely the Premier and the Solicitor General, as he was called at that time, before he got Tom Ridge's title of public safety, or whatever he's called now.

Now that I'm mentioning him, I should say this to you, Mr Speaker, because you would be concerned about this as a member from the north and in light of the auditor's report: $60 million was withdrawn from the budget of the Minister of Public Safety and Security, my good friend Bob Runciman. I have been fighting since that time to have that money restored to his budget. I would suspect one of the reasons he absented himself from the vote today on Bill 30 was because he wanted to show some protest to the rest of the government for robbing his ministry of $60 million.

Hon Mr Clark: You're making that up.

Mr Bradley: No, the first is fact; the second is conjecture, and I think it's fairly safe conjecture.

Now let's look at Mike Colle's original Bill 100, the Puppy Mill Ban and Animal Cruelty Prevention Act. It was introduced way back in October 2001. It allowed for inspections by officers of selected puppy mill operators and other breeders of animals for commercial sale. It allowed for licensing of animal breeders. It called for prohibition of pet stores from selling animals from unlicensed breeders or kennels. It allowed for lifetime bans on animal breeders and kennels that operated illegally. That's a get-tough approach. That's a law-and-order approach. This government likes to talk about law and order. It called for heavy fines or jail terms for convicted puppy mill operators and other illegal breeding operations. What a fine bill that was. What a fine bill, had it passed the House. Again, I would have given due credit and applause to the government, as I like to be generous in my praise when I believe the government has done the right thing. Fortunately, I don't have to be that generous, because they do not do that very often.

Let's look at a second bill. He said, "Look, if they're not going to support the first bill, let me try another bill, Bill 105, the Animal Cruelty Prevention Act." It was introduced in May 2002, this year. It was modelled after the OSPCA-proposed amendments. So he said, "Let's get some of those amendments in there. They've worked hard on this. They've made some good suggestions. Let's see, not what the puppy mill breeders are all about, not what the lobby of the vested interests is, but the lobby of those who have the interests of animals themselves in their hearts, the OSPCA."

It makes it an offence to cause an animal to be in a state of distress—sounds reasonable to me. It makes it an offence to train an animal to fight another animal. We know from exposés that have taken place that even today, in the year 2002, in a province which professes to be a progressive province, that there are still illegal animal fights going on, but this would make it an offence to train an animal to fight another animal. What a good, progressive step that would be. My guess is that the member for Waterloo-Wellington would have been applauding that wildly, because he's the kind of person who would care about animals.

It introduces standards of care for animals' health and welfare, including adequate food and water, adequate medical attention, adequate shelter, safe transportation and protection from harmful confinement. We've seen only too often on news stories the sad tales of animals being abused and mistreated, in some cases deliberately through striking out at the animals, in others through neglect. Mike Colle's bill, Bill 105, would address that. That's the bill we should be dealing with this evening.

It would allow judges to impose a lifetime ban on puppy mill owners and operators from animal ownership. It makes all kinds of sense. Isn't there a lifetime ban on poor people for doing something? What was it you on the other side introduced to put the boots to poor people? If they broke the law once, for life they're no longer eligible for something. I can't recall exactly what it is, but that's what you've done. It's not for corporations that don't pay their taxes, because the auditor said half the corporations in this province hadn't even filed tax returns. This is the province which is good for snitch lines and is tough on everybody, except of course those corporations which refuse to pay their taxes.

By the way, can you imagine, on this side and the other side, how those corporations that have filed their tax returns, are legitimately paying their taxes, are doing their public duty and are fulfilling the laws of this province must be angered when they find out that half of their competitors and fellow corporations have not even filed tax returns in this province. They must be as annoyed as the general public is.

But I digress. I want to move back to a bill that I want to compare with this bill, and that is Mike Colle's Bill 105. His bill would make it an offence not to comply—no, let me get to an earlier part. It allows the OSPCA investigators to act on instances of cruelty in a more timely fashion. Mike Colle's bill makes it an offence not to comply with an OSPCA order or obstruct the OSPCA investigators. The Mike Colle bill increases penalties for those found guilty of an offence to a maximum of $100,000 and/or two years in jail for individuals and a maximum of $250,000—that's a quarter of a million dollars—in fines for corporations. I'll tell you, that's a meaningful penalty. That's enough to make somebody withdraw. That's enough for somebody to say, "I'm going to comply with this tough new law in the province." It allows judges to issue tele-warrants to inspectors for expeditious investigations and rescues, essential when the life and health of the animal is at stake. His bill is enthusiastically supported by the OSPCA, and over 230,000 Ontarians, including a large number in the city of St Catharines, which Mike Colle visited, signed petitions supporting these amendments. I want to say as well that while this bill is perhaps a tiny step in the right direction, it's not entirely the kind of legislation that we need.

I'll tell you what bill would be very good, and at this point in time, I seek unanimous consent of the House for second and third readings of Bill 128, the Highway Memorials for Fallen Police Officers Act. I think that would be timely at this point in time. I seek unanimous consent for second and third reading.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Of what?

Mr Bradley: Of Bill 128, the Highway Memorials for Fallen Police Officers Act.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Bradley has asked for unanimous consent to give second and third readings to Bill 128. Agreed? Agreed.

HIGHWAY MEMORIALS FOR FALLEN POLICE OFFICERS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LES CONSTRUCTIONS SITUÉES SUR LA VOIE PUBLIQUE ET NOMMÉES À LA MÉMOIRE DES AGENTS DE POLICE DÉCÉDÉS

Mr Bartolucci moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 128, An Act to permit the naming of highway bridges and other structures on the King's Highway in memory of police officers who have died in the line of duty / Projet de loi 128, Loi permettant de nommer des ponts et d'autres constructions situées sur la route principale à la mémoire des agents de police décédés dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

HIGHWAY MEMORIALS FOR FALLEN POLICE OFFICERS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LES CONSTRUCTIONS SITUÉES SUR LA VOIE PUBLIQUE ET NOMMÉES À LA MÉMOIRE DES AGENTS DE POLICE DÉCÉDÉS

Mr Bartolucci moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 128, An Act to permit the naming of highway bridges and other structures on the King's Highway in memory of police officers who have died in the line of duty / Projet de loi 128, Loi permettant de nommer des ponts et d'autres constructions situées sur la route principale à la mémoire des agents de police décédés dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill now be entitled as in the motion.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS AMENDMENT ACT, 2002 (continued)

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DE PROTECTION DES ANIMAUX DE L'ONTARIO (suite)

The Acting Speaker: The member for St Catharines.

Mr Bradley: I see I have 37 seconds left in my speech this evening. I hope all of us understand at the very least that there is a genuine problem out there with animals, who are very vulnerable. I think that all members of the House, regardless of what political party you're with, share that particular concern. I hope that all of us share that particular concern, and I move—what?

Interjection: Adjournment of the House.

Mr Bradley: Adjournment of the House.

Hon Mr Stockwell: No.

Mr Bradley: No?

Interjections.

Mr Bradley: I don't move adjournment of the House. I withdraw my adjournment motion. I thought it was 9:30.

The Acting Speaker: It is an unusual evening. Further debate?

Hon Mr Clark: It is indeed a pleasure for me to participate in this debate. The member has brought forth a bill which, I have to tell you, really does mean something very special to me.

As I grew up, dogs were a big part of my life as a child. My father was actually a police officer. He was a canine officer in Hamilton. This was in the old days in the Hamilton police department—a lot of people don't know this. This was back in the 1960s. My father came home with a dog. In those days, they actually brought the dogs home. This dog—

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton): They still do.

Hon Mr Clark: Do they still bring them home? This was a beautiful German shepherd. This dog was about 120 pounds. I used to call it a bear. This thing was huge. His name was Scout. He was the most obedient dog, and he was my buddy. This was an attack dog. This was a dog that was there to protect the police officers, to do their job, to do searches, to find people, and this dog was trained remarkably well by a trainer who's name was Walter. I can remember how passionately Walter used to talk about breeding dogs and the proper and humane treatment of dogs. He was a tremendous breeder. The man had such passion for his dogs. In terms of training them, there was no better. It's amazing what a dog can do when it is well-trained, well-bred, nurtured and looked after.

Our colleague Julia Munro, a tremendous member, brought forward this bill to protect animals: dogs and cats. I can remember when she came and talked to me about this for the first time. It kind of struck me at that moment that—every so often in this House we kind of get caught up in the debate. We get caught up the partisan politics from time to time. Then, things come forth that actually have real meaning in people's lives. Many times we are debating things and we have no personal experience on the matter that is before us. We may be debating anything from long-term care to mental illness, and many of us may not have experienced that. I was responsible for bringing in Brian's Law, but I had no personal experience. I had no family members who had mental illness. I was shocked at the time to learn that one in four people in Ontario have a serious mental illness. I didn't have any life experience with it. On this particular matter, I have some life experience. What Julia, my colleague, brought forth made sense: to put into law requirements that the breeder—I go back to my friend Walter, who I'm sure is long gone now. He was in his 60s when I was a young man of 10. Do the math: I'm sure he's gone on to the great breeder school in the sky. He had standards, because he had that passion to look after his animals and treat them well.

I can remember how upset my father would be when you'd hear about abuse of dogs or cats. I can remember once in my own community when someone had tossed cats out of a car window into Mount Albion Falls in a plastic bag, that kind of abuse.

2050

My colleague brings forth a bill that puts standards in place for keeping cats or dogs for breeding or sale. The standards are pretty clear. For you and I, Mr Speaker, for people who are humanitarians—I have a dog at home, her name is Peanut. I look after my dog. She's a cockapoo, a lapdog. I look after her. But to ensure that people in the province of Ontario, to ensure that breeders do the right thing—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: As the member for St Catharines said, to ensure that the breeders do the right thing, the first thing in the bill is to provide the animal with adequate food and water. It seems simple to you and me. Some of us in this place have more than adequate food; some of us eat more than enough food. It's important that the breeder provide adequate food and water.

To make sure that when the animal gets sick it has medical attention: for the average people sitting at home listening to us talk about this, it almost seems surreal that this Legislature would have to talk about it, because you would think that human beings would never ever abuse an animal, and that when an animal is ill, you would look after it.

A month ago, my dog almost died. She had pancreatitis, diarrhea and was dehydrated. I sat up for three days feeding her droplets of water trying to keep her alive, and she came through it. It was very stressful, but that's providing appropriate medical attention to a dog or cat. This bill says, "Provide the animal with adequate medical attention when the animal is sick or injured or in pain or suffering." The member put it into the law to ensure that it is done.

Most of us humanitarians who see an animal in distress simply do it. My daughter, when she was four years old, brought home a bird that flew into a window, because the animal was in distress. That was a good humanitarian effort, and I praised her for that. But there are people out there in Ontario who don't care. They put the bottom dollar first; they simply don't care—no passion, no concern. That's shameful that it happens in a province like Ontario.

To provide the animal with adequate protection from the elements: how often I've seen in the newsreels where they go in to one of these puppy mills and see that the animals have not been protected from the elements. The dogs or cats, newly born, are freezing to death or, in the summertime, are in a garage that is heated up beyond what the animal can sustain, and as a result of exposure, is dying. How can we in this province allow this to happen? My friend Julia Munro says we can't.

To transport the animal in such a way to ensure its physical safety: another simple one.

Then she puts in here, and I think this was really specific: "Not confine the animal to an enclosure, with inadequate space, with unsanitary conditions, with inadequate ventilation, without providing the animal with an opportunity for exercise, together with one or more other animals that may pose a danger to the animal, or that is in a state of disrepair or that is dangerous to the animal's health or well-being."

She pretty well covered off every potential parameter. I think it's important that this be done. Then she took it one step further and said that it's an offence if anyone who doesn't comply with these standards. Society, I would argue, believes it is offensive. It is an offence to do these types of things to innocent animals that generally just give unconditional love to their owners. That's what they do.

The last thing I point out here is she also included a penalty: $60,000 or imprisonment. She put a penalty right into the bill. So you look at this, and what she has done is brought forth the bill out of her concern for dogs and cats, that they be protected. That's what this place is all about.

When I came here three years ago, I vividly remember my first day in this House. I can remember talking to my colleague from Hamilton West and my colleague from Hamilton East, and I was just shaking my head. I couldn't believe the—to be diplomatic—repatee across the floor. I guess I was a little naive when I first came here. I kind of thought we'd all work together and bring in good laws.

I can remember when we brought in Brian's Law. I worked to hard to prove it could be done. It wasn't easy. I can remember Frances Lankin—I can't remember her riding now—

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Beaches-East York.

Hon Mr Clark: —Beaches-East York—and Lyn McLeod, from Thunder Bay-Atikokan, if I'm not mistaken. They were the health critics at the time. I was parliamentary assistant for health, and I was asked to modify the Mental Health Act. I can also remember at the time my colleagues on this side saying it was basically a suicide mission, that the Mental Health Act had never been opened. "There's a reason for that," they said, "Good luck."

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): If they told you that, they didn't know what they were talking about.

Hon Mr Clark: I thought, "How hard can it be?" So I kind of took the opinion of Sean Conway and thought to myself, "It can't be that hard."

Mr Conway: It was done in 1978; I remember it very well.

Hon Mr Clark: The member says it was done in 1978. I can remember looking back at Hansard, trying to get a handle on the groups that were involved, and I would say to my honourable friend that they were disparate groups.

Mr Conway: Elie Martel and Evelyn Gigantes were totally opposed to it, and they were from the same caucus.

Hon Mr Clark: Yes, they were on all sides of the spectrum. From one end you had psychiatric survivors, who had major concerns about community treatment orders, and at the other end of the spectrum we had the schizophrenics' society, who were expressing the need to help keep people on their medicine. So you had this huge, disparate group, and I was charged with the responsibility of somehow getting everyone together to come up with a better Mental Health Act.

I took the responsibility to go and talk to Frances Lankin and Lyn McLeod, and we started going out and actually doing hearings and meeting with the stakeholders. And what ended up happening out of it all was we slowly came together and started to recognize that every single person simply wanted to improve the act, and so how would we do it, how would we put the safeguards in place? When we took that position, we were able to come out with a bill that went out on first reading, and I can recall amending the bill a few times, actually right in the committee hearings. I was getting my exercise running in and out as we were negotiating these amendments.

My point is that I had faith the process would work. I also have faith that private members' business can work. I have faith that private members' business is meaningful. The members come forth with concerns in their community, concerns from their constituents. Many of them do thorough research on them and bring them forward. Some may not believe it works, but I have faith that it will work. And the fact that we're here tonight debating a private member's bill—most people would say, "Gee, logically one would assume that is proof that private members' business works." When I first came here, I was told, "Private members' business never gets passed. Don't even worry about trying to come up with something significant, because it just never gets passed." And yet here we are again today debating private members' business. As a matter of fact, we spent last night debating private members' business. The House leader—a remarkable job, an absolutely remarkable man—just continually amazes me. And I'll send him the bill later for my statements in the House.

Mr Conway: Aren't we lucky.

Hon Mr Clark: We're so lucky you weren't here last week, I tell you. We're still counting our stars that you weren't here last week.

We've got these opportunities to bring these things forward. But what really bothers me—I asked my House leader about it, because I couldn't understand this. Some people say I'm not the sharpest pencil in the package.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: I won't name names. The member for St Catharines disagrees. He knows I'm a fairly sharp pencil—not the sharpest, but a fairly sharp pencil.

I couldn't understand how a private member's bill could be stopped from moving forward when everyone seemed to agree in principle to get it out there. Then lo and behold he said, "It's called horse-trading." That's funny, because we're talking about an animal bill here. I thought there was a connection, and I scratched my head—I'm not the sharpest pencil in the pack.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: You've got to look in the mirror. There's one difference between stupidity and genius. Genius has limitations. The member over there has no limitations.

One would have to ask why this thing would be stopped, and it was in fact horse-trading. For some reason, someone, I won't name names, got their knickers in a twist about Bill 30.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Kormos.

Hon Mr Clark: Kormos. I wasn't going to name names, but you did.

The reality is, as a result of knickers getting in a twist, because it was unions—I happen to get along with union leaders; as a matter of fact, the union leaders have been meeting with me, and they respect me because I'm honest and I tell them exactly how it is. I think union leaders would be a little bit upset if they knew that as a result of some of their concerns on one particular bill, another bill never came to the House.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Say it isn't so.

Hon Mr Clark: I have to tell the House leader that I think they would be upset. Some of these union leaders would find it offensive that they took a position on a bill—how could it impact another bill, a meritorious bill that should have had the right to be debated and have a vote? How could it be that their position on volunteer firefighters could somehow impact another bill? But lo and behold, apparently the House leader for the New Democrat Party found a way. I'm learning; I now understand what horse-trading is.

Hon Mr Stockwell: You're like a sharp pencil now.

Hon Mr Clark: A sharpened pencil—I'm getting better, and the House leader is helping me. Some day I might know as much as him.

Hon Mr Stockwell: No, it isn't possible.

Hon Mr Clark: It's probably not possible.

Hon Mr Stockwell: It's not going to happen.

Hon Mr Clark: It is a goal, though. Isn't that right, member for St Catharines? You should have an attainable goal.

Mr Bradley: When you entered the House you were as sharp as he was.

Hon Mr Clark: I feel complimented.

I learned something new, and it saddened me that we find ourselves in this position. It saddened me.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): You created the position.

Hon Mr Clark: Your House leader created this position. You can try to spin it any way you want, but the reality has happened. I sat here many times and watched negotiations go back and forth, and all of a sudden everything falls apart because one man gets his knickers in a twist. That one man happens to be the member for Niagara. I'm sorry, but I happen to believe our House leader and the House leader of the loyal opposition, who very clearly stated this thing fell apart and they were ready to go ahead. I would have been happy to debate Bill 77, and I would have been happy to vote for it. But now, no one will ever know how I was going to vote and no one will ever have the opportunity to debate it, because the House leader on that side played a game. Apparently, the game is called horse-trading. I'm still looking for the rules of this game; I haven't found them yet. I understand they're written as the game is played, but I'm learning.

I'm going to support this bill. I think it's a good bill. I think Julia Munro has done an honourable and passionate thing by bringing forward a bill that will protect dogs and cats. My kids are pleased that I'm supporting this bill, and the House leader is pleased that I'm supporting this bill.

On that note, I'm pleased to have the opportunity to move the question.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Mr Clark has moved that the question be now put.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: There are two of us standing. One of us is out of order, and it's not me.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. Mr Clark has moved that the question now be put.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Timmins-James Bay will please take his seat.

I'm taking a 10-minute recess.

The House recessed from 2105 to 2120.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you for that little bit of time. We will continue debate.

I just wanted to mention to the member for Timmins-James Bay that the kind of conduct we have witnessed is not acceptable. The Chair requires the dignity and respect of all members all of the time.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: First of all, I want to offer you and other members of the House my apology. I got a little bit over the top in regard to not being heard on a point of order. I want to apologize for the tone. I respect the Chair, I respect you as an individual, and I was a little bit over the top.

Mr Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Just so I could have some understanding about the rules and procedures in this House, I seek your advice. The member for Stoney Creek moved that the question be put. What is the threshold on third reading debate for the amount of time that is required in order for that question to be in order? I think that's very germane to the proceedings that have taken place in the House.

As I understand it, on Bill 30, which was dealt with yesterday, it was six hours. Prior to that, the precedents had been about 12 or 13 hours on third reading debate. I'd like your advice, Mr Speaker, if you could advise this House. What are the precedents that guide us in matters of this nature?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. That is not a point of order.

Further debate? The Chair recognizes the member for Don Valley East.

Mr Caplan: It's a pleasure to enter into this debate. I do think that private members' bills are important, that they ought to be debated in this House. On second reading, it is a mere one hour that members have to come to this place, sent by their constituents, to debate very important items.

I myself have brought several private member's bills. I brought Bill 37, An Act to create affordable housing. I know that I'm not unique and that all members in this assembly have done so. They should be treated with the respect and seriousness they require, because these are important matters.

We're sent here by constituents to put forward ideas, to make good laws. One hour on second reading during private members' hour, Thursday mornings each week here in the House, is certainly not a considerable amount of time. There is a committee process that studies various private members' bills.

I would say, in reviewing the Orders and Notices paper, there are some 227 bills which have been dealt with by the House. Almost 60% are in fact private members' bills, items brought forward by members of this assembly on matters of primary importance to the constituents they represent. If that's not why we're sent here, I don't know what is; to talk about matters, to debate matters, to pass good laws. I'm pleased that we're having these kinds of debates.

I say that with some regret, because the only third reading debates and votes we've had have been on those which the government has been willing to call, and so far that's been only on government member private members' bills. It's unfair if members, representing their constituents, do not have an equal opportunity to have their bills heard—and it may go yea or nay. I'm not saying they should all be supported, but at least members of this assembly ought to have the opportunity to have their say.

I for one would be happy to sit next week or the week after or the month after and go through these bills and have reasoned debate, or reserve some time during the legislative calendar to do so. I think that would be entirely appropriate. I hope the members will consider that, because at this point, I wish to move adjournment of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Caplan has moved adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2125 to 2155.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): All those in favour will please rise and remain standing.

All those opposed will please rise and remain standing.

Deputy Clerk: The ayes are 11; the nays are 30.

The Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Hon Mr Baird: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Last night a member of the official opposition made some regrettable comments and withdrew them in a very classy way. One of the members from the third party did the same thing earlier. But the member for Beaches-East York made some very, very unfortunate comments. I know he'll want to withdraw them.

The Speaker: Members can do that at any time. I wasn't here and didn't hear it, but I'm sure all members will—

Interjections.

The Speaker: OK, folks. The temperature's up a little bit. Let's relax, please.

The member for Don Valley East, resuming the debate.

Mr Caplan: Like I was saying, I do think it's important that we have full debate of private members' bills. I think we should have a fair discussion of all the private members' bills that sit on the order paper. I would be very happy if the government House leader, if members of this assembly, would call us back next week, next month, and we could go through and have second and third reading debate of the private members' bills. I think they're critically important. We're here tonight to talk about—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Member, take your seat. We need to have a little more calm. We need to be able to hear the debates going on. Tempers are up. I would ask all members to please respect each other. The member for Don Valley East, will you continue, please.

2200

Mr Caplan: We're here to talk about Bill 129, a bill standing in the name of Ms Munro, from York North. It's important to cover some of the background of the bill. Back about a year or a year and a half ago, there were some very major headlines in newspapers: "Renewed Call for Animal Laws"; "Pet Laws Need Far More Bite"; "Second Puppy Mill Prompts New Calls for Harsher Penalties". What had happened was that up in Vaughan, just north of the city of Toronto, over the last 36 years a couple who were there breeding puppies had 340 animals removed from their care. Members remember that story. These animals were neglected, had been abused—untold horrors were going on there. There was a need to bring in legislation to have more power for the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to protect these animals from this kind of inhumane treatment.

What is a puppy mill? They are multi-million dollar businesses here in Canada. They are breeding operations where dogs and other companion animals are abused and bred in unsanitary, inhumane conditions. The health and welfare of companion animals are disregarded and profit is the only motive. Puppy mill operators have little or no regard for the welfare of the animals they breed.

Reportedly, in one of the newspaper reports, some 90% of pet store puppies are from mass-production puppy farming. Conditions there are considered a cost saving only, with no attention to the puppies' immediate needs to be properly fed, for cleanliness or for medical attention. Poor breeding activities and unsanitary conditions lead to infections and parasites prior to the arrival from the breeding farm to the store, where unsuspecting moms and dads and loved ones buy them. When a puppy is raised in these kinds of adverse conditions, in many cases it leads to a much greater lifetime problem. Improper breeding and inadequate socialization leads to whole host of physical and behavioural problems, exacerbated by an unsuspecting owner who struggles with a mistreated animal.

What is in place to govern animal rights protection? In Ontario, animal protection is related by standards set down by the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act. Unfortunately, this act has been outdated. Federally, animal protection falls under the Criminal Code of Canada. In 2000, the federal justice minister introduced Bill C-15, which included amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada to change the current threshold under which cruelty to animals is punishable by fines up to $2,000 and/or six months in jail. That law, as I am aware, has not passed. Sentences for violation would increase to a maximum of five years in jail and there would be no limit set on the fines which could be imposed by judges.

In Ontario—and this is what's very interesting—there is no regulation, with no standards and no inspection. Therefore, the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals cannot act until a tragedy has occurred, until it's too late. Furthermore, the OSPCA has no way of punishing the offenders other than removing the animals from the owner, so the damage can be done and all we can do is remove the animals from their care. Similar laws against animal cruelty do exist in other provinces. However, with the exception of Manitoba, animal cruelty laws are weak and outdated, as they are in Ontario.

So what do we need to do? Well, it's very simple. My colleague Mike Colle, the member from Eglinton-Lawrence, proposed several changes that would shut down puppy mills and give the OSPCA greater powers to inspect and regulate animal breeding for the purpose of commercial sale. These kinds of changes that my colleague proposed would regulate a multi-million dollar industry and would complement the proposed federal legislation. Together, they would outlaw the existence of puppy mills and punish animal cruelty in general.

That bill would have established a provincial registry and licensed all pet breeders and kennels. It would allow full inspection of breeders and kennel operators by the OSPCA, a right they do not have today. It would have made it a provincial offence to operate a puppy mill, with fines of up to $50,000 and/or jail time. It would impose a lifetime ban on those individuals convicted of operating puppy mills, and I think this is especially important. For somebody who has done this and is a repeat offender, a lifetime ban is a reasonable kind of proposition. It would allow the OSPCA to impose fines on pet stores that knowingly buy or sell puppies from these puppy mills, because it's not just a question of regulating the behaviour of the people who breed but of the people who purchase the puppies from the puppy mills.

We need a strong provincial law, and my colleague Mike Colle brought in such a bill back in October 2001. It was Bill 100, the Puppy Mill Ban and Animal Cruelty Prevention Act. That was not acceptable to the government. Unfortunately, the government doesn't see this as very much of a priority, despite the fact—and I'm going to get into this a little bit more—that they have had recommendations from the then Solicitor General ministry to make these kinds of changes to give some teeth to the legislation the OSPCA is under.

So Mike Colle, to his credit, introduced a second bill, Bill 105, the Animal Cruelty Prevention Act, and it was modelled after the kinds of amendments that the folks of the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals brought forward to the ministry of the Solicitor General. It would make it an offence to cause an animal to be in a state of distress. It would make it an offence to train an animal to fight another animal. In fact, we had a media report quite recently that one of the major sports in the Collingwood area has been cockfighting, animals fighting one another for the amusement and entertainment of human beings.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): No.

Mr Caplan: Absolutely. The media reported just yesterday on that.

It would introduce standards of care for animal health and welfare, including adequate food.

Mr Murdoch: People were coming up from Toronto.

Mr Caplan: It was happening in Collingwood, but they were coming from all over. It's wrong. We agree that it's wrong. Well, there is no prohibition in Bill 129 to make this illegal at all, to allow the OSPCA to go in and stop this kind of activity from taking place. Mike Colle's Bill 105 would have done just that.

It would also allow a judge to impose a lifetime ban on puppy mill owners and operators from animal ownership. It would allow OSPCA investigators to act on animal cruelty in a more timely fashion. It would make it an offence not to comply with an OSPCA order or to obstruct OSPCA investigators. It would increase penalties for those found guilty of an offence to a maximum of $100,000 and/or two years in jail for individuals, and a maximum of $250,000 for corporations. It would allow judges to issue tele-warrants to inspectors for expeditious investigation and rescue. Most importantly, Bill 105 is supported by the OSPCA. Over 230 Ontarians signed petitions supporting these amendments.

We have Bill 129 in front of us today. What does Bill 129 do? It was introduced after Mike Colle's two efforts to bring this measure to public attention, to this House for debate and a vote. It applies only to dogs and cats raised by breeders. There are only fines for people who violate this provision. It allows for tele-warrants.

Bill 129 has been rejected by the OSPCA. Unfortunately, what's missing is the fact that it is only restricted to dogs and cats that are bred for sale. It excludes all other animals, like horses and birds, bred for commercial sale. Animals in distress, like Holly, the dog who was dragged by a car last year—you might remember that—would not be protected by this bill. The mutilation of cats and dogs and all other animals again is not covered in the bill. Animal fighting is still allowed under this proposed legislation. There is no new power for inspectors and they can be obstructed without penalty. There is no licensing for breeders in this bill. Anyone can breed animals in their backyard or basement without inspection or licensing.

In the spring of 2002, the government was set to introduce a comprehensive animal protection bill. The details were contained in a draft document approved by a cabinet committee on justice and intergovernmental policy. The proposed legislation would have included the amendment that the OSPCA had asked for. Ernie Eves, the Premier, and Bob Runciman, the Minister of Public Safety and Security, after a concentrated lobby effort by the puppy mill industry, suddenly withdrew the proposed legislation. Why? Because unfortunately the government is in the pocket of a very special interest and they are not willing to see real teeth in a law that would protect animals. That's a shame.

In September, earlier this year, there was a leaked cabinet document showing that the Premier and Minister Runciman had abandoned comprehensive legislation in favour of a soft, PR kind of approach and decided to put forth Julia Munro's Bill 129, which was rejected by the OSPCA and supported only by the puppy mill industry and their supporters.

The purpose of the various bills ought to be to strengthen the OSPCA. In fact, I have several letters that have been received by the OSPCA calling on the government to bring in strong measures. It's the kind of legislation that we really should be dealing with, not this piece of fluff currently before us. I'm really surprised that a measure like Bill 129 is what's in front of us, rather than Bill 105 that was proposed by Mike Colle, the member for Eglinton-Lawrence.

In fact, I would say a number of other private members' bills are on the order paper that rightly should be debated. That doesn't mean they have to be supported, but they ought to be brought for debate and discussion and resolution—private members' bills which have been introduced by government, opposition or third party members. Those are the kinds of things which need to happen.

I seem to have a lot of people handing me papers today.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): It makes you look very important.

Mr Caplan: It does, I guess.

I've got to say that what is going on here is amazing. The government is deciding, unfortunately, that only ideas that come from government members are worthy of any kind of consideration, any kind of debate, any kind of a vote in this House. I think that's wrong.

I have several bills on the order paper: bills dealing with affordable housing; bills dealing with the regulation of cellphones, pagers and wireless communication devices in schools; bills dealing with the protection of water and the ownership of water in public hands. I would very much like to see these bills debated in this House. I would very much like to see these bills have some resolution, a vote. What is the government afraid of? Why can't members of this assembly have bills, for which their constituents have them come to this assembly, voted on?

Interjections.

Mr Caplan: I hear members opposite nattering away, because they know this is the truth. They know that the only bills worthy of consideration, in their opinion, are government bills. I don't happen to believe that. I happen to believe that all members in this House have something to offer, obviously, since the people in their ridings have decided to vote for and support them. Every member brings something very special, a special perspective, into this House. I for one would very much like to see private members have the ability to have their constituents' wishes debated and voted on, to have real democracy in this Parliament.

I'm surprised that government members are the only ones who feel they have this right. That's wrong. It could be quite different. Unfortunately, that's not a view held by everybody else.

I can tell you that on this side of the House—and I don't think we're going to be here very long—we're committed to seeing some changes in the way this place works. We're committed to seeing that private members in this place have some ability to represent the views of their constituents. I want to say to the people of Ontario that this will change. In fact, it can't come too soon, because in my opinion this place is largely dysfunctional. It is about time we felt a breath of fresh air come through here. I'm looking forward to having the opportunity to—

The Speaker: The member's time is up.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to draw to your attention something I find most serious. It has been confirmed to me by two members of this House, Mr Murdoch and Mr Bradley, that the government House leader has threatened the Liberals with cutting their caucus budget on the basis of him not bringing—

The Speaker: Order. Take your seat. That's not a point of order.

Further debate?

Ms Martel: Here we are tonight debating Bill 129, which has been put forward by a private member. We as New Democrats are opposed. The Ontario SPCA is opposed. We are opposed because it doesn't deal with cruelty to other animals. But if you want to talk about cruelty—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Come to order, Minister of Energy. We're not going to continue with this. Sorry for the interruption, member for Nickel Belt.

Ms Martel: If you want to talk about cruelty—the member who is the mover of this bill mentioned that word a couple of times tonight this Conservative government knows all about cruelty, because they practise it every day. I want to deal first with this government's cruelty with respect to the clawback of the national children's benefit from Ontario families who are on social assistance. Think about this when you want to think about cruelty. The federal government's response to a 1989 NDP resolution to eradicate child poverty by the year 2000 was to give a benefit to the poorest Canadian families to try to get them out of poverty. It's worth pointing out that in 1989, child poverty affected one in 10

Canadian children. In the year 2000, child poverty hadn't been eradicated. Now we have one in five Canadian children living in poverty in this province.

The Speaker: I hate to interrupt the member, but we are speaking to Bill 129. I'm going to insist that you speak on that bill. If not, I will take into consideration, when it comes time for closure, whether you are speaking to the bill. I will be interrupting you every minute if you deviate from that topic. We are going to start to stick to the topic of the bill. If you start to wander, I'm going to get up and interrupt you and take as much time as it takes to do that. I'd ask co-operation from all members to stick to the topic we are doing.

Ms Martel: The member last night spoke a great deal about cruelty, and I agree with her: there's lots of cruelty being practised, but it's not just being practised against cats and dogs. We should be here tonight dealing with the cruelty that this government is practising against Ontario children, because that's far more important.

The Speaker: Order. I just finished saying that you need to speak to the topic. I will insist on it. I will interrupt you; I will stand up, and the time will tick down and you won't even speak on it, if that's what you want to do. I might add, if you continue to do that, I will name you and throw your entire caucus out. If you would like to do that, the Sergeant at Arms is prepared to do that. We're not going to get into a battle here tonight. You are going to calm down and you are going to behave like professionals in here, or I'm going to throw you all out.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I've been sitting here, minding my own business all night, listening to the debate and participating in the democratic process in this place, as I usually do. I'm just wondering on what basis you would throw the whole caucus out.

The Speaker: Based on the fact that we're going to stick to the topic. I've watched the anger go up in here, and it is not going to continue.

Ms Martel: If I can't talk about the cruelty this government practises against children, then I'm going to move adjournment of the House.

The Speaker: Fine, you can move adjournment of the House.

Ms Martel has moved adjournment of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2219 to 2249.

The Speaker: All those in favour will please rise and remain standing.

All those opposed will please rise and remain standing.

Deputy Clerk: The ayes are 9; the nays are 30.

The Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I wish to stand to apologize to the members opposite. I'm not trying to cover it in any way.

I honestly did not understand what umbrage was taken, but I thank the members from Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound and Mississauga Centre for explaining to me why my remarks may have been reacted to in the way they were. If I have offended anyone, I humbly apologize.

The Speaker: I thank the member for the honourable gesture.

Hon Mr Clark: I want to thank the honourable members from Beaches-East York and Timmins-James Bay for apologizing for their comments earlier. They were unfortunate and I think they simply got carried away.

The Speaker: I thank the members for their help.

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Speaker: If I've said anything to anyone that they take offence to, I apologize.

Ms Churley: On a point of order, Speaker: It's been a rather horrible evening here, and perhaps everybody should apologize to everybody. I would ask for unanimous consent to call third reading for Bill 77, the adoption disclosure act.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

The member for Nickel Belt had the floor.

Ms Martel: Speaker, before I begin my remarks, just to get it on the record, I'm going to also ask for unanimous consent for Bill 77, the adoption disclosure bill, to be called for third reading.

The Speaker: We just did it. We need a little bit more time.

Ms Martel: In the time I have, let me tell you why we're not going to be supporting this bill: because it's so weak-kneed and so ridiculous that it's going to do absolutely nothing to shut down those breeders who breed animals in situations that are inhumane and filthy and who treat their animals with a great deal of cruelty as well. It's really sad that the member for York North would purport to put forward a bill that's actually going to do something to protect cats and dogs when in fact the absolute opposite is true. This is going to continue to give those folks out there who run puppy mills and make lots of money off the breeding of puppies free rein to continue with the abuse and inhumanity they've practised against those animals. It's a sad state of affairs that we're spending any time this evening debating a bill that is so weak, so offensive and so ridiculous and that will do absolutely nothing to deal with what really is a very serious problem with respect to cruelty to animals.

Let me deal first with the concerns that have been raised with the government, especially during the committee, by the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It's interesting that the member for York North would try to tell people that this bill is somehow going to be helpful and that it has the support or endorsement of the humane society when the opposite is true. It's worth pointing out and having it on record again that the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has said that this bill, if passed, is going to do more harm than good with respect to dealing with those people who would perpetrate cruelty on animals.

In fact, if you go to the press release that the society put out publicly on March 13 under the name of their CEO, Vicky Earle, it says, "They," meaning the government, "have ignored these amendments that have been sitting on their desk since June 2001, and instead they," meaning government members, "have rallied behind Julia Munro's private member's bill, which is so problematic that the Ontario SPCA cannot support it."

Well, it can't be clearer than that. That says it all in terms of what the society says about this bill. Don't forget, the society's business is prevention of cruelty to animals. If any organization should know anything about what needs to be done to deal with cruelty to animals, the humane society is it, in my humble opinion. When the humane society says this ain't worth the paper it's printed on, then it probably isn't. That's a good enough reason for me to oppose it, and it's a good enough reason for my caucus to oppose.

I'm going to put on the record as well the many amendments that came before the committee when the bill was being discussed that would have, in the eyes of the humane society, actually made it a bill worth supporting. It's also really important to point out to you and to the people who are watching that every single one of those amendments was voted down by the Conservatives, voted down by the member who comes in here and tries to pretend that she cares so much about animals and dealing with cruelty to animals. Her government—herself, her friends—voted down every single amendment put forward by the SPCA to actually make it a bill that might be worth supporting. What are those amendments?

The first one was that the SPCA asked that all animals in a state of distress be treated, not just kittens and puppies, as the member's bill deals with, because of course we know we have horrendous cases of cruelty: people who breed birds that then fight against each other people who allow horses, for example, to undergo serious neglect; and all kinds of dogfighting that goes on in the province as well. We know it's not just an issue of dogs and cats in terms of breeding and what might happen. It's an issue of all animals that need to be protected and where we need to have laws in place to do that. The SPCA was really clear: "Look, if you care at all about animals, if you care at all about supporting us and the work we do, then don't just deal with dogs and cats, deal with all animals. Define that in the bill and put in place the protections necessary to combat cruelty against all animals." Well, Mrs Munro and the Conservatives rejected that amendment.

Second, Mrs Munro and the Conservatives also refused to support an amendment that would have made it possible for a judge to ban puppy mills owners from owning animals for the rest of their lives. It's important to note that the bill speaks about the ability of a court being able to do that, but only in the case of cats and dogs. So only in the case where there has been clear evidence of abuse and cruelty by an owner or someone working in a puppy mill can they be banned from breeding again or from having puppy mills. But as to those people the SPCA takes to court because of cruelty with respect to other animals, nothing happens to them. Who cares about them? Let them continue to breed birds. Let them continue to allow farm animals to suffer neglect. Who cares? No problem. We'll allow them to keep doing that. The government voted that amendment down.

The government also voted down an amendment that would deal with the sale, through a number of pet stores across the province, of animals coming from puppy mills in the United States, for example. You have this scenario right now that you have all these pet stores that have cats and dogs with nice little bows, all kinds of great animals in the store, especially now, with Christmas on the way, and we have no idea where those animals are coming from. We have no idea if they're being bred in puppy mills in the US, and we're not doing anything about knowing about that in this bill. We've just turned a blind eye to the fact that that is happening and to the fact that every day thousands and thousands of pets that could be bred in mills across this province are being sold to unsuspecting Ontarians. The government refused an amendment that would have started to deal with the sale of these animals from the US, for example, and from puppy mills or whatever kind of mills dealing with animals where there are abuses going on.

The government and Mrs Munro also refused to make it an offence to train animals to fight other animals. Isn't that a sad state of affairs? All across the province, you've got people who train certain breeds of dogs, for example, pit bulls, just for the pleasure of seeing them fight and for people to bet on that. We know that happens in all kinds of dark places across this province, and the SPCA knows that. That's why they brought forward one of their amendments, because they wanted to make sure people couldn't train animals for the purposes of having them fight other animals, with all kinds of serious wounds leading to death etc. Did the government accept that? No, the government didn't accept that. Talk about a government that comes here and tries to pretend that they care about animals and cruelty against animals. That is a reasonable, logical amendment that the government, if it cared at all about this issue, would have accepted. But no, the government and Mrs Munro weren't interested in shutting down what goes on across this province, which is people training animals to fight each other, to kill each other, which is the most horrendous kind of cruelty there is.

What else did the government reject? The government rejected the notion that you had to have a licence to be a breeder. You've got to have a licence to run a restaurant in this province. You've got to have a licence in most municipalities just to own a cat or a dog. You've got to have a licence to drive a car. You've got to have a licence to do just about anything in the province of Ontario. But can you imagine: if you want to breed animals and sell them and make all kinds of money off that, and you want to be sure there's no inspection when you do that, then you just allow the situation to continue where you don't even have to have a licence.

I don't understand the logic of this. I don't understand why the government wouldn't even take that small step of forcing people in this industry to get a licence, because if people had to get a licence, you'd know where they were operating. You could do some surprise inspections to make sure they might actually be following regulations. You could track them; you could monitor what they were doing. But no. Can you imagine that an amendment like that came forward to the committee and the government voted that down? You don't even have to have a licence if you are a breeder.

What are some of the other problems with this bill that the government refused to address? This is the government, I remind you, that tried during the course of the debate to tell us how much they cared about cruelty and how this bill was going to do something to address cruelty.

Well, there's another concern. If you have an animal that you think has possibly been the product of a puppy mill, you have nowhere to go to complain about that. You can't take your concern anywhere. If you look in the paper, you see ads every day for people selling all kinds of animals. I think a lot of people respond to those ads in the paper and go and buy those animals. They get hold of an animal, see very serious signs of neglect, signs of cruelty, are worried about that, are concerned about that, and they hear some rumours about where that animal may have come from. Maybe it was bred under horrendous conditions—sold for a lot of money but bred under horrendous conditions. You've got nowhere to go to complain about that. You can't go to the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services. They don't have to have a licence, so I guess you can't go and complain to them, can you? You can't do anything, can you? You can't make any kind of complaint. You can't do anything to get the authorities to deal with that.

You can go to the SPCA. Thank God at least the SPCA is interested in doing something about this issue, because the government sure isn't. But we all know that the SPCA is grossly underresourced, and as a result is grossly understaffed. We know that. We see appeals on television, especially by the Toronto Humane Society, all the time encouraging people to adopt a pet, to give money so that their officers can go out and try to deal with some of the concerns that are raised.

There should be a formal process in place where you can go and raise a complaint, where you can have it inspected and dealt with, and that shouldn't have to depend on whether or not the SPCA has the money that day to have someone go out and investigate. If the government really took this issue seriously, the government itself would be ensuring there were some staff in place so that the government of Ontario assumed some responsibility for dealing with cruelty to animals and didn't just leave that to the goodwill of the SPCA and their ability to do that if they have money on that particular day because they got enough donations the night before from the televised campaign, the direct-ask campaign that was going on. But no. The government didn't want to deal with that particular concern either.

What else, Speaker? What's interesting, of course, is that the government actually had some discussions at the cabinet level about what needed to be done with respect to protection of animals. It's interesting that the cabinet committee on justice and intergovernmental policy recommended that cabinet approve legislative amendments—government amendments, not backbench amendments—that essentially responded to the amendments that had been given to the government by the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

It's interesting that those amendments that the cabinet committee reviewed would have created a system of provincial offences for those folks who are engaged in cruelty to animals, so that failure to comply with duties of ownership, owner or person having custody, care or control of an animal causing or permitting an animal to continue to be in a state of distress would have suffered a provincial offence. They would have been doing a little bit of time maybe, if it could be shown very clearly that in fact they were engaged in cruelty to animals.

Another thing that the cabinet document talked about was really ensuring that a property owner suspected of running a puppy mill or suspected of continuing activities that were cruel to animals could not obstruct an inspector or an agent in the discharge of their duties or exercise of powers under the OSPCA Act and its regulations, and if they did that, the failure to comply would result in a fine.

Also, it's interesting to note that the cabinet documents and cabinet recommendations also were that it should be an offence for people who engage in the practice of training an animal to fight another animal—not just a fine, but an offence, which would really do something about shutting some of these people down. But do you know what? Did the government come forward with any of the amendments? No. Are the amendments appearing in the private member's bill? No. The sad part is that the amendments were moved at committee in hopes that they would be added to the bill. Were they accepted by the government, Mrs Munro? No.

So it's just a little hard to take to hear the member come forward and say how she is so concerned about cruelty to animals, and then didn't accept one single amendment that came forward from the Ontario humane society. I think that says it all; it's pretty clear to me that this bill is all show, a lot of show, and no opportunity for enforcement, because there really isn't any half decent law in place that's really going to deal with the pervasive problem of people's cruelty to animals. There's nothing in the bill that's going to do that. It's a sham. It's a lot of window dressing, a lot of public relations. Maybe she's going to get some good news about it back home, but it's not going to change a thing in terms of cracking down on those thousands and thousands of people who, every day, submit animals to just horrendous treatment, neglect and abuse.

On that note I would move adjournment of the debate.

The Speaker: Ms Martel has moved the adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say aye.

All those opposed will please say nay.

In my opinion the nays have it.

Call in the members. This is a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2307 to 2337.

The Speaker: All those in favour will please rise and remain standing.

All those opposed will please rise and remain standing.

Deputy Clerk: The ayes are 10; the nays are 29.

The Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Further debate?

Hon Mr Young: I do appreciate having an opportunity to address this very important bill. I appreciate that it is late in the day, but I did want to take a few minutes to reference a press release that came to my attention earlier this day, a press release that was issued by the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. They said of this bill the following: "We appreciate Julia Munro's support on the puppy mill issue." Later, it goes on to say, "We welcome any steps that will better protect abused and neglected animals in Ontario."

I think some of the honourable members may have referenced a similar release or statements from the very same organization, and I would suggest to you that they were less than clear. I know that they certainly didn't mean to mislead or leave the House with any false impression, so I certainly appreciate having an opportunity to set the record straight. Clearly, the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals supports the efforts of the member from York North, as do I. This is a bill that has been brought forward by an individual who sincerely believes that she can make a difference, and indeed is making a difference, by this initiative. I support the member from York North, as do many of my colleagues. I suspect every member of this Legislative Assembly will stand and speak up for those animals, those creatures on this earth, who cannot speak for themselves.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Young: Quite so. The House leader quite correctly identifies that it is an obligation that we have to stand up and speak for those creatures.

I will say to you that, as an individual who has the privilege of representing the riding of Willowdale, I have received literally hundreds of letters and e-mails from individuals who are concerned about this very issue, who are concerned about cruelty to animals and are asking their elected officials to act. So I am pleased to be here today and to take action to address this very important issue.

I move that the question now be put.

The Speaker: The Attorney General has moved that the question be put.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2342 to 0012.

The Speaker: All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

Deputy Clerk: The ayes are 30; the nays are 8.

The Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mrs Munro has moved third reading of Bill 129, An Act to amend the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Pursuant to standing order 28(h), there has been a request that the vote on Bill 129 be deferred until December 12, 2002.

It now being past 12 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 0015.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

WASTE MANAGEMENT GESTIONS DES DÉCHETS

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex):

It's a pleasure for me to rise in the House this morning to move the following motion:

Let it be resolved that the province of Ontario must employ cost-effective modern technology which is presently available as a progressive process to manage and dispose of waste. Furthermore, a more aggressive objective than the present goal of 50% be established to divert waste away from landfill sites must become the new criteria and goal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): The member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Beaubien: It certainly is a pleasure this morning to rise on behalf of the constituents of Lambton-Kent-Middlesex to raise the issue of landfill in our waste streams in the province of Ontario.

Why do I raise this particular issue? First of all, the Lambton part of my riding probably has more landfill sites per capita than anywhere else in the province of Ontario. There's a reason for that. The soil conditions in that part of the county, certainly in Kent and part of Middlesex, is very conducive to having landfill sites.

However, having said that, I don't think anybody wishes to have a landfill site in their backyard. But we have to come to the reality that we do create an awful lot of waste. We're certainly the leaders in the world, as a nation, when it comes to the creation of waste.

To simply landfill waste today is no longer acceptable. I say that because landfilling is archaic technology. Our forefathers used that method of disposing of their waste. They were burning it and they were burying it, and we're still doing the same thing. One reason we're still doing that is probably because it's cost-effective. However, as a province, as a nation, as responsible citizens, we have to look at what kind of legacy we're going to leave our children.

I don't want to make this an urban-rural problem, but there is no doubt that a lot of the waste is generated in urban areas and shipped to rural areas to be landfilled. Let me say that many small rural communities, including First Nations, would be more than willing to accept the waste, but not to simply landfill it. I think we have to look at a better recycling process, better composting and, like I said in the resolution, using modern technology.

If we go back a number of years, 10 or 15 years ago we initiated the blue box program in the province of Ontario. I think it's a fuzzy-peachy way of making people aware that we should reduce our waste stream. But I don't know if you've had the opportunity lately to watch when you have one garbage truck coming down the road and then, coming in the other direction, you have a recycling truck. It's somewhat irresponsible to have two large polluting vehicles coming down the street to pick up your waste. And many, many of the recyclables—I've seen it with my own eyes in the past six months—simply go into the garbage portion of the recycling truck. I would imagine the reason that happens is because there may not be a market for the cardboard or paper or glass or whatever it is.

Consequently, we have to look at how we are going to proceed in handling our waste. We can make this a political issue, but I see that the member from Sarnia-Lambton yesterday finally realized that there is an Environmental Protection Act. If you're going to change anything in the way we deal with our waste stream, at times you may have to amend the act or the regulations, whatever the case may be. There is a process, for instance: "Guide for Applying for Approval of Waste Disposal Sites." It's a lengthy process.

One of my small communities right now, Watford, is undergoing an application where one of the local waste companies is applying to expand the waste site. I had the opportunity to attend an open house a couple of weeks ago; sometimes I'm concerned, because I think there were 12 to 14 local residents at the meeting. It was not very well attended.

When I talk about waste diversion, I think all levels of government have a responsibility to play: federal, provincial, municipal and certainly the taxpayers. I think we have to start with the packaging industry. We are somewhat over-exuberant sometimes with our packaging requirements, and consequently that creates waste.

I should also say for the record that no municipality should be forced to accept waste. For a landfill site to be expanded or created, the municipality should be a willing host.

I do have some concerns. One of the concerns I have—we talk about pollution. Pollution is a concern, I would say, to all Ontarians. It's a motherhood issue. But when we have something like 400 garbage trucks leaving the Toronto area on a daily basis to go to Michigan, to go to New York, to go to Lambton, I wonder where the leadership is at the local municipality, namely, the city of Toronto. I had the opportunity to negotiate with them with regard to the sale of a local, municipally owned landfill site 12 years ago, and I dare say that Toronto is not any further along with regard to dealing with their garbage than they were 12 years ago.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): Not true.

Mr Beaubien: If it's not true, why are you shipping 400 trucks a day outside the community?

I realize that the member from Sarnia-Lambton is all for closing down the Sarnia-Lambton generating station and putting 400 people out of work. But when we look at the pollution created by the Sarnia-Lambton generating station and the one in Nanticoke, they create 8% of the nitrogen oxide pollution in the province. Yet vehicles that use the 401 corridor create 32% of the nitrogen oxide pollution—four times as much.

With regard to truck traffic, in the town of Petrolia at this point in time we are receiving 90 garbage trucks a day. They're using local roads and disrupting the peaceful residential areas in some small communities. That is a concern, and I know we have to deal with this.

Like I said, there is no problem with dealing with garbage, because garbage is a by-product of our society, but we have to deal with it responsibly. If we were more conscientious with regard to composting, recycling and whatever else, maybe methane digesters, and would bring it to rural Ontario, to a community that is a willing host, we can deal with it in a responsible manner using modern technology and creating jobs in rural Ontario, creating by-products that can be used, as opposed to landfilling. Landfilling is an antiquated way of dealing with our waste stream.

I say we have to be more aggressive than having a goal of 50%. I see that the Liberals, in their recent Magna Carta, say we should divert 60% of waste from landfills. I have municipalities in my riding, small municipalities, that are diverting 80% of their waste stream already, so 50% is not adequate and 60% is certainly not adequate when most of the landfilling activity is generated from Toronto and shipped to rural Ontario, and its population is going to go from 2.5 million people to 3.5 million or whatever population maximum we're going to have. That's going to create more traffic. That's going to create more garbage.

That's why it is imperative that as opposed to having goals of 50% and 60%—there's technology in Europe, in Japan, that deals with the waste stream with a maximum of 95% to 98%. There's basically nothing in landfill. It's about time that in Ontario, in Canada, in Toronto, we start dealing with our waste stream in a responsible, cost-effective manner, using modern technology, so we can deal with some of the pollution we are creating.

When we're talking about the Kyoto accord, I think it would be a good plan to make sure that whatever program we embark on with recycling and composting and waste management, it is compatible with the Kyoto accord that is going to become law in the very near future.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): I find it interesting that the resolution brought forward by Mr Beaubien, certainly when it comes to the words, sounds absolutely incredible. It appears that Mr Beaubien has obviously had some type of conversion on the way to Damascus when it comes to landfills in this province. I say this because at the beginning of his presentation, Mr Beaubien spoke about not playing politics with this and then proceeded to do just that. I find it a little bit interesting but also a bit disturbing, because I want to also put on the record some issues that are very, very serious about an expansion of a hazardous waste landfill that was expanded in 1997 in a fast-tracked process, and it was fast-tracked under criteria for that company to be able to expand its market share. That's the criteria, not as a problem-solving mechanism.

The reason I find this resolution interesting—I also look at actions, not just words. We can say whatever we want to say to make ourselves look good. That is something that unfortunately happens much, much too often in this political world. But it is the actions that validate what one says. When it comes to the riding Mr Beaubien represented before 1999, the municipality near Brigden, St Clair township now, actually saw an expansion. I understand the member worked for Phillips, I believe, for a period of time, so he certainly has an understanding of the waste industry, if you will.

Unfortunately, the member, as part of the Red Tape Commission, was instrumental in some areas and participated in removing regulations that I believe actually protected the public interest. When it came to the expansion of the now Clean Harbours site, which is now going to be bringing in toxic hazardous waste—we're talking about this diversion of 50% of the waste when in fact for the last four or five years, hazardous waste importation to the province of Ontario, because of the lax regulations, has quadrupled. On one hand we're saying, "We have a good idea. Let's divert waste. We don't want Toronto garbage coming into Lambton county." On the other hand, what we have done is open the doors to toxic hazardous waste from literally around the world into that area. That happened under Mr Beaubien's watch and it happened under this government's watch and continues to do so, yet we do not have any political will to change the regulations to stop this practice.

I do agree with one thing: this practice of expansion of landfills is archaic and should become extinct. It will become extinct if we at least would move forward, as other jurisdictions have done, to do what they call on-site treatment. What does that mean? That means we don't export-import waste but deal with it in the jurisdiction that actually generates the waste.

On the one hand, Mr Beaubien says we have to stop diverting, but on the other hand, he accepts the notion that we can send waste to other jurisdictions. There's a bit of a contradiction there. Nonetheless, the resolution is what I firmly believe in, that we have to stop generating the quantity of waste we do in this province, in the manufacturing sector as well as in our own personal lives.

On this conversion on his way to Damascus—I say this because I have not heard the member from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex speak out strongly on the notion of importation of hazardous waste. He was there when he allowed the expansion, when it was done silently, when it was done quietly. He was part of that silence when the expansion took place so it became the largest toxic hazardous waste in the country.

The rhetoric here is commendable, but the actions speak to something else. I would certainly like to challenge the member from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex to support the stopping of the toxic hazardous waste that's coming in from Sydney, Nova Scotia, some of the most toxic substances in this country that are going to be trucked in from Sydney. I don't see the member from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex speaking out on this issue. His silence is overwhelming.

I would also suggest that the whole issue of environmental degradation that has caused—and I don't buy this notion that Lambton county is the best place to landfill. No place is the best place to landfill, because eventually, according to the contract on the expansion, it says that the long-term consequence is contamination of the groundwater. That's a given. I would suggest that the member from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex put action into the words and also take a stand to advocate for the residents in the area who feel they have become the toxic haven for North America because of an expansion that took place under his watch. Now he states in his resolution that he wants to have this goal of 50% to divert waste from landfill sites, that it must become a new criterion and goal. Again, I commend the member from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex for his conversion on the road to Damascus.

Mr John Hastings (Etobicoke North): First of all, I'd like to commend my colleague the deputy from Lambton-Kent-Middlesex for introducing this resolution. To go to the very heart of the matter, we have been discussing this issue for several years, but we don't seem to be making a terrible amount of good progress. Yet if you look outside Ontario, and even within Ontario, there are solutions. What we ought to be focusing on, particularly since the feds have now declared that Kyoto is the promised land of the future—it's incumbent on us as legislators to start finding the practical and sensible solutions for trying to get to that road. You can talk about ratifying the Kyoto solution, but you have to face some practical realities in dealing with garbage in this province or in other parts of Canada. We need to be looking at ways we can accommodate and solve the problem, because it's not getting any better.

As the heart of the resolution Mr Beaubien has suggested, the landfill method, while it may appear great in rural Ontario and the smaller municipalities, and, from the city of Toronto's viewpoint, just exporting garbage down the highway to Michigan, it is not a solution at all. It's the 12th-century, antique solution, I'd say. If that's where we want to stand as a government and the opposition wants to criticize us for that, that's fine, but it doesn't solve the problem.

So what are the solutions to dealing with the problem? Well, it seems to me that we need to look at a new focus, not on compliance and enforcement, which is the usual approach of the Ministry of the Environment of the day, particularly the ministry we have in this government. We need to be seeking out combinations of new capital and new technology to solve the problem.

If you look right in Ontario, we have one good solution, even though we had to put $11 million into it. Go to the city of Guelph, with its wet-dry separation solution. There is a practical way of helping to solve garbage. Does the city of Guelph have a landfill problem? No, they do not. They have a new facility recycling and recovering materials and selling them back into the community or into other parts of the province.

If you move across the pond to Europe, the European Union now has a directive dealing with this issue.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): Not that socialist haven.

Mr Hastings: Would you just for one time listen, member for Timmins-James Bay?

Mr Smitherman: Take a deep breath.

Mr Hastings: Thanks, member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Etobicoke North has the floor. He is the only member who has the floor.

Mr Hastings: If the members across the way don't want to hear the solution, they can continue to be captives of their own rhetoric, as they usually are.

We need a solution that is either gasification technology or pyrolysis. Those are two new ways of handling landfill garbage. Where do we find these facilities? Well, of all places, Sweden, Denmark, Germany. Why has Europe moved ahead of us in North America and in Ontario in dealing with this solution? Because they've engaged themselves in trying to find those solutions.

Granted, there are the usual critics of emissions coming from this particular technology. If we go back to the ideological blinkers—we have all have them; I have them as well. All you've got to do is look at—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Etobicoke North has the floor.

Mr Hastings: Very seldom do I speak in this Legislature any more, because it has become not a place of discussion but a place of simply exchanging insults, and I have been involved in those myself. For at least three minutes, could we have a little attention? If you don't want to hear it, then leave and go have a coffee. That's all I'd say.

Anyway, if you look at the select committee on alternative fuel sources and go through the recommendations, some 43 we've implemented on this side, the government, one of the solutions we left out was the whole waste-to-energy solution: taking all that landfill garbage and utilizing it as a recoverable resource. It was left out because a member of the NDP said, "If you're going to use incineration, it's not going to work, because you still have the emissions of furans and dioxins." Well, let's take a look at what is happening with some of the new technologies, particularly gasification, for those smaller facilities in the European Union. Effective pollution control equipment has nearly reduced it to zero. That's a pretty good record, in my estimation. If you can reduce the emissions that are damaging from a health viewpoint 99%, I'd say it is worth trying on a small scale.

If you don't like that solution, then let's look at the city of Guelph as an example that the city of Toronto needs to start thinking about in terms of a major, major initiative in having better environmental control of all the garbage we are producing in the greater Toronto region. The city of Guelph is one of the ways; it's not the only way.

The problem in this thinking is that the usual attitude is, "We can't do this unless the provincial or federal government comes through with a pile of money to get these facilities going." My proposal, in combination with the thrust and heart of Monsieur Beaubien's resolution, is to tap the private markets, whether it's the venture capital markets or any other way of involving private enterprise, particularly from the financial viewpoint of getting these facilities up and going.

The ongoing maintenance and financial controls can be done through—as in the city of Guelph, if you use that as your model, and it's not the only model available in today's modern technology market—a user fee on the amount of garbage you put out. That is how the city of Guelph, in combination with $11 million from the province over the last number of years, plus ongoing user fees and the sale of the recoverable materials at the other end, has helped to get this facility up and going and continuing.

1030

A lot of people today in this province have a pile of money and they're not quite sure where to put it. They're putting it into Ontario and Canada savings bonds or into some initial offers from companies, but there's also a growing area of income trusts. To me, if we had imagination from the brokerage community and the technology companies, they could create over time a very solid income trust that people would be willing to buy in units on the open market. Why is that a possible solution? Because over time we know we're going to have garbage, despite the best efforts of the packaging industry to reduce some of the packaging—and they have a long way to go, in my estimation, in dealing with this problem. But at least there's a continuous cash flow distribution back to the investors. These are the kinds of new approaches that, in my estimation, we need to deal with this problem. Otherwise, we end up having the old compliance conflict between rural and urban living, of moving garbage out of large urban areas into rural areas, resulting in ongoing environmental assessments involving the dumping of garbage, which impacts very adversely the land table and the water quality in this province. So we need to break through and have new solutions.

En conclusion, je crois que cette résolution de M. Beaubien indique une grande opportunité pour créer plusieurs nouvelles directions—une nouvelle combinaison qui utilise les finances dans un partenariat avec les compagnies de technologie. On a grand besoin de cette combinaison pour trouver une solution et développer une capacité de réduire les déchets dès l'origine des citoyens de la province de l'Ontario et de la ville de Toronto.

We all talk about Kyoto. Here is an actual means of grasping this very difficult concept, where we have great rhetoric on both sides, and actually moving to try to accommodate the gas emissions to get our garbage down. What we're going to have to do is tap into the financial markets and into the technology, because it's already available. What we need is a working solutions group, in my estimation, of MPPs, députés from all sides in this Legislature, who are interested in a solution, whatever that may be. One can disagree about the technologies, but at least we're moving toward trying to solve this problem once and for all.

What we need is the engagement of the investment community, of private investors. What we need is the involvement of forward-thinking entrepreneurs and less emphasis on compliance and enforcement. That's going to be there forever, as long as you have garbage dumps. But we can do a parallel movement as we go into this 21st century that involves engaging these people to try new pilot projects, whether it's the city of Guelph or the city of Toronto. I would really like to see them develop and engage in a new solution.

What this government also needs to do is to start looking at putting pressure on municipalities, whether it's the city of Toronto or other places, that want to export garbage across the border. While it may be an exportable commodity under NAFTA, to me it's a very dangerous practice, not only from the viewpoint of drivers on the 400-series highways, but also of the wear and tear on our infrastructure.

In my estimation, this is the way to go: some kind of working solutions group to deal with the problem from the political, environmental, technological and financial communities, and move ahead. That's why I strongly support the resolution of the member as he presented it today. I have tried to refrain from getting into who's to blame and who's not to blame. It gets you nowhere. What we need are solutions. That's why I was so perturbed that somebody thinks we can't deal with it in that spirit. For once, let's make an effort. Perhaps we'll fail, but at least we can say we really tried, because at the present moment we are in an impasse, where this whole approach is going to go on for years, and nothing is getting done. We've got to break through that kind of thinking. We've got to change our attitudes about garbage and work toward new solutions and directions that provide some breakthrough and that get us, 10 years from now, to where we will say, "Yes, this was a starting day." Monsieur Beaubien was the initiator of that new enterprise and initiative. I commend him very much for that, and I hope other members of the House would try to seek a solution in this hour rather than the usual stuff that I have been as guilty of as the rest of us, engaging in rhetoric as you look back. That's why I've refrained from it today. I would hope you'd take a new spirit, a new approach, a new attitude in trying to resolve a very complex problem.

We do need the solutions. We owe it to our younger generations, these folks who are sitting right in front of the Speaker today. Otherwise, they're going to ask in a few years, "Where was this generation in trying to solve a garbage problem?" Where were we? Let's stop this rhetoric. Let's try some new approaches. I don't have all the answers, but we need to start afresh. I hope this would be the day we could do it.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this particular resolution. I like the part of the resolution that talks particularly about waste diversion and what I think are the three Rs: reduction, reuse and recycling. I have a bit of a fear, as perhaps some others in the House do, that somewhere in this, rearing its head, is incineration.

The member for Etobicoke North, who just spoke, was a member of the committee, as I was, and there were a lot of good suggestions that came forward to us. I was pleased to hear him mention some of those suggestions that have in fact been helpful. The committee was very good in looking at a variety of options, but when it came down to it, I think what we looked at as being the hierarchy was first of all reduction. I think everybody mentions, with reasonably good evidence, that there is overpackaging in North America. We tolerate a lot of packaging that many of us would consider to be unnecessary. We recognize in food safety, for instance, and in other circumstances—medicine and so on—that packaging has to be the way it is. But in so many instances a lot of the things we have purchased commercially are well overpackaged, and we could reduce that. That's source reduction. The first thing that we as a society have to do is look at ways to reduce that waste.

The second is, how can we possibly reuse some of the products we have out there? I can recall about a dozen years ago, when I was discussing with some people who were pretty progressive in that field then—from Guelph, for instance; that has been mentioned—that there's an opportunity to recycle a lot of wood waste. People laughed at the beginning of that. Take a look today at what's happening at wood waste, how it's being used once again. Even though some of the scrapyards cause us no end of angst because of some of the things that happen in there, scrap dealers were some of the original waste recyclers, taking metals—particularly steel, but aluminium and other metals—and using them once again. That means we don't have to put it in a landfill or dispose of it some other way. When we talk about waste diversion, when we say "Divert," it should be to divert from a way of disposing of it. That's when we mean: diversion into something that's relatively benign.

One of the things I want to caution members about, because the incineration crowd rears its head every time you get into a crisis of this kind, is that incinerators are not the panacea that many people think they are. I commend to you a letter from Neil J. Carman, PhD, clean air program director, Austin, Texas, to the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and Energy, September 14, 1995. He says:

"Most of the incinerators in our territory experienced mechanical and operational problems which were often linked to human error." He goes on to say, "I am quite skeptical of the ability of incinerators to operate in full and continuous compliance with the most stringent permit requirements. It is technically remote to achieve even 80% continuous compliance." I don't have time to quote all of it, unfortunately, but at the end he says, "Incineration ... of garbage is merely trading one set of manageable problems for another set of more difficult problems."

So I simply want to say that those who hold out incineration as the panacea are, I think, moving in the wrong direction. This is not to say that we shouldn't look at new technologies. Our committee looked at many of those. Our landfill sites already produce gases. We can use that methane gas for producing electricity. Most progressive communities are now capturing that gas and utilizing it. Does that mean we want to continue to have huge landfills? No, but we are making some use of them.

We have to set ambitious goals, in my view. If you don't set ambitious goals, you end up not achieving them. I know there was a goal set that by the year 2000 we were to have 50% reduction—in other words, diversion from landfill or incinerators. Well, that's only about 25%. It's extremely disappointing and not acceptable.

Guelph is a good example. People should look at Guelph, should look at Edmonton and Halifax for these innovations: the wet-dry separation and the composting that goes on. There are a myriad of possibilities out there that we have to pursue if we're going to solve this problem, whether it's home composting or it's the municipality doing the composting. We have suggested that all over Ontario that we should have a 60% diversion rate—all over Ontario. The member says there are some communities that achieve better than that. Good for them. They should be complimented for doing that.

We should look at the alternative fuels report and many of the recommendations that have come from that. I won't get into the detail, but I think that's important. We have wood waste, we have metal waste, we have rubber waste, we have plastic waste, all of which can be converted and used once again or recycled. So we should be disappointed and in some cases we should be ashamed as a society that we have not achieved a much greater diversion rate, but we shouldn't despair at that, because the initiatives are out there.

The member for Etobicoke North talked about Europe. Europe gives us many examples of how to deal with packaging, how to deal with waste diversion. It really takes the will to do it and it really takes goals that are measurable and goals that are enforced; in this case, it must be by the Ministry of the Environment of Ontario.

I'm a bit worried that the member is steering into incineration. I worry about that, but I do like the part of the resolution that talks about the diversion of waste from landfill and incineration and other ways of disposing.

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to welcome students from the great school of Michael Goetz in the great state of Mississauga who are listening intently to this discussion on landfill. I welcome them here and I know you would want to do so.

The Acting Speaker: Of course that is not a point of order, but welcome.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I don't know if I have much of a voice left today. Last night was my third night in a row of being here until after midnight trying to get my private member's bill, Bill 77, passed, which has not happened and will not happen.

I want to say to the member that he hasn't defined in his resolution what he means by "cost-effective, modern technology." There are many out there, but I want to say at the outset that the new word now for "incineration" is "combustible." It's not incineration any more. I remember when I first got involved in the incineration fight, when Mr Bradley was the minister, because the city of Toronto wanted to build a huge garbage incinerator in my riding. I was a private citizen at the time. We had a polluting one there that we wanted to shut down, and they wanted to build a new one.

I remember hearing all the same arguments we're hearing today about the newer technology: "Oh, it's new technology. There are very few emissions and the smoke-stack is really high and it will disperse all over. Don't worry about it. It's good technology." We're hearing the same thing today about these capital-intensive combustion technologies. I don't support them, for a number of reasons, but I'm going to give you the two main ones.

One is that these units are often privately built and operated, and they're financed by a guaranteed throughput agreement. What this actually means is that once the municipality builds one, it has to feed it garbage, so this short-circuits waste reduction efforts. That's been proven. They're also not cost-effective; they're very expensive. If we talk about garbage as also a resource, talk about it in terms of waste diversion instead of just garbage, what this is then all about is that when you get into those kinds of technologies and building those kinds of combustible capital-intensive technologies, you've got to feed it garbage all the time. Then it becomes out of sight, out of mind, which is the spiral we've been in all these years.

We all know now that landfills are out of the question and that we have to find other ways of dealing with our garbage. The objective is to bring in very solid and very good timelines, with incentives to do more composting and to get rid of so much of the packaging, as they have done in Europe.

The other reason combustion technologies are not a good thing, are the wrong way to go, is that they always produce unstable toxic substances, whether it goes up the stack or not, which it's true, in the new kinds of technology it doesn't in the same way as just throwing it into a big hot fire. The combination of the burning of plastics at very high temperatures under that technology actually created dioxins.

I remember being told at the time, "Don't worry about that. It's such a tiny amount of dioxin and it's so well dispersed that it's nothing to worry about." The pollution abatement equipment within the existing technology would get most of the toxins out. But then what happened was you had fly ash and bottom ash, which was extremely toxic, especially the fly ash, which had to be sent to landfill. We're hearing today from the member for Sarnia-Lambton, and we all know about the problems with hazardous waste in her riding. She makes an issue of it time and time again, as she should.

We have to understand, as we talk about these new combustion technologies, that some of the same problems still exist, so I've outlined them. You've got the problem with taking away the incentive to do all the other things around the three Rs and getting more and more into composting, and the incentive to come up with really good timelines to get these programs up and running, as they have in Europe. That's why they're so much more advanced than we are, because governments there were forced to bring in very strict timelines when they banned incineration, banned landfill. What do you do? I met, as we all did, with some of the environmental industry representatives who were here earlier this week. They made it very clear that that's the kind of incentive they need. They are exporting some of the newer technologies all around the world because they can't get them up and running here. Why are they exporting them all around the world? Because in some areas, some jurisdictions, they have brought in these very tight time frames with the banning or the phasing out of landfill and incineration.

Garbage never just disappears. The idea of throwing it into a hole in the ground or throwing it into some kind of combustion process—you don't have the stuff coming up the stack, but it doesn't disappear. You still have, as I've said, an unstable toxic substance that is created out of that technology and these are landfilled. So we're creating in that process a situation where you have to deal with that residue. It's got to go somewhere, and it ends up going in some hole in the ground.

To get into discussions around moving toward that technology is wrong-headed. What we need to do is what the city of Toronto did, and contrary to what members in the government today said about Toronto being far behind, the city has recently, after the big fight over the Adams mine, which we will all remember, and I am proud to say I played a very large role, along with Jack Layton and David Miller at city council, and others, David Ramsay from the Liberal caucus—we fought that very hard and we stopped that.

While I'm on that subject, let me say that we've just recently received information, a secret report, a document we've got our hands on, that shows that northern Ontario proponents of the plan—it's not dead yet; they're bringing it back again—to bring garbage from Toronto to the Adams mine have it once again on the table, and the plan this time is to get it out of the hands of government altogether. What they're trying to do, what they're proposing, is to have one of the Smart Growth panels—

Interjection.

Ms Churley: Excuse me. The mayors and others in northern Ontario have come together because they want the jobs. It's wrong that we're trying to resolve a waste management problem because of the desperate need for jobs up north. That is wrong-headed as well. We need to do some economic development up there that doesn't involve this constant fight to try to get Toronto's garbage to throw in a pristine lake up there. But it has opened up again because they now realize they're not going to be able to get the city of Toronto to agree, so they want the government to mandate a special panel and give them the absolute authority to make this decision. I want to say very clearly that we will not stand for it, that it will not happen, but it's disheartening to those who are very concerned about the environmental aspects of that that it's back on the table. We will fight that.

The government had an opportunity to do some of the things that are before today when it brought in its Bill 90. I worked very hard on that bill, and I made, I believe, about 18 amendments, which were all turned down. I want to make clear to you some of the things in the government's own bill that would have advanced us so far in terms of our timelines here and getting to 100% diversion, which is what we have to get to essentially.

But what they did was, and I made an amendment about this, the bill does not support the composting. This is the government's own Bill 90. It does nothing to support and encourage municipalities to get organics out of the waste stream. Can you believe that? The government brought in a bill to deal with waste management—I prefer to call it waste diversion—and there was nothing in it about composting. We all know that if we don't get the organics out of the waste stream—that is the worst thing that goes into landfill. It's the organics that cause all the leachate and all the environmental problems. We argued ferociously to get something in the bill about waste management on waste diversion, on composting, and they refused to accept that amendment.

Also, the bill that the government brought in also did not put a priority on waste reduction. What else did it not do? Incredibly, as we stand here today to talk about needing to become more aggressive about how we deal with our waste, Bill 90 did not set waste reduction targets. Can you believe that? In the resolution before us today there is what I believe is still too little, too late. But the government's own bill on waste reduction has nothing about reduction targets. Again, we brought in an amendment to try to deal with that.

There are a number of other amendments I made to improve Bill 90. For instance, there are no incentives in it to reach targets. It allows industry to get away without giving any money. There are no concrete timelines for the money. It actually prevents the implementation of a deposit return system for the LCBO. It allows the newspaper companies to pay their way out of it.

That's what we had. We had an opportunity with Bill 90 as a government bill to make it very, very strong. Every single amendment that was made was turned down.

I do want to say in defence of Toronto, after the attacks from the Tory members today, that the NDP waste reduction target, by the way, is 80%, as stated in our urban vision. That number should be in this resolution today. But the city of Toronto has adopted an aggressive plan for the diversion of waste from landfill. Their targets are aggressive and they're realistic, including 60% diversion from landfill by 2006 and 100% diversion by 2010. I have their plan here. I'm not going to have time to read it all out, but I would request that all the government members who are taking great delight once again in attacking the city of Toronto—they don't live in the city. Many, many people come into this city to work and leave their garbage behind, so it works both ways. Some of our garbage is shipped out, and I agree that it's wrong. We have to find other ways to deal with our garbage. But at the same time, there are lots and lots of people coming into Toronto, leaving their garbage behind. So the reality is we're not dealing with the big problem of people just treating their garbage like garbage and just leaving it behind, wherever they may be.

In the Waste Diversion Task Force 2010 Report from the city of Toronto, summary of recommendations, "A" is source-separated organics. There's a whole section. They made that their biggest priority. They have a good plan as to how to do that and there are projects up and running now. But they also say that they want to "engage the marketplace to provide the required treatment capacity in 2002 to manage the city's source separated organics prior to the commissioning of the city's new Dufferin transfer station anaerobic digestion facility," which is now under construction. They have a take-it-back program, "that $20,000 be put aside from the 2001 funding available for diversion programs, to help with the administration." It goes on and on about how to set up a program so that industry takes back a lot of the packaging that they are producing.

Again, we have seen that it works in Europe. When you have these aggressive policies in place—again, the environmental industry folks who were here this week said that that's what they need to get their technology up and running here and what they need to get industry, the producers of the packaging, as they have in Europe, to actually reduce the packaging so that it doesn't have to be sent to landfill in the first place.

They talk about new and emerging technologies, but they're not just talking about these things in a study, with recommendations just in a study; they have an active task force set up to bring these newer technologies around anaerobic digestion to compost. They have a task force up and running to get these things in place. Many of the councillors at city hall agree that trucking the garbage to Michigan is not the answer either. We would all agree with that; it is certainly not the answer. I would just say to the member that I wish his target was more aggressive and that I'm really worried about incineration becoming—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Response?

Mr Beaubien: I would like to thank the members for their comments, the members from Sarnia-Lambton, Etobicoke North, St Catharines and Toronto-Danforth. I would like to comment on the comments that the member for Sarnia-Lambton made when she said that I had been converted on my way to Damascus. First of all, I don't know where Damascus is and I don't think it's a very safe place to go right now. I would like to put on the record that on Thursday, June 15, 2002, I introduced a very, very similar resolution dealing with landfill. She talks about being converted; I was converted a long time ago.

Here's what the member for Sarnia-Lambton said: "I would like to say that I'm pleased to speak on this resolution. This whole issue of environment and environmental responsibility, it's a culture of responsibility, it's not a culture of blame." I would have to agree with that. She also mentioned about the hazardous landfill site in her riding, which was part of my former riding. I do agree that everybody has concern with this. I'm going to address my comments to the people that may be watching at home. This landfill site has been in place for 40-some-odd years. Fifteen years ago, when I was mayor of the community of Petrolia, when it was under the name of Tricil they tried to expand the incinerator. The town of Petrolia raised some opposition. I would ask the people that have those "Stop the toxic sludge" on your lawns today, where were you 15 years ago?

Furthermore, with the expansion in 1997, when there were four public hearings in the community of Brigden, now the St Clair township, I attended two or three of these meetings. And I say, where were you each and every one of you at that time? That is the question we have to ask. There's no doubt that none of us like to see hazardous waste being landfill in our backyards. However, for the record, that landfill has been there for 40 years.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debate on ballot item 75. I will place the questions related to the disposition of this item at 12 o'clock noon.

FIRST NATIONS MINING AND FORESTRY REVENUES

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I move that, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should, in consultation with First Nations communities of northern Ontario and with other levels of government, develop and implement mechanisms whereby those communities can share in the revenues from mining and forestry operations that are conducted in their traditional territories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): The member has up to 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Bisson: I am more than pleased to be here this morning debating this motion. I want to tell members of the assembly, this is somewhat of an historical moment because something of this magnitude has never been tried before. I want to explain to the members where we going with this motion, what it's all about and why we're calling on you to support the First Nations communities of northern Ontario.

First of all by way of background, just so you know, we're fortunate and unfortunate in northern Ontario with the find of the DeBeers mine. Just outside of Attawapiskat, DeBeers has been working on developing a diamond mine for a number of years now. It has been both a blessing and a curse to the community. It has been a blessing in the sense of an economic opportunity, but it has been a bit of a curse in the sense that there are no clear rules about how that community can share in the benefits of that operation if it should become an operating mine. For a number of years, the community has been struggling with trying to negotiate with DeBeers some sort of an equitable arrangement so that whatever benefit comes from the activities of that operation, community members and people generally within the region are able to benefit by what has happened and what could happen with DeBeers.

The problem has always been that First Nations communities are treated very differently under law when it comes to how we share with revenue. Let me put it very simply. I live in the community of Timmins. It's a mining community. Any mine that is developed in our community, there's a very simple process for the municipality to be able to get benefits from the activity of mining. It's called assessment. So when the municipality of Timmins, as all other municipalities, has an activity like that, they are able to charge an assessment through tax and collect that money to develop infrastructure, build sewer and water, develop the needs of the community. The unfortunate reality in the way the federal government has set up reserves is that they've basically given those communities no mechanism by which to share in the economic activity that happens in and around their communities and on their traditional territories. So you have a very inequitable situation. If you were to have a DeBeers set up in Timmins, clearly Timmins would have some mechanism to extract revenue to pay for community services, but because it's up on James Bay and is in the traditional territories of the First Nations, there's no such mechanism.

So my resolution simply says that we want a process to start, by way of a declaration in this House this morning, so that the provincial government, in consultation with the First Nations communities, develops some sort of mechanism, and whatever that mechanism is will be determined by that process. I don't know if it should be a tax. I don't know if it should be assessment. I don't know if it should be a revenue-sharing formula. That's something that has to be determined through the process. All I want to have started today is that this House says, "We, this House, agree with the concept and want the government to sit down with the First Nations to start the process of discussion so we can develop policy and legislation in this province that treats First Nations communities fairly and in the same manner as other communities in the enjoyment they have in their communities."

I want to say as well that it's a bit of an irony that we're here today, because we know that back in 1977, there was a declaration that was made by the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation, the former Treaty 9. In that was a meeting between the provincial government and the then Treaty 9, which is now Nishnawbe-Aski Nation, that basically called on the provincial government to do a couple of things. I just want to read very quickly what it called for. It said, "Our custodian role must remain with us. It is our sacred duty"—as First Nations—"to pass it on to our unborn children. We do not accept the illegal seizure of our lands by the Europeans." It went on to ask that the government become involved in their right to develop their individual communities. What they called for by way of the declaration back in 1977 was to get the province, a signatory to Treaty 9 and Treaty 3 and others, to sit down with the First Nations communities so we can figure out how we can make sure the communities can get the tools they need to share in projects that happen in and around their community and to make sure they have the ability to share in what happens when it comes to economic activity.

Here we are a number of years later, and not one step has been taken since that declaration. I've got to say one thing I've learned from dealing with my friends the Mushkegowuk Cree and others: man, you guys are patient, really patient. If it was the city of Timmins or the town of Hearst or the city of Toronto that had to face what your people are going through, I don't know what would happen, but I can tell they would not be as patient as the Mushkegowuk Cree and other First Nations people in this province. I say to the government, patience only goes so far. We need to make sure we're able to take this motion forward so we can start that process.

I also want to say in passing that the problem we have in our communities is that the funding formulas set up by the federal and provincial governments to fund communities, in my view and I think in the view of my friends from the Mushkegowuk Cree, are just enough to allow the communities to fail. We never give our communities enough money to allow them to do what we take for granted in our communities. We never get enough for housing.

I look at communities like Kashechewan. My good friend Leo Friday, chief of Kashechewan, is here. I look at people like—well, I'm not going to go through all the names because I'd run out of time. I'll just use Kashechewan as the backdrop. Here you have a community where there's a desperate need for housing, a desperate need to provide much-needed services that we consider to be basic in our communities. The federal government transfers just enough money so you can't make it. It puts the community in the position of failure. They don't give you enough money to do what you need to do. As a result, it just sets things up to fail.

What the First Nations communities are saying is, "If you're not going to fund us with proper funding formulas, what we really want, in the end, is our own ability to do what everybody else does, and that is to share in the resources and activities happening in our traditional territories." We, as New Democrats, and I hope all the members of the assembly, believe in the basic concept that we need to treat our First Nations people fairly.

I want to relate also, in the few minutes I've got left, a story that was told by my good friend Leo Friday yesterday in a meeting we had with Minister Elliott, the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. He related to our assembled gathering a very powerful presentation that gave the story about how in his community, unfortunately, as in many other First Nations communities, there is extremely high unemployment, as much as 90%. People are forced, because of the situation that has been imposed on them, to live in a cycle of welfare. What adds insult to injury is that the welfare is not even enough to survive. The rules, in the way they're set up and the way the money is sent out, is forcing people to make decisions about not paying a hydro bill, not buying food or not paying their rent. It puts the whole community in a situation of extreme hardship. I thought the presentation that Chief Friday made yesterday was to the point.

I hope the government understands that we also have a responsibility beyond just what my motion is today to look at what levers we have within the province to deal with the needs of the First Nations community.

We have a very different history in the province of Ontario. We are the only provincial jurisdiction to have signed treaties with First Nations communities. We signed Treaty 9 back in 1905 and amended it in 1929-30. We are only province across Canada to have been signatories to the treaties. The problem we have is that, as a province, we've never figured out what that means, because when the treaties were signed the powers the province had were somewhat different. As we assumed responsibility for various activities such as resource development, the province has never been an active participant in figuring out what their responsibility is as a signatory to the actual treaties. This motion, in my view, will assist us as a province to determine what our role and responsibilities are as a signatory of that treaty.

I just want to say to the members in the House in the minute that I have left that I hope we're able to count on your support. The motion is a very simple motion.

The Mushkegowuk Cree are here today. We have chiefs, deputy chiefs and various people from all the communities of the Mushkegowuk council: Teresa Hall from Attawapiskat, the chief who negotiated the DeBeers agreement; we have with us Leo Friday from Kashewewan, chief of Kashewewan; we have Moose Factory represented by both deputy chief and chief, Norm Hardisty and Charlie Cheechoo; we have the grand chief of Mushkegowuk council with us today, Mr Ernest Beck; we have with us as well representatives from the communities of Fort Albany and other communities within the Mushkegowuk Cree.

They're asking you here today to support this motion so we can start the process of giving them the ability to become full partners in this province when it comes to economic development opportunities on their traditional territories. It's a simple motion. It's calling on a process so they are able to find a way, with our provincial government, to determine how they can best share in the economic activities on their traditional territories.

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I am pleased to rise today to address the private member's business put forward by the member for Timmins-James Bay.

I appreciate the member's interest in the welfare of Ontario's First Nations. Our government does not support the concept of sharing government revenues derived from forest management with First Nations communities. However, I believe that our government has made every effort to ensure that aboriginal people share in the benefits of resource development.

I specifically want to address forest management on crown lands and the many ways in which our government has worked to ensure that First Nation communities are involved in and benefiting from forest management.

First of all, let me provide a bit of background. In order for the Ministry of Natural Resources to carry out timber management on crown land in Ontario, it needs the approval of the Minister of the Environment. The current approval, under the Environmental Assessment Act, was granted by the Minister of the Environment in May 1994. The approval is valid for a period of nine years, which means it expires in May 2003. The 1994 approval was granted based on extensive public hearings on MNR's class environmental assessment for timber management on crown lands in Ontario.

In order for forest management to continue on crown land, the term of the approval must be extended. The requirements of all the terms and conditions of the 1994 timber EA approval will be met by May 2003.

The Ministry of Natural Resources submitted its timber class environmental assessment review to the Minister of the Environment in July of this year. The ministry's submission contained a detailed account of its compliance with the 1994 approval, as well as important proposed amendments and a recommendation to extend the approval. The review was the subject of a thorough and far-reaching process of consultation and careful study.

Public information centres were held across the province. As well, two preliminary documents were posted on the Environmental Bill of Rights registry and were available on the ministry's Web site and through mailings to the interested parties, including First Nations communities and aboriginal associations.

Significant proposed amendments were outlined in the timber class EA review, because major steps have been taken in forest management and environmental protection since the EA approval was granted in 1994. New legislation, progressive forest policies and innovative land use strategies have put Ontario at the forefront of sustainable forest management. These advancements include the development of the Crown Forest Sustainability Act, the Ontario forest accord, Ontario's Living Legacy land use strategy, the Environmental Bill of Rights and the improvements to the Environmental Assessment Act. The Ontario forest accord was a particularly important milestone, as it brought together MNR, the forest industry and non-governmental agencies. The common goal of the accord is to make sure Ontario's forests remain healthy, large and diverse while providing for a healthy forest industry.

The review takes into consideration all of these developments. Ultimately, the review will make it easier to continually improve forest management activities; give the ministry more flexibility to respond to the changing economic, social and environmental values of the people of Ontario; and better reflect the roles of the forest industry and MNR.

One of the items covered in the 1994 approval was the involvement of aboriginal people in forestry. Specifically, the terms and conditions of MNR's timber class EA approval required the ministry to negotiate locally with aboriginal people to identify and implement ways of ensuring more participation by aboriginal people in the benefits that accrue from forest management. It is a commitment that the ministry has worked hard to keep, and with our forest industry partners, our efforts in this regard will be ongoing.

The ministry's district managers have been active in meeting with aboriginal people and the forest industry to hold discussions, share information, and facilitate co-operation and dialogue to find ways to improve aboriginal peoples' involvement in forestry activities and ensure they receive the benefits associated with that involvement. In fact, things have improved considerably for aboriginal communities since the 1994 approval. Economic development opportunities associated with forestry have increased. These have been outlined in the annual reports on forest management provided to the Ontario Legislature and in the ministry's timber class EA review that I have already referred to.

A wide range of business opportunities has meant more jobs and income for aboriginal communities.

Millions of dollars of silviculture contracts, joint ventures and mutual agreements are arranged each year with aboriginal people by the forest industry and the ministry. I'll give you a few examples.

In Hearst, Dryden and Sudbury districts, a number of First Nations, including Eagle Lake, Constance Lake and Sucker Creek, carry out a range of silvicultural activities, including pre-commercial thinning, manual tending, tree planting, pruning and cone collection. First Nations in the area are also involved in collecting data on regeneration, native values mapping and forest inventories.

First Nations in Thunder Bay and Nipigon districts, such as the Whitesand and Rocky Bay First Nations, have contracted for harvesting as much as 70,000 cubic metres of wood for sawlogs, veneer and pulpwood. In Fort Frances district, aboriginal businesses have contracted to haul about 40,000 cubic metres of wood and carry out road maintenance.

Aboriginal people are also directly employed in mill operations and supervisory work that takes place in the bush. The recent development of the mill in the Kenora area has seen significant commitments by the forest company in the area of aboriginal employment.

1120

By way of comparison, only about 100,000 cubic metres of wood were licensed to aboriginal people in 1986. By the year 2000, over 1.5 million cubic metres of wood within the area covered by the timber EA were allocated to, cut by, and contracted to or offered to aboriginal people and businesses.

About one million cubic metres of crown timber were harvested by the aboriginal people. This is about 4% to 5% of the wood harvested in the province. The estimated value is $30 million to $50 million.

I would also like to point out that the ministry is recommending revisions to the approval and will provide even more opportunities to aboriginal communities to take part in the development and implementation of forest management plans.

The members may be interested to know that the ministry is working on a project to realize economic potential in the far north, as well. Known as the Northern Boreal Initiative, the project could result in hundreds of jobs, with First Nations taking a leadership role in managing local forestry operations.

The work of the Ministry of Natural Resources on this initiative supports the government's commitment to promote growth along all regions and industries, and goes hand in hand with efforts of the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines.

I can assure the members of this House that the Ministry of Natural Resources is committed to working with aboriginal people and the forest industry to identify ways of continuing to improve aboriginal participation in the benefits of forest management.

For the reasons that I have just outlined, this side of the House will not be supporting the private member's bill of the member from Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I want to begin by also welcoming the grand chief and other leaders from the First Nations here today to the Legislature, and secondly, to say that I will be supporting the resolution. It is a resolution, not a bill, by the way, and I think it's a solid resolution. I'll be supporting it for a variety of reasons.

One is—and the member from Timmins-James Bay mentioned it—that there's a certain fairness element in this, where other communities do share in revenue from businesses and industries in their area, and I think in terms of fairness, the First Nations have a claim on this.

The second reason is that the one thing I'm very aware of is the enormous amount of talent in our First Nations and, I might add, a growing amount of talent, as the very talented young people coming along can make a tremendous contribution to the economic well-being of the province of Ontario. This resolution, while it will not fundamentally change things, is clearly a step in the right direction.

The third reason I support this is something I've learned here in the Legislature—perhaps I knew it before, but it certainly has been amplified here—that too often we are faced with a choice of, “You have to make your mind up.” You're either for this or you're for that. Right now I find that in Toronto, you're either for the police or you're for the black community. To me, I'm for the police and I'm for the black community. I think we sometimes make these situations where we force people to kind of make their minds up. Are you for the mine and forestry industry or are you for the First Nations? I think a legitimate answer can be, “I'm for both.” One way that can happen is to put in place mechanisms that both force dialogue and also that—to use the jargon—it's a win-win. I think this can be a win-win. I think clearly our mining and our forestry industries are fundamental to the province of Ontario. They are tremendously competitive worldwide. We have to make absolutely certain that those industries continue to grow and blossom and be cost-competitive on a worldwide basis. They provide an enormous amount of the province's wealth and jobs. But at the same time, it seems to me that that also can be done in co-operation with our First Nations. If we find mechanisms that encourage a dialogue and a mutual co-operation, I think our mining and forest industries can be stronger and our First Nations can be stronger.

The next reason I'm supportive of this is that we have, frankly, much to learn from our First Nations. The member for Timmins said they're patient, and I know that. They take a long view of things. If you want environmentalists, if you want to understand the environment, go to our First Nations. They think generations ahead, not months or weeks or years ahead; believe me. We have much to learn from them on many things but particularly on a sustainable environment. They have a right to their communities and, more important, perhaps equally important, we all benefit from those communities.

Our industries have much to learn from the First Nations on the environment. I've read some, I don't pretend to be an expert, but I've read much of the history of the First Nations and, if you are interested in the environment, as I think all of us are in varying degrees, we can take lessons from our First Nations. I repeat myself, but Mr Bisson said if they have been patient on this issue, it's because they see things in the long term.

It gets back to my belief that one of our roles here is to find the mechanisms that can encourage co-operation between our First Nations, and in this case our forestry and mining industries. What the First Nations can bring, among other things—as I said earlier, I am very impressed with the tremendous talent in our First Nations, much of it underutilized because the opportunities have been denied. But there is an enormous and growing amount of talent. This particular resolution I think is worded in a way that provides quite a bit of flexibility. It sets us in a direction that allows the flexibility, I think, for the First Nations, and dare I say the industries and governments, to find a long-term, workable solution.

The thing that has often concerned me here is that for some reason or other we seem almost to set up situations that result in conflict rather than in resolution, as I said earlier in my remarks, that you've got to pick one side or the other. That is not a long-term solution. This provides some direction for the province, the industry, the First Nations to work together in ways that can say, "Listen, the First Nations are as interested as anyone in good economic development for the province of Ontario, but it should be done in a way that's co-operative with them, that their fundamental rights are not jeopardized and that we can get into, as I said earlier, this win-win situation."

I'm quite taken with the resolution. I think it provides the government, industry and the First Nations with a sense of direction on this. My experience has been that the First Nations are clearly people of goodwill, looking for a sustainable solution that's consistent with their fundamental beliefs. I think this resolution will help to accomplish that, so I'm pleased to stand in support of it and look forward to its adoption.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I'm very pleased to take part in the debate of this resolution. I will be supporting this resolution and I urge all other members to do so as well.

I want to begin my comments by pointing out that this not a new issue. What I've got is a document called the Declaration of Independence for Nationhood and Governance of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation of Northern Ontario. This is a document that was presented to Ontario through the Honourable William Davis, Premier of Ontario, during the All Ontario Chiefs' meeting at Queen's Park, Toronto, Ontario, on July 7, 1977, and presented to the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and senior cabinet during a joint meeting between the National Indian Brotherhood Assembly of First Nations executive council in Ottawa on July 11, 1977.

So what is being sought here today is not something new or revolutionary. It is something that the Nishnawbe-

Aski First Nation and the tribal councils that are part of Nishnawbe-Aski have been seeking for some time. Their statement is clear: "We say to you that we have the right to govern our own spiritual, cultural, social and economic affairs." The First Nations are geographically located in a part of Ontario where there are virtually no non-native communities, where you might find from time to time teacher, a nurse or an airline pilot who is a non-native person, but otherwise all the communities are aboriginal communities—the largest geographic expanse of Ontario. So you have no non-aboriginal communities, all the communities are First Nations communities, and they're simply saying over and over again that NAN communities seek to establish, intend to establish, their own capacity to govern themselves and the land where they live. Why a non-native government that is essentially situated in southern Ontario would not recognize this claim and would not seek to work toward the furtherance of this claim is beyond me. If you reflect upon it, we haven't exactly done such a great job of governing our own affairs, particularly from the environmental perspective.

The document makes for very good reading. But particularly interesting are the points which are set out near the end of the document, where in 1977, and I want to emphasize that again, the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation said, "Today we are here to tell you who we are. We, the Nishnawbe-Aski, have inalienable rights. They are: the right to" govern ourselves—I don't think that's such a revolutionary concept—"the right to receive compensation for our exploited natural resources; the right to receive compensation for the destruction and abrogation of our hunting, fishing and gathering rights; the right to renegotiate our treaty as understood by our people, land and resources; the right to negotiate with the elected governments of your society through appropriate levels of representation; the right to approach and negotiate the judicial, governmental and business institutions of your society in our quest for self-determination and local control." I don't think these are revolutionary concepts. The resolution today really speaks to two of the points outlined in that document of 1977.

Why is this so important now? It's very important now because—let's take, for example, the forest industry. We know, although this government doesn't want to admit it, that we are facing a wood supply gap across northern Ontario that is already hitting in some timber harvesting areas and which will last until somewhere around the year 2035. It doesn't mean that we have run out of timber. What it means is that the mature forest that is there is rapidly being harvested, and the new forest which is growing—some of it started to grow in the 1920s, 1930s, 1940s, after it was originally harvested—will not be ready to harvest in some cases until 2020, and in other cases until 2035. So there is a wood supply gap. The existing forest is being depleted. The new forest will not be ready for harvesting until 2035. Anyone who is familiar with northern Ontario, south of the 51st parallel, will know that there are literally hundreds of paper mills, pulp mills, sawmills and other kinds of forest products mills which need a timber supply.

Some have suggested we'll get wood from Manitoba. Good luck growing timber on the prairies. Some have suggested we'll get wood from Quebec. Anyone who lives along the Quebec border knows that Quebec is trying to get wood out of Ontario, and in fact, under this government, is succeeding in getting a lot of wood out of Ontario. Some of suggested we'll get wood from Michigan, Wisconsin or Minnesota. I live on the Minnesota border. They have already run out of wood. They're approaching many private landowners in northern Ontario and saying, "Please, can we get your wood?" One of the disturbing situations that's going to happen around Sault Ste Marie as a result of this government's wrong-headed policy is that we're very likely to see wood come out of the Sault Ste Marie wood basket and head south into the United States. When that happens, along go the jobs and economic activity.

The reality is that wood, the timber to provide for those sawmills, paper mills and pulp mills, can only come from one place. It can only come from the territory of these people north of the 51st parallel. I believe, hearing the member for Peterborough's speech earlier, what he has outlined is basically that this government does not want to negotiate compensation; it does not want to negotiate a formula for the sharing of the resource wealth. What this government has in mind, so often as we see it in southern Ontario, is that it will grant the timber rights to forest companies. The forest companies who have been granted the timber rights will then hold all of the bargaining power and then First Nations are put in the position of having to bargain with the timber companies who have the timber allocation, and try to see what they can get. That's what this government has in mind.

I just want to say very clearly to the members of this government: you are completely wrong. Your strategy is going to run into a brick wall because the First Nations understand that their territory is the only territory from which timber can come. You haven't figured out yet how to grow trees in the middle of Lake Huron or Lake Superior, and I doubt that you will in the next 20 years. The only place you're going to get the wood is from their territory. My advice to the government members is stop the masquerade and stop the process where individual timber companies try to go in and play one First Nation off against another. Stop the masquerade, and in a spirit of co-operation and recognition of mutual respect, sit down with the First Nations, sit down with the tribal councils and sit down with Nishnawbe-Aski Nation and begin the process of negotiating agreements which provide for a sharing of the resource wealth, and also provide for the elements of control, land use planning, environmental protection, and protection of traditional rights that you would want if you were living north of the 51st parallel. That's exactly what you would want.

You would not want someone who doesn't live amongst you, who has very little understanding of your way of life and has shown not the least bit of respect for the environment south of the 51st parallel, to dictate how resource development is going to happen on your land. Let us recognize: it is not our land, those of us who reside in southern Ontario. It is very much the territory of First Nations and has been long before any of us got here.

1140

The final element as to why this is so important is that the development this government wants to facilitate north of the 51st parallel without negotiating these kinds of agreements with First Nations in fact has happened in the area of southern Ontario south of the 51st parallel.

Just a brief history lesson as to what has happened, and that history lesson is really, I think, best exhibited in what I call the red pine and white pine economy: Where I grew up used to be land covered with red pine and white pine forests, some of the most beautiful forests in the world. When those forests were initially timbered at the turn of the 19th century and early in the 20th century, the logging barons who came forward employed a lot of aboriginal people. In the community where I grew up, Fort Frances, there were three large red and white pine sawmills. If you look at the employment records, many of the people who worked in those sawmills were aboriginal people from First Nations like Couchiching, Manitou Rapids, Nicicousemenecaning or Onegaming. In fact, two of the sawmills that I know of were actually located on the reserve. But after the red and white pine forests were essentially depleted and those mills were shut down and they moved to Jack pine and spruce sawmills and to pulp and paper mills, something happened. When the red and white pine mills were shut down, aboriginal people were put out of work. But when new jobs were added in the spruce sawmills and in the Jack pine sawmills and in the pulp and paper mills, aboriginal people by and large weren't employed.

When we stopped running wood down the rivers and lakes, we stopped the river drives. Many of the people who worked on the river drives in those early days were aboriginal people. But when we stopped the river drives and started transporting all the wood to the mills by truck, guess who lost their jobs? Guess who was excluded from the economy? Aboriginal people. This cannot be allowed to happen again. That is why these kinds of agreements must be reached and we must demand, as legislators, that whoever the government of the day is gets to the table and sits down in that approach of mutual respect, of recognition, and begins to negotiate those kinds of agreements.

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I'm pleased to rise today to speak to the private member's business put forward by the member from Timmins-James Bay. I'd also like to welcome the members of the First Nations who have made the trip down here today to the Legislature.

I do want to applaud the member for Timmins-James Bay for his ongoing concern for the First Nations communities, but I must put on the record that much of what the member wants has already been implemented and is already happening.

The government supports impact benefit agreements and resource development agreements between companies and First Nations. In fact, one example of this is the current Musselwhite agreement, which has a revenue-sharing provision voluntarily offered by the mining company. We applaud and encourage this type of partnership between developers and First Nations communities.

The Ernie Eves government is already consulting with our First Nations communities in northern Ontario and with other levels of government on how they can best share in the benefits that accrue to a community from mining and forestry operations, particularly when those operations and activities take place on their traditional territories. Let me tell you how.

The provincial government is providing $500,000 over three years through the Ontario Trillium fund to assist the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation in land and resource capacity development. That's happening right now. I was just looking at the press clippings from yesterday.

Our assistance will help increase NAN's access to expertise in forestry and mining. It will help expand NAN's participation in forest management, land use planning, mineral exploration and economic development activities.

It will enable the hiring of two forestry coordinators and a mines and minerals coordinator who will contribute to the development of policies on resource development and community economic development opportunities. I know in my own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, through the NOHFC, recently, Niigon Technologies has opened. It's just getting going. There are many millions of dollars invested in this new high-tech plastic injection moulding plant right at Moose Deer Point First Nation in Parry Sound-Muskoka.

The Ministry of Northern Development and Mines is also participating in a working group with the Attawapiskat First Nation, Indian and Northern Affairs Canada and DeBeers to help the First Nation participate in and derive benefit from a potential diamond mining operation.

I can point to one particularly successful resource development agreement that has been signed between a mining company and First Nations in northern Ontario, and that's the Musselwhite Mine operated by Placer Dome. Four First Nations and two First Nation councils signed a resource redevelopment agreement that provides benefits to the communities in proximity to the mine. The original agreement was signed in 1992 and renegotiated last year. The agreement will run for the life of the mine.

There are four signatory First Nation communities that benefit directly from the agreement. The four signatory communities are Cat Lake First Nation and North Caribou Lake First Nation from the Windigo First Nations Council, as well as Kingfisher Lake First Nation and Wunnumin Lake First Nation with the Shibogama First Nation Council.

Another eight affiliate First Nations can benefit indirectly. The agreement includes a target of at least 30% of the mine workforce being drawn from the four signatory First Nation communities, with any remaining opportunities offered first to the eight affiliates.

Under this landmark agreement, the company provides a share of revenue from the mine to the signatory First Nations and First Nation councils.

The signatory communities also provide contract services to the mining operation, including general maintenance, food services, laundry service, road and dam construction, nursing services and air transportation. Simply put, the mine generates a substantial amount of secondary activity that creates wealth and fosters well-being in a community that would otherwise be without such opportunity.

I think it's fair to say that none of this could be happening if Ontario didn't have an investment climate that is conducive to attracting new mineral exploration.

Estimates for the far north region are that the mineral and commercial forestry resources would likely generate $5 billion to $7 billion a year in economic activity.

The Ernie Eves government recognizes the need to do more to assist far north residents in realizing the potential of those natural resources, the potential they hold for unprecedented economic development and self-reliance among far north communities. To that end, the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines is coordinating a comprehensive economic development approach for the area. The ministry will develop partnerships among First Nations, the private sector and other levels of government and help far north communities pursue economic development opportunities.

While some First Nation leaders oppose resource development in their traditional territories, many others see the economic benefits of developing these resources in an environmentally sound, sustainable manner. It boils down to a question of trust and understanding.

I think the members of this Legislature would be interested to know that, over the past two years, senior ministry staff have travelled throughout the far north region meeting leaders and members of First Nation communities. In these exploratory discussions, ministry staff have undertaken a dialogue with First Nations about their mistrust of the mining sector and the government.

There are also misconceptions and misunderstandings about the mineral development industry and the laws that regulate it. Gaps in credibility and understanding we can and will bridge. There are partnerships we will develop and strengthen to assist First Nations in developing natural resources for their communal benefit.

Our record speaks for itself. We are on the ground and engaged with our First Nation partners and our mineral development stakeholders. For those reasons, this side of the House will not be supporting this private member's resolution.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I want to indicate at the beginning that I intend to support this resolution. I am concerned when I hear members say—because this is private members' hour. This is where we are to take off our partisan hats. I know it doesn't always happen, but this is where we try to take off our partisan hats and individually make some decisions. I've heard two government speakers say, "That's why we on this side will not be supporting this resolution." I would hope there are members on the governing side who will say, "I'm here elected as the member from" whatever constituency "and I'm not necessarily going to fall into line with what the whip happens to say or what a couple of speakers happen to say." They're certainly entitled to make those speeches, but I hope this isn't a government position that is going to prevent all members on the government side from either abstaining from or supporting this resolution.

First of all, look at the resolution itself. It's not a radical resolution. The member for Timmins-James Bay I think has tried to accommodate all views in this House. I look at this as a moderate resolution. It wasn't worded to provoke opposition, to somehow have those of us on this side of the House line up against those on the other side of the House and make the governing side look bad. If he wanted to do that, he would have had a much more strongly worded resolution than we see here today.

Let me review it: "that, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should, in consultation with the First Nations communities in northern Ontario and with other levels of government, develop and implement mechanisms whereby those communities can share in the revenues from mining and forestry operations that are conducted in their traditional territories."

It's a very moderate resolution, a very reasonable resolution, one that is calling for dialogue, one that is calling for implementation in consultation with all who are involved.

First Nations communities, aboriginal people in this province, do not seek to be dependent upon any level of government. If they were, it would be a very difficult life because the funding mechanisms we see today from senior levels of government are inadequate. What First Nations communities are looking to is an opportunity to tap into that which other communities in the north have been able to tap into; that is, revenues from, benefits of an economic nature from, the mining and forestry operations that are found in northern Ontario—a reasonable request.

If we were to say that a particular urban municipality in the north was looking for the opportunity to derive some revenue, some economic benefit from mining and forestry operations within the borders of their municipality, I suggest that members of this Legislature would expect that that would be fine, that that would be exactly what should be happening. We have the chiefs here today representing aboriginal people in the north, representing First Nations communities, simply asking for the same right and the same benefit.

As has been mentioned by the member for Timmins-James Bay, very often, and because of circumstances beyond the control of those who reside in the communities, there have been very high levels of unemployment. This has then compelled people to seek social assistance. There isn't anybody who wants to be in that circumstance. Aboriginal people are asking for the opportunity to be part of the development, to be part of the decision-making, to be the beneficiaries of economic development taking place in the north. Those of us who reside in the south probably cannot understand nearly so well as those who reside in the north the circumstances facing First Nations communities and the lack of opportunity, in many instances, for aboriginal people in this province.

This resolution allows us an opportunity to change that, to move forward from whatever the past was. The member did not in his speech try to cast blame on anybody. He explained circumstances that exist and why those circumstances are unsatisfactory, but he did not engage in vitriolic finger pointing in his resolution or in his speech, nor did any of the other speakers I have heard on this side of the House engage in that, nor, to be fair, on the government's side. That is why I would be hopeful that we would see some support from at least some of the members on the other side, to allow First Nations communities to be equal partners, to be partners in the development that takes place in the north rather than having to rely on the goodwill of people who are directly involved in the operations of forestry and mining industries.

Obviously, with the large number of aboriginal people in the north, one would expect that employment opportunities would be there. Many times they have not been, and the benefits have been drained from northern Ontario to the benefit of southern Ontario and very often to the headquarters of the companies in the United States.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: Well, we have had traditional lands desecrated and environmental considerations placed in the background instead of the forefront where First Nations wish to see them. I think a moderate, reasonable, progressive resolution of this kind merits the support of all members of this House.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I rise just for a couple of minutes to talk, I guess, as a southern boy, someone who grew up in Toronto and who literally has lived his whole life in southern Ontario. In fact, my first opportunity to travel to some of these northern places came as an elected member of this Legislature in the last year. It was on that travel, to try to find out about questions of housing, municipal structure, social and economic conditions so that I could better be a critic in my portfolio here, that I had an opportunity to go to the communities of Port Severn, Peawanuk and Moose Factory. It was the first time I had ever been to such places.

I have to tell you, what you find there is sad. What you find is a land full of wealth and opportunity, and energetic, wonderful people who simply want to participate in what all of us here in southern Ontario have. What you see is that they live in poverty and despair. They have an absolute lack of work in some of those communities of 90% unemployment. They do not want this for their children, as we would not want it for ours. They want an opportunity to be part of a system that can work for them as it works for us. We need to do that. We need to give them the same opportunity we give people in southern Ontario. The same opportunity we give to towns, cities and regions in southern Ontario, we need to give to the people in northern Ontario, particularly those of our First Nations communities. They need to have full partnership and ownership. If and when they have that, they won't be coming down here.

The member for Parry Sound-Muskoka questioned this and said, "We're already doing this." If we were already doing this, would this resolution be necessary and would they be here in the Speaker's gallery looking for it? The answer is crystal clear: no, they would not be, because it would already have been done.

I want for the people of our First Nations what I want for the people of Toronto: to be partners and to share in our prosperity.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate? Response.

Mr Bisson: First of all, I want to echo what my colleague said and thank all those who participated in this debate. If the issue had been resolved and if everything is so wonderful in the province of Ontario, I say, like Mr Prue, why are the Mushkegowuk people here?

They're here because they're crying for help. They're saying they're not being treated equitably. When they look at communities south of the undertaking, communities like Hearst and Timmins, they are envious. They say, "Look at those communities that can benefit from the mining and forestry activities that relate to their communities. Why do we sit in our territories not able to share with others what is rightfully ours?"

All they're asking for is a simple thing: "Help us develop a process." Neither they nor I are telling you, "Do this or that." All we want to set up is a process so that the government can sit down with the various levels of government in consultation with the First Nations people of the Mushkegowuk Cree and others to be able to develop a process on how we make them full partners in our own province. I can't believe the government would not support that. I am almost speechless that the government would contemplate voting against something that is so fundamental. We stand up and talk about the rights of people around the world. Let's look in our own backyard. Let's look at what's happening in these communities.

I know that there are honourable members on the other side of the House. I know that Mr Young, the minister responsible, had supported this motion when I talked to him originally. I got the impression the government was going to vote for it. But I say, let's not repeat what's happening in South Africa where those people have been left behind by the colonial attitude of what's happened in the development of those countries. That exists in our own backyard. I implore you to support this resolution so that we can give the communities of the Mushkegowuk

Cree and others the ability to do a very basic thing that we take for granted in our communities, and that is to be able to share in the economic prosperity that comes from the development of resources in our communities. It's only a question of justice.

So I say to the members, the two government members that spoke, it was wonderful what you talked about but none of it affected the Mushkegowuk Cree. You talked about all of the policies that deal with everything south of the undertaking. This motion is to deal with what will happen north of 51. There is nothing that has happened up to now, so I implore you, please support this resolution.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debate on this ballot item.

WASTE MANAGEMENT GESTION DES DÉCHETS

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): We will now deal with ballot item number 75.

Mr Beaubien has moved private member's notice of motion number 23. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. The motion is carried.

FIRST NATIONS MINING AND FORESTRY REVENUES

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): We will now deal with ballot item number 76.

Mr Bisson has moved private member's notice of motion number 22. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1202 to 1207.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please stand and remain standing until their name is called.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

REPORT, INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER

Ms Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): As members know, the Conservative member for Simcoe North asked the Integrity Commissioner to review my personal use of the overseas courier. That review is now complete.

I am pleased with the commissioner's ruling that none of the specific complaints under the integrity act made against me by Mr Dunlop were valid. I welcome his statement that at no time did I intend that taxpayers incur any costs for this shipment.

I accept the commissioner's finding that I made an error in judgment and appreciate that he stressed that, "It would be unfair to characterize this as other than an error in judgment made in good faith."

While the commissioner recommends that no penalty be imposed for the unintentional breach of the unwritten parliamentary convention, I do not take his ruling lightly. As members know, parliamentary conventions are not defined in the act, and are generally accepted practices established by usage or custom. As the commissioner has recognized that "Purolator advised ... that personal (as opposed to government) shipping was done frequently by members," I would encourage all members to learn from the clarifications and advice of the commissioner. I know I will be taking much greater care in the future.

SANTA'S VISIT

Mrs Julia Munro (York North):

'Twas the night before Christmas,
when all through the abode
Only one creature was stirring, and she was cleaning the commode.
The children were finally sleeping,

all snug in their beds,
While visions of Nintendo and Barbie flipped through their heads.

And Dad was snoring
in front of the TV
With a half-constructed bicycle propped up on his knee.
So only Mom heard the reindeer hooves clatter,
Which made her sigh,
"Now what's the matter?"

With toilet bowl brush still clutched in her hand,
She descended the stairs,
and saw the old man.
He was covered in ashes and soot
that fell with a shrug,
"Great!" she exclaimed.
"Now I have to clean the rug!"

"Ho, ho, ho," cried Santa.
"I'm glad you're awake.
"Your gift was especially difficult to make."
"Thanks, Santa," said Mom,
"but all I want is time alone."
"Exactly," he chuckled,
"so I've made you a clone."

"A clone?" she muttered.
"What good is that?"
"Run along, Santa;
I've no time for chit-chat."
Then out walked the clone—
the mother's twin,
Same hair, same eyes,
same double chin.

"She'll cook, she'll dust, she'll mop every mess.
"You relax, take it easy,
go for a run."
"Fantastic," the mom cheered.
"My dream has come true!
"I'll shop and I'll read—even sleep a night through."

From the room above, the youngest did fret,
"Mommy, come quickly!
I'm scared and I'm wet!"
The clone replied,
"I'm coming, sweetheart."
"Hey," the mom smiled,
"she sure knows her part."

The clone changed the small one and hummed her a tune,
As she bundled the child in a blanket cocoon.
"You're the best mommy ever.
I really love you."
The clone smiled and sighed,
"And I love you too!"

The mom frowned and said,
"Sorry, Santa. No deal!
"That's my child's love
she is trying to steal."
Smiling wisely, Santa said,
"To me it is clear,
"Only one loving mother is needed here."

The mom kissed her child and tucked her in bed.
"Thank you, Santa,
for clearing my head.
"I sometimes forget,
it won't be very long
"When they're too old for my cradle and song."

The clock on the mantle began to chime.
Santa whispered to the clone,
"It works every time."
With the clone by his side
Santa said, "Good night.
"Merry Christmas, dear Mom....
You'll be all right!"

Sometimes we need reminding of what life is all about.

NORTHERN HEALTH TRAVEL GRANT

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): It is more clear than ever that northern Ontario residents are nothing more than an afterthought for the Ernie Eves government. Certainly the treatment people are getting through the northern health travel grant program proves that, as it is appallingly substandard. Even if your claim is approved, you must now wait over three months to get your payment. For those who are unjustifiably turned down, the system for appeal is fraught with frustration. The Minister of Health must initiate a thorough review of the program to at least make the process easier for people already under great stress due to their medical condition.

But the Minister of Health must also make some immediate corrections to the guidelines that are presently in place. Do you realize that midwives, who are funded by the Ministry of Health, do not fit into the category of specialists approved for funding under the travel grant program? Despite the fact that most GPs no longer practice obstetrics and most obstetricians no longer accept low-risk pregnancies, making midwives the only option for many women, the ministry will not have these valued professionals included in the travel grant program. This is absurd and truly unfair.

Then we have the very sad situation faced by a constituent of mine whose wife was rushed down to southern Ontario earlier this fall for emergency care and who subsequently died. When her husband's family inquired as to whether he could receive assistance to get back home, they were told he no longer qualified for a companion grant because his wife had died. Minister, come on. This is a bitterly cruel loophole that is beyond description.

I've written you on both these issues and you've not favoured me with a reply on either matter. Please show some compassion and correct these unacceptable flaws in the travel grant program.

CHRISTMAS EVENTS IN DURHAM

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): In the spirit of the season, I'd like to briefly mention just a few of the many Christmas events in my wonderful riding of Durham.

In Port Perry, the Magical Christmas Eve parade was held November 30. I'm pleased to say a record attendance was reported. It was sponsored by the Scugog Chamber of Commerce. Congratulations to Ray Northey, parade coordinator and also the director of the chamber of commerce. He received assistance from Margot and Ken Gadsden, Peter Crawford and many other dedicated volunteers. I also thank Jim Grieves, who was kind enough to drive me in the parade.

On November 23, an estimated 40,000 attended the evening Santa Claus parade in Oshawa. Funds for the event were raised in part through local businesses and organizations who each adopted one of Santa's reindeers. Congratulations to the Santa's Parade of Lights committee. Its members included John Burns, the chair, Robin Burns, Sharon Young, Kevin Campbell, plus many other hard-working volunteers.

I should also mention such events as the drive-through nativity at Trull's Road Free Methodist Church in Courtice. Many have also enjoyed the readings of Dickens's A Christmas Carol at the Newcastle community hall and St Paul's United Church in Bowmanville. These charitable fundraisers are held in conjunction with the CBC. This Saturday, branch 178 of the Royal Canadian Legion will host its "stuff a bus" event to collect non-perishable food and toys for needy families.

Finally, I would like to send greetings to Henry Downing and Merrill Van Camp, two lifelong friends who have not been well recently. My wife, Peggy, and I feel fortunate because this year is the very first Christmas for our very first grandchild, Meghan Elizabeth Lohse, born December 2.

To the constituents of Durham riding, I wish season's greetings, Merry Christmas, best of health and good happiness for the new year, and to all members of the House I extend the same greetings.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): Recently, the Minister of Consumer and Business Services made inappropriate comments about an administrator at the Grandview Lodge long-term-care home in Haldimand county. I quote Mr Hudak from the Dunnville Chronicle on November 20 when referring to his portion of the county: "I frankly put more faith in their judgment than in that of an administrator who couldn't be elected dog catcher. It reinforced my feeling that there is an arrogance in the administration of the county."

Arrogance? These are comments unbecoming a minister of the crown. Haldimand county council are in fact elected officials, and they have asked the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to redistribute long-term-care beds across Haldimand county from the redeveloped Grandview Lodge site in Dunnville. As of today, the proposal has not gone forward and there's a belief that it is this minister who is holding back the county's plans.

It was the Harris-Eves government that downloaded services to municipalities and forced through the costly restructuring of the region of Haldimand-Norfolk. This has forced Haldimand county to make this tough decision about their long-term-care needs for the good of the entire county. For this minister to attack the county staff is unacceptable and I would ask the minister to make a formal apology to the administrator for his comments.

It is the Harris-Eves government who has underfunded long-term care in this province. They tried to sneak through a 15% increase on the copayment paid by seniors, and it is this minister and the member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant who voted against implementing minimum standards of care in long-term care homes. If anyone is to be held responsible for the reduction in the number of beds in Dunnville, he need only look into a mirror.

With the attitude shown by these members, it is high time that the people of Erie-Lincoln and Haldimand county, indeed the entire province, look for real leadership and a new direction for the province based on respect, dignity and compassion, especially for our most vulnerable elderly citizens. It is time to elect Dalton McGuinty the next Premier of the province of Ontario.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): In the west gallery today are adoptees and birth mothers representing the thousands who want Bill 77 passed. I just met with them, and although there were some tears shed, there was also—

Interruption.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I hate to interrupt; we'll start over. We can't have any demonstrations in the gallery. I know you've come here, but unfortunately the rules do not even allow you to clap. I would ask that you don't have any demonstrations, even silent ones where you raise your hand like that. You've come a long way and we like to see you here. But unfortunately, if it continues I will have to ask you to leave, and we don't want to do that.

You can start all over again, member for Toronto-Danforth.

Ms Churley: Thank you, Speaker. I apologize for that.

In the west gallery are the adoptees and birth mothers. I just met with them, and although there were some tears shed, there was also a lot of anger and renewed resolve, for they've watched the sad spectacle in this House over the last few days of their human rights once again being denied them. They saw Tory member after Tory member get up and say they support Bill 77, that it's a good bill, but then say no whenever I requested third reading and a vote on the bill. They watched while the government found time for three government private members' bills to be called and one Liberal bill, which happened last night. But excuse after excuse was given whenever I called for my bill to be voted on.

The government House leader says it's because we broke a deal. There was no deal, and there was time to call the bill. If there was time to call three government bills and a Liberal bill, there certainly is time to call Bill 77. I would say with all sincerity to the government members, there is still time to do that.

It is time to stop this nonsense. We all know the reason that the government is not calling the bill. It's not about broken deals—which means nothing to these people, the kinds of deals and horse-trading that go on here. They need their human rights granted to them. We have the power to do that. What we must do is tell the truth here, that there are some people in the government caucus who do not support the bill and those few are holding up the democratic rights, the human rights, of those people in the gallery today.

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to call for unanimous consent to call Bill 77 for third reading and a final vote.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

CIVICS CLASSES

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): I rise today to recognize and congratulate Mr Stephen Fischer of North-western secondary school in Stratford and Mrs Bev Gregory of St Michael's secondary school in Stratford, as well as the students in the civics classes they teach.

In the civics course, students learn about the evolution of democracies and the different types of political systems. They also study political parties, the division of powers between federal and provincial governments, our Constitution and our Charter of Rights. International organizations such as the United Nations and global issues such as human rights are also studied.

Students must also write to an elected official in their community. I have received many letters from students on a variety of issues such as literacy, health care, the voting age and the driving age. I want to take this opportunity to commend the students at Northwestern and St Michael's for the time they spent writing to me on the provincial issues that are important to them and for their interest in the political process.

Please join me in applauding the efforts of teachers like Stephen Fischer and Bev Gregory in giving our students a better understanding of our political system, our political process, and the value of being part of a democracy.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale):

It's the middle of December and all across Ontario the streets are turning to slush. This is a normal occurrence in our cold province, but taken to a higher level by Ernie Eves and the Ontario slush tour because yesterday, in one of the most cynical moves I've ever seen, he demonstrated that he leads a government that, on the one hand, grabs hold of a little billion-dollar slush fund, and then starts doling it out closer to the election, while kids who have had their special-needs assessment completed wait for the desperate kinds of services they require.

He cynically waited until such time as was the best political opportunity for him. Building on the premise that justice delayed is justice denied, then what do we take from a government that knowingly disadvantages disabled kids even further by sitting on money and waiting for a politically opportune time to offer that funding, while those kids' needs go unaddressed?

So, all across Ontario we send the message out to people that when Ernie Eves arrives in your town, toting this new billion-dollar bag of tricks, understand one thing: if he's addressing important needs in your community related to education and health, understand that he's been sitting on this money. He's been waiting for a politically opportune time to announce it. While he has done that, people across this province have suffered. That's the kind of cynicism you get from that government and that's why they need to go.

SUPPORT THE SHORTS

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): I would like to inform the members of this House about 10 very special people who live and work in my riding of Peterborough. These folks are employed by Purolator and have been dubbed the couriers with cold legs and warm hearts.

Early in November, the couriers distributed to their customers flyers titled "Support the Shorts," a food drive program with the one and only rule that they must be wearing shorts in order to collect a donation of a non-perishable food item for the local food banks. The program began November 12, and we all know how many very cold days we have had since November 12. As of December 6, the couriers have collected over 6,000 pounds of food. The program ends tomorrow, December 13. This is a great testimony to the generosity of the people who live in my riding and in the province of Ontario.

Purolator has recognized Dave Allen, Mike Lacey, Terry Johnston, Art Langlois, Jason Fraser, Dave Nichols, Jeff Payne, Clark Downey, Doug Shear and Rob Green with a certificate of appreciation, and we too should congratulate them for initiating this novel idea and freezing their limbs for a great cause.

I would ask the members of this Legislature to applaud the efforts of these 10 men who got into the Christmas spirit, braved the cold, had some fun and collected tons of food for the less fortunate.

VISITOR

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want members here to join me in welcoming a good friend and one of Ontario's best athletes ever, having won seven Grey Cup rings in his history of 20 years in the CFL. Please join me in welcoming my good friend Hank Ilesic.

APOLOGY

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Yesterday I made a statement in the House that created a stir and had another member question whether or not I was allowed to do so. Your response prompted me to look into the standing orders. The standing orders, VI, page 18, "Rules of Debate," indicate:

"(a) Speaks twice to a question, except in explanation of a material part of his or her speech in which he or she may have been misunderstood, in which case the member may not introduce a new matter.

"(b) Directs his or her speech to matters other than...."

I refer to section (h):

"Makes allegations against another member."

By this reading, I believe I was out of order. I want to speak to you, personally, as the Speaker of this place. I apologize. To the House, I apologize, and in particular to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant, I apologize. I plan to keep the decorum of this House at all times because I came here with that intent. I apologize, Speaker.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member for that gesture. I thank the member very much, sincerely. If all the members were like him, I wouldn't have any problem in here, I can assure you.

MEMBER'S BIRTHDAY

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: we have another colleague in the Legislature whose birthday is today, and our caucus has chipped in for a little present. It's something I think he would particularly appreciate. It's a plaque. I don't know whether any of the members can guess: who would it be?

Interjections: Tony Ruprecht.

Mr Phillips: Well, it is. Happy birthday, Tony Ruprecht.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Happy birthday.

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to allow the member opposite to present a petition at this time.

The Speaker: I think the member's probably kidding, but I appreciate that, and we wish him happy birthday.

VISITOR

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): I'd like to take a minute to introduce Naomi Ives. Naomi's a second-year master of social work student from Wilfrid Laurier, my old alma mater. My first experience here was to do a field placement, like Naomi, at Queen's Park. She's here today: Naomi Ives.

REPORT, INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that I have today laid upon the table the report of the Integrity Commissioner, the Honourable Coulter Osborne, responding to the request of the member for Simcoe North concerning Ms Sandra Papatello, deputy leader of the official opposition and member for Windsor West.

REQUEST FOR OPINION

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I further beg to inform the House that I have laid upon the table a request by the member for Don Valley East to the Honourable Coulter A. Osborne, Integrity Commissioner, for an opinion pursuant to section 30 of the Members' Integrity Act, 1994, on whether the Honourable John Baird, Minister of Energy, has contravened the act or Ontario parliamentary convention.

WITHDRAWAL OF BILL

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Yesterday, the member for Windsor West introduced Bill 228, An Act respecting Canterbury College. At the time it was introduced, this bill was unaccompanied by the usual documentation that lets the Speaker know what type of bill it is. As a result, it was assumed to be a private member's public bill. As a public bill, it is not in order.

Upon review, it is clear that the bill is intended to be a private bill. However, as a private bill it was likewise unaccompanied by the required documentation and was brought before the House outside of the normal procedures established for a private bill application.

I therefore find the bill not to be in order and have directed that it be removed from the Orders and Notices paper.

STATUS OF BILL

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Further, on Wednesday, December 11, 2002, the member for Hamilton West introduced Bill 233, An Act to amend the Assessment Act to more fairly permit exemptions from assessment to benefit senior citizens and disabled persons.

After first reading, the government House leader, Mr Stockwell, asked the Speaker to "review the bill for its orderliness with respect to the cost components to the financial base of the province of Ontario."

I have had an opportunity to review the bill in light of our parliamentary precedents and authorities.

Marleau and Montpetit's House of Commons Practice and Procedure states on page 898:

"With respect to the raising of revenue, a private member cannot introduce bills which impose taxes. The power to initiate taxation rests solely with the government and any legislation which seeks an increase in taxation must be preceded by a ways and means motion. Only a minister can bring in a ways and means motion. However, private members' bills which reduce taxes, reduce the incidence of a tax, or impose or increase an exemption from taxation are acceptable."

Furthermore, citation 998(1) of the sixth edition of Beauchesne states that "[a] private member may move that certain specified taxes be readjusted and that the scope of tax exemptions be enlarged."

Our own more modern precedents agree with the position taken by these authorities.

Therefore, I find that the Bill 233 does not offend standing order 56 and is in order.

I thank the government House leader for raising his concern.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on finance and economic affairs, and therefore move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table (Mr Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 116, An Act to proclaim Archives Awareness Week.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

Mr Spina: I beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on finance and economic affairs, and also therefore move its adoption.

Clerk at the Table: Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 117, An Act to proclaim Congenital Heart Defects Awareness Day / Projet de loi 117, Loi visant à proclamer la Journée de sensibilisation à la cardiopathie congénitale.

The Speaker: Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): I beg leave to present a report on the food industry program from the standing committee on public accounts and move the adoption of its recommendations.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mr Gerretsen: Very briefly, I might note that that's the fourth report the committee has presented since this session started in September. Two further reports were tentatively approved this morning.

This particular report has six recommendations. Just highlighting three of them, one of them states that the Ministry of Agriculture and Food should conduct a review of its compliance with advisory protocols and the operation of the computerized information management system.

Another recommendation states that the Ministry of Agriculture and Food should update and expand the baseline product studies based on its risk analysis system. These initiatives are essential to the timely notification of commodity producers to ensure food safety for Ontario consumers.

The last recommendation states that the ministry should provide the standing committee on public accounts with an overview of the findings of the consultant's reports and their potential to enhance food safety in Ontario.

With that, I move adjournment of the debate.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. Carried.

VISITORS

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like all members to join me in welcoming to the gallery here Andy Houser from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, John Bell from the Ontario Sporting Dog Association, Ray Gosselin from the Canadian Outdoor Heritage Alliance and Bob Frazer from the Ontario Bear Hunting Association.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LE MINISTÈRE DES SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

Mr Sampson moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 237, An Act to amend the Ministry of Correctional Services Act / Projet de loi 237, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le ministère des Services correctionnels.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): The bill amends the Ministry of Correctional Services Act to allow for the director or superintendent of a correctional institution to establish worker training programs for inmates or a group of inmates in an institution and allow them to earn credits, by doing that work, toward things such as accommodation, expenses and early remission.

ONTARIO DRINKING WATER SOURCE PROTECTION ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION DES SOURCES D'EAU POTABLE DE L'ONTARIO

Ms Churley moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 238, An Act to protect sources of drinking water in Ontario / Projet de loi 238, Loi visant à protéger les sources d'eau potable en l'Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Just as I forced the government to bring forward a Safe Drinking Water Act, I'm hoping to act as a catalyst to speed up the source protection act the government promised.

In the Walkerton inquiry report, part two, Justice O'Connor laid out the main components of what he called "a comprehensive provincial source-to-tap drinking water policy." These included a multi-barrier approach to protecting drinking water and a comprehensive source-to-tap provincial drinking water policy.

Justice O'Connor points out the painfully obvious: an essential component to providing safe drinking water is to protect the water from getting contaminated in the first place.

RECREATION RESERVE ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002

SUR LA RÉSERVE RÉCRÉATIVE

Mr Ouellette moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 239, An Act to establish a recreation reserve /
Projet de loi 239, Loi visant à créer une réserve récréative.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The minister for a short statement?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): The legislation I'm introducing today, if passed, will specify designated portions of the Kawartha Highlands as a recreational reserve. It is our intention that the proposed legislation will address concerns brought forward by the local stakeholders during the recent public consultation process to determine appropriate protection for the Kawartha Highlands.

In short, this legislation will provide another option for natural heritage protection, an option that takes into consideration local circumstances around existing recreational uses and ensures that areas so designated will continue to provide opportunities for recreational and economic benefits to the local communities for now and for future generations.

The recreational reserve designation would also provide greater certainty for people who hold existing leases or land use permits on crown land by ensuring through legislation that traditional recreational uses would not be further constrained or eliminated over time.

The legislation will be posted on the EBR, and I encourage all interested members of the public to review the proposal and make their comments known.

On a personal note, I want to wish everyone here the best of the season and a merry Christmas.

ONTARIO WORKERS'
MEMORIAL ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002

SUR LE MONUMENT COMMÉMORATIF
DES TRAVAILLEURS DE L'ONTARIO

Mr Agostino moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 240, An Act to establish the Ontario Workers' Memorial/ Projet de loi 240, Loi visant à ériger le monument commémoratif en hommage aux travailleurs de l'Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): This Legislature has rightly and appropriately passed legislation that has erected a police and firefighters' memorial on or adjacent to the grounds of the Legislative Assembly.

Ontario's workers are the lifeblood of this province and have contributed so much. Unfortunately, too many of our fellow Ontarians don't come home at the end of the day as a result of a tragedy in the workplace. This bill, if passed, would establish a memorial on the legislative grounds that would recognize all Ontario workers who have been killed in their line of duty and work.

ROAD SAFETY ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002

SUR LA SÉCURITÉ ROUTIÈRE

Mr Sterling moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 241, An Act to enhance safety and mobility on Ontario's roads / Projet de loi 241, Loi visant à accroître la sécurité et la mobilité sur les routes de l'Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The minister for a short statement?

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): I will defer until ministers' statements.

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR L'OFFICE DE LA
TÉLÉCOMMUNICATION
ÉDUCATIVE DE L'ONTARIOONTARIO EDUCATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AUTHORITY
AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

M<sup>me</sup> Boyer propose la première lecture du projet de loi suivant :

Projet de loi 242, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'Office de la télécommunication éducative de l'Ontario pour créer des sections distinctes de langue française et de langue anglaise / Bill 242, An Act to amend the Ontario Educational Communications Authority Act to create separate French language and English language sections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

M<sup>me</sup> Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): Ce projet de loi modifie la Loi sur l'Office de la télécommunication éducative de l'Ontario pour exiger que le conseil comporte une section de langue française composée de membres francophones et une section de langue anglaise.

Ce projet prévoit aussi que les émissions de documents en français dans le domaine de la radiodiffusion et de la télécommunication éducative relèvent exclusive-ment de la compétence de la section de langue française.

In this way, both sections of TVOntario will be able to continue to grow and to produce the programs and services best suited to their respective audiences.

TENANT PROTECTION
AMENDMENT ACT
(FAIRNESS IN RENT INCREASES), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA PROTECTION DES LOCATAIRES (AUGMENTATIONS ÉQUITABLES DES LOYERS)

Mr Bryant moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 243, An Act to amend the Tenant Protection Act, 1997 to ensure fairness to Ontario's tenants / Projet de loi 243, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur la protection des locataires en vue d'assurer un traitement équitable des locataires de l'Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): The bill amends the Tenant Protection Act, 1997, in a fashion that protects tenants, which is a novelty in this province. The act will be amended so that rent may not be increased if there is an outstanding work order. It also provides for a rollback for above-guideline rent increases in circumstances of unjust enrichment and ensures that there be a rollback of above-guideline rent increases if the landlord ceases to incur the cost to justify the increase and for the rescission of increases in rent where there are no further costs incurred by the landlord for the additions provided to the tenant.

SENIORS' PROTECTION ACT, 2002
LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION
DES PERSONNES ÂGÉES

Mr Colle moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 244, An Act to protect people over the age of 65 from discrimination by amending the Human Rights Code / Projet de loi 244, Loi visant à protéger les personnes de plus de 65 ans de toute discrimination en modifiant le Code des droits de la personne.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): The Seniors' Protection Act, if passed, would amend the Human Rights Code to require the appointment of a seniors' ombudsman. The ombudsman reports to the chair of the Human Rights Commission. The seniors' ombudsman acts as an advocate for the elderly and attempts to resolve complaints of abuse and neglect of the elderly in long-term-care and medical facilities.

The code is also amended to remove the reference to 65 years. This results in its being contrary to the code to discriminate in employment on the basis of age because a person is 65 years of age or older. The bill also prevents employers from changing the access to benefits or rights to benefits for workers who are 65 years of age or older.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to seek unanimous consent to give third reading to Bill 74, the amendment to the Marriage Act, which was approved by all three parties in here, went to committee and had committee hearings.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

MARRIAGE AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LE MARIAGE

Mr Murdoch moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 74, An Act to amend the Marriage Act / Projet de loi 74, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le mariage.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Hold it. Sit down. There was a little bit of confusion here. I was looking to this side. I will ask again, if we could, and if people would listen carefully.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members; this will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1411 to 1441.

The Speaker: Would the members please take their seats.

All those in favour will please rise and remain standing.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSESROAD SAFETY
SÉCURITÉ ROUTIÈRE

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): Earlier today I introduced a new safety bill. This is exemplary of our government, because since 1995 our government has made road safety a priority. We have introduced tough new laws to target aggressive and irresponsible driving, we have brought in stiffer fines for those who demonstrate poor driving behaviour, and we have stepped up our efforts to combat drinking and driving.

Our efforts to improve road safety have received widespread support from the public. We have worked with our road safety partners and our stakeholders, including police services and community groups.

As a result of these actions over the past seven years, Ontario has made tremendous progress in improving its road safety record. In fact, the latest statistics indicate that Ontario's roads are the safest in Canada and the second-safest in North America.

But we cannot afford to allow this excellent record to make us complacent. We can and must do more to improve the safety of our roads. That's why today, we are moving forward to make Ontario's roads even safer with our proposed Road Safety Act, 2002.

At this point, I'd like to thank my assistant deputy minister Frank D'Onofrio, and my director of safety operations, Ernie Bartucci.

This bill would build on the province's excellent record of safety, and help us move closer to our goal of making our roads the safest in the world.

The proposed legislation is designed to accomplish several important objectives. It would target street racing with tougher penalties; improve traffic flow and safety by making the left lane a passing lane on many of our major highways; make booster seats mandatory for young children; reduce congestion by helping police to re-open highway lanes as soon as possible after an accident; and double fines for speeding in construction zones.

The bill proposes a total of 14 new legislative items. Some of the measures are designed to build on aggressive road safety initiatives we have taken since 1995. Others are in response to suggestions and recommendations from our road safety partners.

I would like to take a few moments to outline some highlights of the legislation.

We are proposing additional measures to crack down on street racing. Drivers caught street racing would be subject to immediate vehicle impoundment and the suspension of their driver's licence—both for 48 hours. This would be in addition to any other charges laid by police in relation to a street race, such as existing offences for street racing, speeding or careless driving.

The bill would also prohibit the use of equipment and prescribed substances, such as nitrous oxide, that boost the performance of engines. The message we want to send is that street racing puts lives at risk and it won't be tolerated.

Another proposed measure would improve public safety by allowing the Ministry of Transportation to regulate the level of after-market window tinting applied to a vehicle's windshield and front side windows. This would make it safer for police to approach vehicles with tinted glass. It would also improve road safety, allowing drivers and pedestrians to establish eye contact, and drivers to see better at night and during bad weather.

One very important measure of this bill would require parents and legal guardians to use booster seats for preschoolers and primary grade children. Motor-vehicle-related deaths are the number one killers of our children. With this proposed legislation, we aim to change that statistic. Under the bill's provisions, booster seats would be mandatory for children who weigh between 18 and 27 kilograms, or 40 and 60 pounds, and whose seated height is less than 63 centimetres, or 25 inches.

If passed, Ontario would become the first province in the country to make booster seats mandatory. This is appropriate, given that we were the first province to require seat belts in 1976 and child safety seats in 1982. With this measure, we are moving to protect those children who have outgrown their child car seats, but who are still too small for regular seat belts to be effective.

The proposed bill also contains new provisions concerning the collection of fines for outstanding driving-related offences from out-of-province drivers. Under these proposals, Ontario would work with other jurisdictions to enforce the collection of outstanding fines for driving-related offences.

This would pave the way for Ontario to pursue agreements with other jurisdictions to suspend the licences of their drivers for outstanding fines that are payable in Ontario. These agreements would work both ways. We believe motorists from other jurisdictions would drive more responsibly if they knew there were tougher consequences.

Another proposed measure in the bill would require drivers in Ontario to use the left-hand lane only for passing on highways with three or more lanes and a speed limit of 100 kilometres per hour. This is to encourage drivers to keep right except to pass. With this measure, we aim to reduce aggressive driving behaviours, such as rapid and erratic lane changes and tailgating.

In addition to these new measures, the bill also includes provisions designed to build on and strengthen the work of our road safety partners to better protect the driving public. These include clarifying the rules for medical practitioners on when and what medical conditions must be reported to the Ministry of Transportation.

It would allow all municipalities in the province to set a speed limit as low as 30 kilometres per hour in designated areas where there are traffic-calming measures, such as speed bumps. The city of Toronto currently has this authority. By extending it province-wide, all municipalities would have more options at their disposal in their efforts to improve road safety in residential areas.

This bill would also clarify the powers of police with regard to the removal of vehicles and debris from our highways, by protecting police from legal liability. Highway incidents often result in major delays that impact on safety, affect the economy and contribute to congestion. This initiative would support the police in their efforts to reopen highway lanes as soon as possible after a serious incident.

This legislation would introduce a series of initiatives that strengthen the province's ability to monitor and enforce commercial vehicle safety. These measures include: providing enforcement officers with new tools to crack down on illegal commercial passenger vans; revoking the licences of motor vehicle inspection stations that are operated by commercial carriers that have a poor safety record; requiring all taxis in Ontario to undergo annual vehicle safety inspections; and working with industry to develop a program to mark the boxes of trucks that haul gravel and other aggregates to help prevent overloading of dump trucks.

The last bundle of measures in the proposed Road Safety Act, 2002, would make highway construction zones in the province safer for road workers and drivers. If enacted, these proposals would double the existing fines for speeding in construction zones; give municipalities the authority to designate local construction zones, without requiring a bylaw, and to post speed limits in those zones; and require drivers to obey hand-held signs used by traffic control persons in construction zones and maintenance areas, the same way drivers must now obey stop signs held up by school crossing guards.

I am confident this proposed legislation would help us achieve our goal in Ontario of making our roads the safest anywhere. It underscores our government's commitment to a modern, efficient and safe transportation system, one that supports economic growth and sustains our excellent quality of life.

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I would have hoped that the minister would have taken all the recommendations that were in my Bill 153 when it comes to protecting people in our highway construction zones. I introduced this bill a year ago in memory of Dick Van Rooyen, who was killed as a construction worker in the infamous Carnegie Alley, which is in my riding. It has some of the aspects that the minister is calling for, but the minister did not go all the way. He did not provide a comprehensive bill like Bill 153, which I introduced in December 2001.

My bill would also have required that agreements would be made between the ministry and the construction company with the highways and include a provision for the use of police to protect the safety of the workers. It would require the closure of the travelled portion of the controlled-access highway while work is being done and diverting the traffic to the other side of the highway to ensure that all of those people who are standing on our roadsides would be protected.

But we are pleased that the minister took at least part of my Bill 153 to ensure the safety of those working in our construction zones. I'm sure that Liz Van Rooyen, the wife of Dick Van Rooyen, would be pleased with this very small step put forward by the minister. But I think that she would share our concern that he has introduced this on what is likely to be the last day of this sitting. He has introduced a bill to protect the public in various ways on the very last sitting day of this House.

I would have hoped that the minister, as he has taken part of my previous Bill 153, would have taken it upon himself to introduce Bill 112 as part of the government initiative when it comes to school bus safety. I introduced this bill in 1996. It has been introduced in this House five times. It has had all-party support for second reading on two different occasions, and yet the government fails to bring this bill to committee. Not only that, it fails to take the bill unto itself and bring it back.

If this minister and the previous three or four others since 1995 find fault with the bill and want to change it, let's do that to protect the 810,000 children who ride school buses daily in this province. There are 16,000 buses driving each and every day.

I spoke in this House before of some of the impediments to finding those drivers. One was tinted windows, so we welcome that. But still it remains that bus drivers will have a difficult time identifying the face of a driver who passes a school bus illegally, due to the speed of the vehicle and whether it passes the bus from the back or the front.

Most importantly, those school bus drivers, over 16,000 of them, are taking the time to watch the 810,000 children who get on and off that bus each and every day. Their primary concern is that most precious cargo, those kids who ride our buses.

The minister and previous Ministers of Transportation had the power to ensure that this bill would be passed. None of them have taken that unto themselves. None of them have taken my bill, as they have taken part of Bill 153, unto themselves in terms of construction zone safety. They could take the initiatives within my bill and please the 30,000 people who signed petitions in support of it, please the police, please the teachers, please the school boards, please those persons who drive school buses and please the school bus operators and owners themselves. There is widespread support for this bill across Ontario in every quarter. The only place there is no support for the protection of children in Ontario who ride school buses is on the government side. It's been here since 1996. It's been introduced countless times, with countless petitions, countless letters of support from all quarters in Ontario, and this government fails to ensure the safety of children. We don't have a conviction mechanism.

There was a blitz in Chatham-Kent just recently where the police identified 107 persons who passed school buses in just a two-month period: 107 times people risked the lives of schoolchildren by passing a school bus illegally. The police could do nothing because they have to have the identification of the driver of the offending vehicle. My bill would allow for vehicle liability. This government allows for vehicle liability—for what reason? To collect tolls on the 407. Shameful. They won't protect children in this province with the same mechanism, by an eyewitness account of a school bus operator. They use it on red light cameras. They use vehicle liability for parking violations. They use it for all manner of things, except to protect the 810,000 children who ride school buses each and every day.

M. Gilles Bisson (Timmins-Baie James): Imaginez-vous ce gouvernement dire qu'ils vont améliorer la sécurité sur nos routes. Quel culot. Ce gouvernement, comme on le sait bien, est un gouvernement qui, à toute occasion qu'il a eu la chance, a tout fait, franchement, pour éviter de prendre la responsabilité quand ça vient à la sécurité sur nos routes.

Si on regarde l'agenda du gouvernement, c'est très simple. C'est quoi qu'ils ont fait? Ils ont dit, « Premièrement, on va privatiser tous les chemins. » Une fois qu'on a privatisé les chemins, on s'est rendu au nord de la province, et il faut se mettre ses patins pour descendre la 11 puis la 17 parce que c'est plein de sel. Pourquoi? Le gouvernement, à travers le contractuel du secteur privé, n'a pas assez de sel pour le mettre sur les chemins. Quel culot: ils entrent ici aujourd'hui pour nous dire qu'ils vont améliorer la sécurité sur nos chemins. Je ne peux pas accepter que ce gouvernement est sérieux.

On regarde la situation avec les policiers de la province. Les policiers, combien y en a-t-il dans la province aujourd'hui? Il y en a moins que quand ce gouvernement a été élu. Ils en ont moins, et ce gouvernement dit, « On va avoir de la sécurité sur nos routes. » Comment avoir la sécurité sur les routes si on n'a pas les policiers-là pour appliquer les lois que le gouvernement eux autres ont introduites? Impossible.

Puis là on dit, « Tout va être bien dans la province de l'Ontario. » On est si bien, M. Sterling, le ministre des Transports. Quel culot qu'il a, ce monsieur-là, j'ai besoin de dire. But, Mr Speaker, we understand that the government purports to be doing something but they are quite frankly doing the opposite.

I want to propose this to the minister, a very simple premise. When people decide they want to go out racing a car down a back road or a highway, what is going to stop them from doing it? That they can't put some ethanol or some supercharged engine underneath their hood? No. It's knowing you've got the cops on the highway who are going to pull you over if you try it. So you can do all you want by laws—you can threaten to lock them up for life—but if there ain't police on the highway to stop them, how are you going to be able to deter the very action that you say, you purport, you want to change in this law? Absolutely impossible.

So I say to the government, it's another one of those doublespeaks. They say they want to do one thing with a bill or with a statement, but when it comes to their actual actions, I'm sorry; they're quite the opposite. Deterrence is the way to deal with the issue.

As many people who live across Ontario know—ask yourself this question when you're driving on secondary highways across the province: how many times have you seen an OPP cruiser out on the road? Ask yourselves. I'm on the highway every weekend. I go from Timmins to Hearst to Constance Lake and down to Kapuskasing. I'm all over my riding on the weekend. You can count on your hand how many times you see OPP cruisers in two months. It's not because the police officers are not doing their jobs. They are hard-working men and women. It's because they don't have the staff resources to put them on the highways. They're out patrolling our municipalities.

So now the government says it's going to introduce a bill. Well, I just say what I've always said when it comes to these kinds of debates: at the end of the day, if the government wants to really do something to deter an action, you have to take away the whole perspective from the people who are thinking of doing the crime by way of deterrence.

Comme j'ai dit, monsieur le Président, c'est une question d'un gouvernement qui dit une affaire quand ça vient au projet de loi mais qui fait complètement l'opposé quand ça vient à être capable de faire ce qu'ils disent qu'ils vont faire dans le projet de loi. Ils disent, « Ah oui, on va être très bien. » Mais je dis, comme j'ai dit au commencement, quel culot.

Là, je vais retourner à mon sujet favori. Ce gouvernement qui a privatisé nos chemins, qui dit dans cette loi qu'ils veulent améliorer la sécurité, je vous donne une suggestion. Monsieur le premier ministre—si seulement vous étiez si chanceux. Monsieur le ministre, ayez au moins le culot d'aller au cabinet de l'Ontario et d'admettre à votre gouvernement et à votre cabinet que vous avez fait une erreur quand ça vient à la privatisation de la maintenance de nos routes. Sur toutes les occasions sous contrat sauf un, vous payez plus d'argent que ça nous a coûté dans le passé.

Le ministre dit, « Non, non. » C'est tout ce qu'il sait, lui. Il ne sait pas comment dire oui à la sécurité de la population. En réalité, c'est le vérificateur provincial de l'Ontario, M. Peters, qui a dit que sur toutes les occasions sauf une, ça nous coûte plus cher aujourd'hui pour entretenir nos routes en hiver, et quoi ? Elles sont moins sécuritaires que dans le passé.

Je dis très simplement au ministre : si vous dites que vous voulez améliorer la sécurité, je vous donne une suggestion. Du sel, j'en ai sur ma table chez nous, j'en ai dans mon appartement. Je vous le donne, puis vous pouvez le mettre sur les routes de la province de l'Ontario, et possiblement on peut se rendre du point A au point B.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Premier. I wanted to ask you about the announcement you made yesterday to help special-needs children in Ontario's public schools. As you well know, those children and their families have been waiting for help for years. School for those children and those families has been a daily struggle. Those families have been desperate for support from you. Yesterday you told us that money was not an issue, that there was lots of it sloshing around.

My question, on behalf of those kids and those families, is, how is it that you could put your political interests ahead of the needs of those children when you tell us now that you had this money all along?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The leader of the official opposition couldn't be wronger if he tried. To start with, we are the first government in the history of the province of Ontario that has designated money for special education. Second, we introduced the ISA process to evaluate these students. We're the first government to do that. Third, the announcement yesterday, if he can read and pay attention, was to not only fully fund all the phase 3 ISA-assessed students, as Dr Rozanski recommended in his report, but we've also gone one better than Dr Rozanski's report. We're going to fully fund all the phase 4 assessments, which won't be completed until the end of this month; next year as well. Have a nice day.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, you sat on this money and you sat on your hands and you refused to help kids. Do you want to talk about firsts? Your government was the first to accumulate a list of 40,000 kids who are waiting to get help, and you sat on your hands and you refused to help them.

For years, kids have been frustrated, parents have been pulling their hair out, kids have been falling behind, there has been a loss of self-confidence, a loss of self-esteem, and you waited until it served your political interests before you decided you're going to help special-education kids. Where do you get off, Premier, putting your political fortunes ahead of Ontario kids?

Hon Mr Eves: I certainly don't need any lectures from the leader of the official opposition about special-education students.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Premier, take a seat. Sorry to interrupt, Premier. Order. It's getting a little noisy in here, on both sides. I'd ask for co-operation. Sorry, Premier. Continue.

1520

Hon Mr Eves: Being a parent of a former special-education student, I know exactly how difficult it is for these students. That is exactly why, when we became the government of this province, we put in place a system to assess those students, not just in the elementary and secondary levels, but even post-secondary.

Virtually now every post-secondary institution in this province, thanks to the Minister of Education and the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, accounts and has a program to assist learning-disabled students. We were the first ones to identify them.

Your government, David Peterson's government, did absolutely nothing. They didn't assess one single student. They didn't fund one single student.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, you sat on this money and you allowed a waiting list of 40,000 to accumulate. It grew by 15% during the last three years. Sixty per cent of students identified with special needs failed the grade 10 literacy test. Those students will be unable to graduate. You knew about it, and you sat on the money.

During the last five years, there has been a 55% drop in the number of schools reporting regular access to psychologists, a 37% drop in the number of schools reporting regular access to social workers and a 24% drop in the number of schools reporting regular access to speech language pathologists.

You knew about every bit of that, Premier, and you chose instead to sit on your hands and sit on the money and to come up with it on your conversion on the road to Damascus because it serves your political interests. I ask you again on behalf of those families and those kids, how could you possibly put your political interests ahead of those kids?

Hon Mr Eves: I know it's difficult for Liberals to add, but in this process, in this school year, we have in this year alone now added $1.16 billion in-year through public boards of education. His solution to education in this province is to add $1.3 billion over four years. We've done that in one year, Mr Do Nothing—Mr Do-Nothing Party.

PREMIER'S RECORD

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Premier. Premier, your government and your leadership have been nothing short of an abysmal failure.

Here is some of the record, and we should take the time to review it, painful though it may be for you. The Minister of Tourism resigned over indulgent expenses. You tried to sneak through a $10-million tax break for pro sports teams. John Snobelen, with your blessing, has been spending more time caring for his horses than his constituents. You tried to legalize pension raiding in the province of Ontario. You're selling off Hydro One in a fire sale. You tried to hike long-term-care fees for seniors by 15%.

We believe on this side of the House that the people of Ontario deserve much, much better. I'm asking you, sir, if you can't deliver strong leadership, if you can't advance the interests of Ontarians, why don't you step aside and allow us to take on the responsibilities of government?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I know Liberals have short memories. You might want to remember the seven to nine cabinet ministers with conflicts of interest with their hand caught in the till that David Peterson's government had, the worst record in the history of the province of Ontario, second only to the abysmal record of the Honourable Mitchell Hepburn.

Mr McGuinty: No government has been more adept, more skilful and more creative at looking after itself and its closest friends, none other than this government.

There is much more. This Premier has been waving back and forth on Kyoto like a leaf in the wind. A victim of crime in this province said, "This province continually makes people beg on their knees for help that never comes." The Provincial Auditor has just finally destroyed the urban myth about this government's competence. This auditor said that half of Ontario's corporations aren't paying taxes, and this Premier won't lift a single finger to crack down on that. There are 10,000 outstanding arrest warrants in Ontario, and $660 million is being spent on consultants when we could get the work done by our public servants for one half to one third the price.

Premier, I'm asking you again, if you can't do the job, if you won't advance the interests of all Ontarians, if you insist on looking after your friends and your allies, why don't you step aside and let us do the job?

Hon Mr Eves: Talk about not being able to do the job—when is the leader of the official opposition going to hold his own members to the same standard that he expects of members on this side of the House? When is the member for Vaughan-King-Aurora going to repay the pension money—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Come to order, please. We'll just wait, then. Sorry, Premier.

Hon Mr Eves: When is the leader of the official opposition going to table his own expenses and those of his 44 staff members? What does the leader of the official opposition have to say today about the conduct of his deputy leader as noted by the Integrity Commissioner?

Interjections.

Mr McGuinty: Premier—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Take your seat. We'll give you the time to start over. Order. Come to order, please. Put them down, please. Thank you.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, you could only wish that you had a deputy leader as strong, as committed and as determined as mine; you can only wish.

All we've had from this government is more and more of the same old, same old—more and more devotion and attention to yourselves and your friends and less and less attention to the needs of Ontario families.

The good news is that we have plans to bring about real change in Ontario: smaller class sizes, learning until 18, turnaround teams for our struggling schools, affordable child care and investment in the early years, cleaner gasoline, cleaner electricity, protecting the sources of our drinking water, real investments in public transit, real protection for our tenants, 1,000 new cops on the streets, 50 more prosecutors in our courts.

We've got a plan for change; they've got plans for dinner. We can't wait for the next election.

Hon Mr Eves: In this session alone, we have passed the Safe Drinking Water Act; we have protected consumers from abuses by the securities industry; we have restructured the electricity industry; we have protected farmers in the province of Ontario; we have added $2 billion to health care; we have added almost $1.2 billion to public education.

You have a platform that changes from day to day, and I presume next week we'll be out with draft 17 of our election policy from Dalton McGuinty, to spend even less money than we've already spent in our year. Give me a break.

1530

HYDRO ONE

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier, and I'm not really interested today in which of you has flip-flopped the most.

Premier, we know you are cooking a deal in the back-rooms for the sale of Ontario's hydro electricity transmission company, Hydro One, or at least 49% of it. We know why: you've got a $2-billion hole in your budget and you need to give the appearance of covering it up, and yes, you need to feed your Bay Street friends who are hungry for privatization profits. But it's the consumers of Ontario who will have to carry and pay the bill for this. Before you try to sell off 49% of Ontario's hydro electricity transmission system, don't you think the people of Ontario deserve a say first?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, we have said consistently and repeatedly that we believe there needs to be some private sector discipline brought to Hydro One. We have also said consistently and repeatedly that we will not part with control of Hydro One. We've also said that if we don't get an offer that's satisfactory to us, we're not selling any part of Hydro One in a fire sale.

Mr Hampton: We've seen from the auditor's report what private sector discipline means to your government. It means consultants walk in and walk out with hundreds of millions of dollars and the public gets nothing. It means a company like Accenture, which changed their name from Andersen Consulting because they had been kicked out of so many jurisdictions around North America, just keeps going back and back to the public purse. That's your definition of private sector discipline.

We understand that SNC-Lavalin is the company that wants to be at the trough first. We also understand they want a management contract. In addition to 49%, they want to manage Hydro One and make more money off that. But it means people will have to pay still more on their hydro bill. I ask the question again, Premier, before you sell off 49% or 39% or hand over control, don't you think the people of Ontario deserve a say first?

Hon Mr Eves: He and his party are the last people who should be standing up in the Legislature talking about how to run the finances and the economy of the province of Ontario. You had deficits every year of $10 billion or in excess of $10 billion. You increased the debt of the province from about $49 billion to $101 billion. You increased the debt of the Workers' Compensation Board by billions. You increased the debt of Ontario Hydro by billions. And you left future generations for many generations to come in this province holding the bag.

You had some experience with consultants yourself, as I recall. You actually managed to build low-rental housing that paid more money to consultants than it did to actually construct buildings. It cost more per square foot than the most luxury building on the waterfront in the city of Toronto. That's your record. I welcome you to trot that out in the next election campaign to see if they'd like to go back to 1990.

Mr Hampton: In your Ontario, seven people died and hundreds became ill because you cared more about tax cuts for your well-off friends than you cared about clean drinking water. The issue is this: this is not your hydro system; this is a Hydro system that belongs to the people of Ontario. The simple question is this: don't you think the people of Ontario deserve a say before you try to sell it off to your corporate friends? I'll tell you right now, one way or another, after the next election New Democrats will ensure that Hydro One is restored to public control and operates again as a non-profit utility. But before you even try to go down this road, don't you think the people of Ontario deserve a say before you try to hand it off to your corporate friends?

Hon Mr Eves: For the umpteenth time, we are not selling Hydro One. We are not parting with control of Hydro One. We will maintain control in the public interest, as we should, and we will see that it runs with the proper discipline in the future.

But to sit here and listen to the third party lecture us about economic activity and how to run anything, I'm surprised they can even figure out how to run their own offices. Come to think of it, they can't. They certainly couldn't run the province of Ontario. You ran it into the ground. You virtually doubled the debt of the province. You raised annual interest payments to over $9 billion a year. Your priorities were to spend $9 billion on interest instead of health care, schools, the environment and other things. Your priorities are not ours over here.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): To the Premier again: you were the Minister of Finance and Deputy Premier who ran up $25 billion in debt. For what? Just to give your corporate friends another tax cut. That's why.

Premier, Dr Rozanski has given you a blueprint to restore the $2 billion that you've taken from Ontario's education system. So far, you've put a little money out here and a little money out there. The question is, are you going to restore the $2 billion that Dr Rozanski says you took out? Are you going to restore it now? That's the question.

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The leader of the third party might want to stand up and correct the record because I'm sure Dr Rozanski wouldn't appreciate you putting those words in his mouth. He did not say that we took out one cent from the education system in this province. The reality is, the education budget in this province has gone from $12.9 billion to, at the beginning of this week, $14.4 billion, and it now stands in excess of $14.7 billion.

Mr Hampton: According to the Premier, the $2 billion that he talks about in his report suddenly must have disappeared somewhere else. You are the government that cut education funding. You are the government that over the last four years did nothing for the benchmarks in terms of covering the cost of inflation or the cost of collective agreements. So the question is this, Premier. He identified $1.8 billion that needs to be in to bring us up to the level of inflation and make the improvements that he says are necessary, and he said you need at least $300 million for collective agreements. Are you going to put the $2 billion back in or not? That's the question.

Hon Mr Eves: He did not say any such thing and you know it. This week alone we have added substantial money in-year for education. We have now provided for an additional $1.16 billion to the public education system in this province just in this current school year, the largest ever in the history of the province of Ontario by far, and we are putting far more money into public education than we did when we started.

You can argue if you want that you think we should put $8 billion more in and you can explain to the people—and you'll have that opportunity, I'm sure, in due course on the campaign trail—where you're getting that $8 billion. But you never were very good at math between 1990 and 1995, and you certainly haven't improved to the year 2002.

PREMIER'S SPENDING

Ms Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Premier. As finance minister and now as Premier, you made deep cuts that have hurt people. You cut the nutritional allowance for expectant mothers. You closed 31 hospitals across Ontario. You cut $121 million from the Ministry of the Environment, which assisted in the disaster at Walkerton. That's why I was so shocked to find this: according to public accounts and your budget, Premier, spending by your office is more than double that of the Premier's office of Bob Rae, and triple that of the Premier's office of David Peterson. You are spending twice as much as Bob Rae and triple the amount of David Peterson. My question for you is this: why is there always less money for people who need help, but more money for you and your friends?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I didn't happen to hear an apology from the honourable member about her error in judgment, as the Integrity Commissioner described it.

When is the honourable member going to do the common, decent thing and stand up and apologize for her error in judgment? When is her leader going to do the honourable thing and table the expenses? We don't know how much you're spending because you don't bother to share that information with the public of Ontario. Why don't you do that voluntarily? Surely an honourable person would like to do that. Why don't you take the high road for a change and get out of the gutter? It's not very becoming on you.

Ms Pupatello: Premier, let's remind you again. You are the man who took money away from pregnant mothers, expectant mothers in this province, as finance minister. You closed 31 hospitals in Ontario. Don't you dare lecture a member of the opposition when your behaviour and your record is there.

These are the public accounts and your budget telling us that you have spent three times the amount that David Peterson did in the Premier's office and double that of the Premier's office of Bob Rae. I ask you again, and you will account for your behaviour. You tell us today, how is it that you have all the money you need for your friends and all the money you need for your pampering, but you don't have money for people in this province who need help?

Hon Mr Eves: Unlike the members on that side of the House, our expenses are there for all to see. The honourable members of the opposition, the official opposition, I think would want to do the honourable thing and put all their expenses and all their staff's expenses out there for everyone to see. I know that the honourable member for Windsor West would like to do the honourable thing and stand up in the House and acknowledge the error of judgment which the Integrity Commissioner says she made. You'd probably like to apologize.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My colleague from Windsor West did in fact acknowledge that earlier today and should be applauded for that, not condemned by you.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): It's not a point of order. New question.

GUN REGISTRY

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): My question today is for the Minister of Public Safety and Security. Minister, we have been reading an awful lot in the press this week regarding the federal Liberals' boondoggle of the gun registry; specifically, concerns regarding the skyrocketing budget of a registry that was only supposed to cost taxpayers a couple of million dollars, but in reality is now topping the charts at $1 billion and still counting. Minister, could you please bring the members of this House up to date on the province's involvement in the federal gun registry?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Two million dollars versus $1 billion: that's called Rockonomics. As members of this House will recall, our government vigorously opposed this ill-thought-out, totally ineffective and tragically wasteful expenditure of tax dollars. Ministers Villeneuve, Hodgson and I appeared before the Senate committee studying Bill C-68 in September 1995 and warned of the dangers of proceeding with this ideologically driven excuse for a public safety initiative, and offered alternatives that would have had a real impact on getting guns out of the hands of criminals. Unfortunately for all of us as taxpayers, Rockonomics won out.

Mr Miller: Thank you, Minister, for reminding this House and citizens of this province that our government recognized the wasteful nature of the Liberal gun registry, its lack of impact on gun violence and crime, and the devastating impact it could have on turning honest, hard-working, law-abiding Canadians into criminals in the eyes of the federal government. Minister, could you also remind us of the position taken by the Liberal Party of Ontario with respect to this costly and ineffective gun registry?

Hon Mr Runciman: I'll be glad to remind members of the House of the position taken by the Liberal Party of Ontario. In short, they were mirror images of the holier-than-thou, "We know what's best for you country bumpkins" approach of their hero, Allan Rock. Here's a Hansard quote from Dalton McGuinty: "I want to make it perfectly clear.... I'll be working with the...federal government to implement universal gun registration." Here's another from Dwight Duncan, the Liberal House leader: "I support the federal government's gun registry."

It's clear the McGuinty Liberals supported this boondoggle, this attack on honest Ontario citizens, and the time is long overdue for someone over there to stand up and apologize to the taxpayers of this province.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): A question to the Premier: In August of this year, Union Gas sent out notification to its customers in Thunder Bay, Windsor, London, Peterborough and Burlington that they were applying for a retroactive price increase for gas purchased some two years ago. Subsequent to that, the Ontario Energy Board approved the retroactive increase. We on this side of the House have asked you on three occasions now what, if anything, your government intends to do. I'll remind you that under the existing Ontario Energy Board Act, you have the authority.

You are in possession of two appeals to cabinet with respect to this issue asking cabinet to overturn the decision of the Ontario Energy Board. Given the fact that these retroactive billing increases will be arriving at people's homes and at the doors of institutions such as hospitals and schools in the month of January, will you confirm for the House today that in fact your cabinet will not allow that retroactive increase to proceed?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): No, I can't confirm that. He knows we can't talk about what goes on in cabinet meetings or what's coming up in cabinet.

Mr Duncan: Premier, then will you give your undertaking, as we've asked on several occasions? You yourself in this House said you didn't feel that retroactive price increase was appropriate. When can we expect an announcement from cabinet, given the fact that the retroactive billing notices will be arriving in people's homes right across this province, likely within the next three to four weeks? When will cabinet make public its decision with respect to what this side of the House says is an unfair retroactive increase that your cabinet, under sections 27 and 34 of the act, has the power to overturn? When will you announce your decision?

Hon Mr Eves: I think the Minister of Energy can respond very directly.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, Minister responsible for francophone affairs): To correct the member opposite, there is nothing contained in the Ontario Energy Board Act which allows us to overturn an act. The member opposite knows that. He can consult the act and should do so.

I am tremendously concerned, as the Minister of Energy, as I know everyone on this side of the House is, with respect to retroactive charges. We could simply deal with this one issue or we could take a look at the whole problem. When it was immediately brought to the Premier's attention, he said that one decision wasn't enough; he wanted a review of the entire energy board act. We committed to get back to cabinet within 100 days of review of the Ontario Energy Board Act and how it can better respond to the needs of consumers in the province of Ontario. That type of decisive action will happen within 100 days, just as the Premier committed it would happen.

HEALTH CARE

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is for the Honourable Tony Clement, the Minister of Health. In 1995, this government made a commitment to improve access to publicly funded and universally available health care. We have lived up to our word and delivered on that.

Over the past seven years, Ontario has become the envy of every other province in the delivery of health care, despite the fact that the federal Liberals drastically cut their contributions to our health care system.

Since 1995, this government has increased the number of new MRIs in the province by over 300%, and more are on the way. This government has increased health spending by 45% or over $7 billion in that time frame. Forty-seven cents of every program dollar, almost 50%, is now spent on health care in our province.

In my riding of Simcoe North, access to quality health care has always been a priority. Could the minister kindly inform the Legislature and my constituents of recent health care announcements that affect them and their families?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): It's always a pleasure to address my hard-working colleague from Simcoe North and inform his constituents, as well as this House, on health care investments that the Ernie Eves government has made in Simcoe county in particular. This fall, as part of a $32.5-million announcement to improve ambulance response times, for instance, the Eves government earmarked almost $1.8 million to Simcoe county.

We also wanted to improve access to primary care. The Eves government has done so by ensuring that Simcoe county receives funding for an extra seven nurse practitioners. This, without a shadow of a doubt, will enhance that community's access to very-much-needed primary care.

With increased funding for ambulance services and primary care funding, the Eves government is listening to Ontarians, including the good people of Simcoe county, in their call for the best universally accessible health care this country has to offer.

Mr Dunlop: I'm sure my constituents would be happy to know that we have been making wise health care investments for the people of Simcoe North. To many people, hospitals are seen as the front line in health, and this government is investing record amounts into hospital funding and construction. In fact, we will be spending over $9.5 billion on hospitals this year, over 30% more than was spent in 1995.

In Simcoe North, my constituents and I are very lucky and proud to be home to the Orillia Soldiers' Memorial Hospital. As the minister knows, it is an award-winning facility with a world-class staff. While located in Orillia, it is the leader in health care for all of Simcoe county.

I was wondering if the Minister of Health could also inform my constituents and all the members of the Legislature about recent investments in Soldiers' Memorial Hospital and other hospitals across our great province of Ontario.

Hon Mr Clement: I want to thank the honourable member for the question. Indeed, we know that hospitals are a vital part of our health care system and Ontarians rely on them in their time of need. That's why they are part of what we call our priority in health care and we are investing, indeed, record amounts.

I know how much pride my colleague has in Soldiers' Memorial in Orillia. It is a great hospital and that's why this government has increased its base funding by 13% this year alone. Next spring, in order to serve that community even better, Soldiers' Memorial will undergo a major redevelopment, and we are looking forward to working with its redevelopment committee and the citizens of Simcoe county to see this project to its fruition and conclusion.

We are also working in other areas. I might want to remind this House that I announced an extra $6 million to Windsor Regional Hospital this week. As a result of that funding, an extra 40 beds will be added to serve that community.

Ms Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): They've got a $10-million debt.

Hon Mr Clement: I know the member for Windsor West will want to join with this side of the House to applaud this great initiative in the city of Windsor for better health care in Windsor as well.

FAR NORTH FIRE MANAGEMENT

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is to the Premier. Premier, for over six years the First Nations of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation met with your government officials from the Ministry of Natural Resources and federal government officials from Indian and Northern Affairs Canada to develop and expand a far north fire management program. They worked very hard to protect the people of their communities from the dangers of forest fires. They worked in good faith with your government, only to be told in April of this year that your government essentially was no longer interested in the far north fire management program.

Premier, I can't describe for you the disappointment of people who, time and time again, are evacuated from their communities because there has been a refusal to provide fire protection. Will your government go back to the table with Nishnawbe-Aski Nation and the federal government and complete the development of the far north fire management program?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I believe the Minister of Natural Resources has responsibility for this matter.

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): Yes, we're very well aware of the concerns brought forward. The member should know that while in Halifax with the ministers from all across the various provinces and territories, we discussed this issue. I put forward a resolution at that time to move forward with the federal five-point plan that will take that into account. We are trying to work toward that. We are currently trying to set a meeting with the federal government to determine how we can move forward on a national basis that will take that into consideration.

Mr Hampton: In other words, it's the old game of ping-pong. Look, they are citizens of Ontario, and your government right now is putting forward the plans for mining development on their land, forestry development on their land, and yet you won't even provide them with decent fire protection. This is not a federal program. Yes, the federal government was prepared to make a contribution, but the Minister of Natural Resources wrote to the NAN chiefs in April of this year and said categorically that your government was not prepared to proceed. Now you're telling the First Nations that this is a federal program. Minister, if you want to promote forestry development on NAN land, if you want to promote mining development on NAN land, if you want the resources and the wealth that comes from those resources, don't you think you should be providing decent fire protection through the far north fire management program? If you can do one, why can't you do the other?

Hon Mr Ouellette: Quite the contrary, when a member of his party asked for myself to meet with individuals from that community, we very strictly laid out a plan and asked for their assistance to work with them to move forward on this. We are trying to get the federal government—we came forward with all the jurisdictions, all the provinces across Canada, to deal with this issue, and we are moving forward on that specific issue.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is to the Premier. Premier, recipients of ODSP in Ontario have challenges that you and I don't truly understand. Just finding accommodation and food on their allowance, which is significantly below the cost of living in Ontario, is a disaster for them. On top of that, transportation costs are almost impossible. So to them the location of ODSP offices is vital.

I noted with interest that on September 3, 1999, the member from Niagara Falls had a meeting at the Chatter Peppermintstick Restaurant in Niagara Falls and billed $33.55. What is interesting is that the purpose of the meeting was the closing of the ODSP office. Premier, is this how you do business? Do your members meet—because subsequent to that meeting, the ODSP offices in Welland, Port Colborne and in Niagara were closed, and the people on ODSP are forced to go to St Catharines. While your members eat cake, are people on ODSP forced to hitchhike to another? Will you assure me that you will do public business in the public and give ODSP recipients some dignity and input into the thing that affects their life so—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up.

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I'm sure the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services has a response.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague across the way for this question on the ODSP, the Ontario disability support plan. I think what he's referring to is his displeasure at the service that we're delivering to ODSP clients in field offices. What I can say to him is that this government, as part of our overall strategy to improve services and benefits to people who are disabled in the province of Ontario, has undertaken a number of changes in how we deliver not only Ontario Works but the Ontario disability support plan. I can't speak to those specific field offices; I will look into that, as he has duly noted. What I can say to you is that we have a number of ways of communicating from one office to another—through a telephone system which, in our opinion, actually makes the service more accessible, not less accessible.

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 30(b), the time for routine proceedings has expired.

HOLIDAY MESSAGE

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Before the important business that the House leader is about to bring before us, I just thought I would like to wish everybody a very merry Christmas, a wonderful season, happy holidays and, above all, peace.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SUPPLY ACT, 2002

LOI DE CRÉDITS DE 2002

Mr Stockwell, on behalf of Mrs Ecker, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 229, An Act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for the public service for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 2003 / Projet de loi 229, Loi autorisant le paiement de certaines sommes destinées à la fonction publique pour l'exercice se terminant le 31 mars 2003.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Stockwell has moved second reading. Minister?

Interruption.

The Speaker: Order. I'm afraid we're going to have to ask the gentleman to leave. Could the guards please assist and ask the gentleman to please leave.

Government House leader.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I assume the time is being split three ways. I will offer the time up to the opposition parties to begin because I have no comments respecting the supply motion.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): On a point of order, Speaker: I ask for unanimous consent to pass Bill 236, which is a bill that amends the Environmental Protection Act by requiring the pre-treatment of hazardous waste before it's disposed in a landfill.

The Speaker: The member has asked for unanimous consent to proceed on Bill 236. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Speaker: I rise seeking unanimous consent for third reading of Bill 143, An Act to preserve the gravesites of former Premiers.

The Speaker: The member has asked for unanimous consent to proceed on Bill 143. Is there unanimous consent? No.

Just so everybody knows, the clock is going to proceed now. We can do points of order, but the clock is proceeding.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): On a point of order, Speaker: I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to give third reading to a bill which has been approved by this House previously at second reading and been approved by committee in clause-by-clause consideration, and that's a bill to amend the Audit Act so there can be clear accountability for all government expenditures.

The Speaker: The member has asked for third reading of the Audit Act. Is there unanimous consent? No, I'm afraid not.

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent with respect to a private bill, Pr22, which has passed at the committee stage and is currently before this House but has not been brought forward. I'm seeking unanimous consent for second and third reading of Bill Pr22.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Further debate?

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Is this on the supply bill?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr Conway: My colleague Mr Phillips is around the precinct someplace and will want to have some comments, I believe.

Interjection.

Mr Conway: I apparently have 8.3569 minutes. Well, it won't take me that long.

Interjections.

Mr Conway: Do you know what, Mr Speaker? I think—

The Speaker: Order. If members would please have patience. It's getting late in the day. Let's allow the member to speak.

Interjection: It's only 4 o'clock.

The Speaker: It seems like a lot longer when you're up until midnight.

I'd ask all members' co-operation. He has very little time.

The member for Renfrew, continue.

Mr Conway: I actually have been here a fair bit in the last few days. I'm telling you, the mood of the joint is such that a rational person would probably go and whistle Dixie in the dark because, boy, if you had been here last night or the night before, you would be pretty proud to go home and tell your constituents who pay the freight for this railroad that you have some collateral responsibility for the place.

I want to say a couple of things on supply this afternoon, one of them local and one of them provincial. Let me start with the provincial matter.

I spent the evening last night reading the Rozanski report. If members have not read it, I would recommend it to you. I thought the professor, the good doctor, the principal of Guelph University, has done a really good job, particularly in making the case for the importance of public education. It's very obvious that he listened carefully to what he was told by a lot of people.

About his emphasis around core programs, the importance of equity and how equity is not always equality: speaking as a member from rural eastern Ontario, I have to tell you that I liked what he had to say about things like small schools, the need to revisit the whole question of how we calibrate the declining enrolment factor and the importance of transportation. He has obviously heard from rural and northern school bus operators about how serious that situation is. His recommendation there I thought was particularly telling.

I was thinking that in the last couple of weeks I've heard two people, one of them named Roy Romanow and the other one named Mordechai Rozanski, and both of them I believe are first- or second-generation immigrants in this country. I think Dr Rozanski makes the point, either in his presentation or in the press release, about what public education meant for him and his family. I heard Romanow a few weeks ago talking about how important public health care was to a lot of those farmers in western Canada.

I think those of us who hold elected office would do well to listen to people who have, I think by any objective standard, done very well. Rozanski has credentials that are sparkling in the academic world: a doctorate, I think in Chinese history, from the University of Pennsylvania, one of the great schools of America. Romanow: certainly one of the really outstanding public men of Canada in the latter half of the 20th century. They remind us about the important responsibilities that are state responsibilities.

Again, back to Rozanski, on what he had to say about more money: yes, but more accountability and more transparency. I could not agree with him more. I will say parenthetically that one of the critical problems facing Parliament and facing the Legislature is the stunning degree to which we fail in that responsibility ourselves. Just in the last 24 hours I've read a column by Jeff Simpson and a column by Jim Travers—one in the Globe yesterday, one in the Star today—about the abject failure of Parliament and the Legislature to behave in the way they're supposed to behave. It's not a partisan observation. We are a disaster when it comes to holding governments of whatever stripe to account for the billions of dollars being spent in Her Majesty's name.

When I think over 28 years of how bad it has gotten in this place, just at the very basic level, for following through the announced programs and whether or not they have had any real success in achieving the goals for which they were funded, I can't wait to get out of here. This hydro situation is one of the most significant embarrassments that I have seen in a long time. I just cannot wait to close my public career here, because this hydro thing is just a disaster and it's as though we are proud to advertise our illiteracy. But that's the way it is, and that's the way I guess it has to be.

Rozanski, in his report, makes it very clear that if there's going to be additional money provided to the education system—and I will congratulate the minister; in just the last 18 hours, we've had $250 million for special education, $340 million today. What's that, about $600 million? That's clearly a recognition that however good the formula might have been, as Rozanski made plain, the government has simply not funded to the actual levels of acceptable expenditure.

So a very good report. I hope the government moves forward on not just the money side of it but finding ways that are going to give taxpayers some comfort that the monies are actually achieving the goals for which they are targeted.

It seems to me it was a year or so ago we had from the Provincial Auditor some rather disturbing things about the whole special education account. I haven't checked lately, but it's just not good enough to say that we think this is a meritorious objective; we have to know that there is actually some oversight that is going to make everybody involved more disciplined and more focused in ensuring that those objectives are met.

In my last minute or two, I want to say something on behalf of a small community in my county. It is now about six months ago, on a very hot, stultifying, late-June afternoon, a young mother and a young child were swept away to their deaths on the lower Madawaska River by an extraordinary, unbelievable event at High Falls, just downriver from the Barrett Chute generating station near Calabogie.

It is several months since the police investigation was launched. I know something about the diligence and the efforts that are being expended by the Ontario Provincial Police in that connection. But it is six months. A very hot, dry summer has come and gone. The lower Madawaska at Calabogie is freezing over, and the snow deepens there every day.

My question on behalf of that now deceased mother and her deceased child: when are we going to know what happened on that day, June 23, 2002, at Barrett Chute? I have some suspicions. I have some very grave concerns, but they are no more than this at the present time, because I have not myself undertaken that investigation.

I say to the government—and I'm pleased to see the Attorney General here, and I have spoken to the previous and the now Minister of Energy—the people of Calabogie, and most especially the family of those deceased individuals, have a right, and we have an obligation, to ensure that the truth is going to be told as to what happened that hot, sunny Sunday afternoon in late June. I just hope and pray that the truth is not going to be buried under a mound of ice and snow, because we have a situation where we have two people dead. We were very, very lucky, tragic as those circumstances were, that many, many more people were not killed. Because what happened there on that day was a remarkable and extraordinary development for which and about which we do not yet have answers.

As I take my seat now, I just want to say to the government, for the family members, for the others who were injured and for the people living along that lower Madawaska corridor, please move with some expedition to complete that report and give my constituents some comfort as to what happened and even greater comfort that that kind of tragedy is not going to recur.

With those remarks, I will take my seat.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Rumour has it that this is the last day the House is sitting for the year 2002. I know there are a couple of members from Niagara region who would have no qualms about the House sitting through next week and even more than a small part of the week following. But I'm afraid that if Mr Bradley and I are here by ourselves, it would be less than effective not having government members, especially cabinet ministers, here to pose questions to in question period, among other things.

There have been a few disappointments, of course, over this last session. Last weekend I was down in my riding going to events where people are, where folks are. I went to the volunteer fire company number 2 annual banquet over at the Polish Hall on Ontario Road and spent good time with those good women and men. I had to leave a little earlier than I would otherwise have, because there was a fundraiser going on at the CAW hall—it used to be the united electrical workers'—on Steel Street. The fundraiser was for Cameron Walsh.

I've talked to you about Cameron Walsh before, and other kids like him. Cameron Walsh is a kid with autism. His folks—you've met them; they were here in this Legislature—have been on a waiting list for Cameron to get the autism treatment this government trumpeted, heralded, when it announced funding for that treatment. But the Walsh family ended up on a waiting list, and they waited and waited and waited. Then they realized the futility of that particular game, because once Cameron reached six he was no longer eligible for the treatment anyway, so it was all pretty feckless in the total scheme of things.

So the Walsh family, like so many other families in Niagara region and across this province, realized, as the loving, caring responsible parents they are, that they couldn't count on this government. They couldn't count on this government at all. They, like hundreds of other families, have been on waiting lists trying to get their kids treatment for autism—and the treatment works. The treatment does wonders. So they embarked on privately retained treatment.

You see, one of the interesting arguments by the government is, "Oh, there aren't enough providers for the treatment to expand access to kids who need the treatment"—horse feathers, to put it politely. There is private sector availability of treatment programs; it's simply that the government won't provide the funding, won't provide the resources necessary for every kid with autism to access treatment.

The problem is the treatment costs anywhere from $25,000 to $35,000 a year of after-tax dollars. Cameron's dad is a hard-working man and a caring father. Cameron's got a sibling. You learned when the Walshes were here that Cameron's folks had a starter home as their first home, and now, with two young kids, have bought what they thought was going to be the home they were going to raise the kids in, a little bigger than the one they had before, but modest in the total scheme of things. Make no mistake about it. I know the neighbourhood. I know the home.

Because they have been forced to pay privately for treatment for autism, for their kid Cameron, they're looking at a financial load of more likely $35,000 than $25,000, because if you are going to have adequate treatment, you need the more hours rather than the fewer hours.

They have indicated that Cameron has already shown remarkable progress in response to the treatment: a totally different kid than what he was before the treatment started. The problem is they've maxed out their credit cards. They've exhausted every single line of credit. They've borrowed from family, friends and neighbours. There's no more. They don't have a whole lot of equity in the house because they only just bought it, not too long ago. You know what it's like. But they're prepared and they fear they will have to sell that house to garner whatever little equity is in it to finance the payments for Cameron and the autism treatment they were forced to pay for.

Friends of the Walshes held a little fundraiser at the CAW hall, and there were raffles and there were half-and-half draws. Then there was—I probably shouldn't tell because the Alcohol and Gaming Commission would probably be interested—something that I recall as being similar to one of those wheels of chance you see at fundraisers like that. I went in there and I bought raffle tickets and half-and-half tickets. I threw a little bit of money into the kitty, just as other people were doing too.

I haven't had a chance to get back to the Walshes to find out how much money they made, but I've been at these kinds of things before and they'll have made $1,000, $1,500, maybe $2,000 before the night's over. You see, the Walshes are hard-working, working-class people and their friends are hard-working, working-class people. Their friends are the salt of the earth. That's why they came out to an event like this. I'm sure they ended up spending more money in the course of participating in this fundraiser than they could really afford, but they did it because they knew the proceeds were going to help a kid, their friend's child. In the total scheme of things, as I say, I know what kind of money these events raise: $1,500 or $2,000, or on a good day maybe $2,500.

It's not the solution. How many times can you call upon these people to attend fundraisers? At the same time, having said that, you know darn well that organizing one these fundraisers requires an incredible number of people spending an incredible amount of volunteer time: not just the family; the parents can't do it alone. You have to rely upon all sorts of other people. The fact is that you just aren't going to have a fundraiser a week. It isn't going to happen.

When the Walshes were up here, one of the things they thought might be productive, and I was prepared to concede we could give it a try, was to meet with the minister, Ms Elliott. I accompanied the Walshes to meet with the minister, Ms Elliott. I don't think she was particularly happy to have me join them—probably half a dozen good reasons why and twice as many bad reasons. But she sat there and she made notes. They appeared to be notes she was making. I wouldn't accuse her of doodling on the notepad in front of her. She was as tight-lipped as cabinet ministers are inclined to be and wished the Walshes well.

The Walshes actually thought that maybe with the minister intervening, because the Minister of Community and Social Services, as historically the ministry has been known, seemed, oh-so-interested in the waiting list and was giving orders to the staff and minions who were with her, saying, "Check this out. Check out the waiting list. Maybe we'll work that out there."

It wasn't more than a couple of weeks later that the Walshes got a phone call, this time not from the minister but from, again, a minion, a young person who sure means well and probably works harder than they should for the small amount of pay they're paid as political staff in those ministries. But of course, the message from the minister was, "Too bad, so sad, guys. You guys are on your own. This minister is taking a pass on you," and Cameron and several hundred other kids like Cameron who have been on waiting lists so long that they've reached the age of six and then are no longer eligible, which of course helps the government say, "Well, the waiting lists aren't as long as they could be." You see, kids are knocked off the waiting list once they turn six, as if somehow there's no more interest in them, and quite frankly, there isn't any more interest in them from this government.

The Walshes didn't have a whole lot of hope, because they're not stupid people by any stretch of the imagination. They could read between the lines. They saw the rather condescending attitude of the minister being displayed to them while they were graced with an audience with the minister. But at the end of the day, zip, nada, zero, not a penny, not a nickel, not a dime to help the Walshes in this struggle, the struggle of a lifetime for them, the struggle of their kid's lifetime.

You see, the sad thing is that autism is a disorder that is treated with a medical model. Autism as a condition or a disorder—I don't want to be impolite or less than precise in terms of describing it—is one that can be treated, one for which there are recognized treatment regimens, and it shouldn't be the Minister of Community and Social Services at all who doles out the bucks in an oh-so-political way.

The announcement from the ministry about the funding for autism treatment was, as I say, fanfare and backdrops and spotlights and arc lights and press releases and staffers running around and people taking photographs on 35-millimetre Nikon cameras. It was. I could have sworn there was a drum and bugle corps playing in the background Hail to the Chief as the minister walked up to the podium. It was one of those classic—with the backdrop and here it is, Conservative Ontario.

We know far too much about the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves Ontario. It's a cruel, harsh, painful Ontario, and it became crueller and harsher and more painful for the Walshes when they tried to access the minister, and notwithstanding all the formal niceties and the yes ma'ams and no ma'ams and please sirs and no thank yous, they got the door slammed in their faces.

I know the Walshes and I know their boy Cameron and I know a whole lot of the other families down in Niagara and families from beyond Niagara who are taking care of their children with autism. The province of British Columbia has recently litigated the matter of autism treatment, and it has been determined in British Columbia by the courts that autism is a condition that is to be treated under the regime of health care.

So this government is way out of whack. What this government is doing is so obvious, it's so patent, it's so transparent, it's so clear. Think about this. Think about the cruelty and harshness of this. Cameron is subsidizing this government's tax breaks. Cameron Walsh is subsidizing this government's multi-million-dollar contracts with the likes of Andersen Consulting. Cameron Walsh, a kid with autism, is subsidizing ministerial expense accounts. And Cameron Walsh isn't doing it alone. Hundreds of other kids with autism are sharing that burden with him, and that's a crime.

I'll put this to you right now. If it's a matter of revenues, I as a taxpayer at my age and in my income level, yes, am prepared to pay the few bucks more a year in income taxes to ensure that Cameron and other kids like him get treatment for their autism—then roll back some of that Harris tax cut now.

1630

I'm not calling upon seniors to pay more taxes, or low-income or even middle-class people. Lord knows, they've paid more than their fair share. The fact is, when it came to the Harris tax cuts, they received far less than their share. The Harris tax cuts weren't for our folks, retirees, or for the lowest-income people, never mind single moms or students, minimum wage workers or, for that matter, most middle-class working families. The tax cut didn't amount to a whole lot. It was more than offset by the increase in user fees and the downloading on to municipalities and the increase in tuitions and just about everything across the board.

But those high-income people, the ones whose tax cut amounted to not just a couple of hundred bucks a year, but thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars a year, the ones who least needed the tax cut, who got the biggest tax cut, I say to them—let's face it, we know what the income is around here; members of the provincial Parliament are not exactly low-income workers—that if people my age and in my income bracket and, quite frankly, those who make a heck of a lot more than I do, have to pay a couple of bucks more a week in income tax so that kids like Cameron can get treatment for their autism, we'd better be prepared to pay it. I don't want to live in the kind of province that the Conservatives here at Queen's Park have designed and created. It's not the kind of province that my folks or my grandparents contemplated living in either, not by any stretch of the imagination.

It is imperative that we keep struggling, that we maintain the fight, along with all those families with children who have autism, along with those children themselves and their friends and their co-workers and their neigh-ours, that we keep struggling to ensure that there's full financing, full funding, for treatment of autism and that autism is shifted from the Minister of Community and Social Services, who has no interest in the matter, no desire to act on it, and becomes a OHIP treatment regime, where it properly belongs and where the courts, for instance, as in British Columbia, have indicated it loes.

It's interesting. It was on Saturday night I was over at the CAW hall at the Cameron Walsh fundraiser. On Friday afternoon, like most people, like every other member of the assembly, I had constituency office appointments. We had a doctor come in called Dr Hsu. Dr Hsu is a pediatrician down in the city of Welland. I don't know what it's like here in the big city, here in Toronto, but down in Niagara Centre, people know their doctors—women and men who work incredibly hard: the family practitioners, the general practitioners, the physician and surgeon types, and let's throw in a few specialists to boot. They work extremely hard. They're working 60-, 70-, 80-, 90-hour weeks and they're out there in the community doing other things. They're raising their own families and their kids are going to school with other people's kids, with workers from factories and with people in white-collar professions and with small business people's kids.

Well, Dr Hsu was victimized by this government to the point where Dr Hsu, who in different times may well have been contemplating retirement right now, has actually had to reflect on whether or not he should leave this province and practise medicine elsewhere.

Let me tell you what this government did to Dr Hsu. There is an organization called the Medical Review Committee of OHIP. The Medical Review Committee is a little common-turn type of organization that is probably more befitting of Stalinist Russia than it is of Canada or Ontario. And Dr Hsu hasn't been the only victim. I know other doctors who have been fearful about speaking up. They were worried about being red-flagged by the Medical Review Committee so they could be whacked one more time or they were just so darn busy that they literally couldn't find the modest amount of time to write the letters and raise the issue the way Dr Hsu has.

The Medical Review Committee actually came and scooped $108,000 from Dr Hsu, ordered him to pay it back—legitimate billings to OHIP; no suggestion that Dr Hsu hadn't performed the services that the billings paid him for. Dr Hsu had to sell his RRSPs. He's not a wealthy man—a hard-working man, professional, skilled, trained, well-loved in the community. Dr Hsu had to sell his RRSPs. You see, $108,000 was probably around 98.5% of his personal income that year, because of course he still has to pay staff, he still has to pay rent for his office, he still has to pay for equipment and materials, he still has to pay for periodicals and journals, he still has to pay, like every other doctor does, for the upgrading seminars and programs and licences and insurance and the whole nine yards.

Dr Hsu is an incredibly popular, successful and effective doctor, as a pediatrician. He got bushwhacked; he got blindsided. He fell victim to this government's OHIP/MRC highway robbery. They cleaned him out, with no suggestion that he hadn't performed the services for which they demanded the money back. He would have been in a far better position had he been charged with fraud. At least he could have defended himself. He would have been found not guilty, and OHIP and the Medical Review Committee wouldn't have been able to touch a penny. But there's no suggestion that he committed fraud.

You see, the MRC has got this Byzantine, archaic, unsophisticated and, again, almost Kafkaesque reporting requirement. Of course, they attack high-volume doctors. High-volume doctors are the ones who are busy, who are working 78 or 80 hours a week like Dr Hsu, who are seeing twice and triple the patient load they should be seeing because they're making up for the doctor shortage that this government has done precious little—quite frankly, it's done nothing—to resolve in this province.

Dr Hsu and other doctors like him—let's understand what these doctors are doing; I don't care if it's Dr Hsu, Dr Bonsu, Dr Rau or Dr Abraham. They do a tremendous amount of work, which is why they're so loved and so popular and so highly regarded, that they don't bill for. When I go to the doctor, which is once maybe every five years, it's a five-minute proposition; I want out of there as quickly as possible. When I get older, I suspect I may be spending more time with my doctor. But there are other patients who need—when you're a pediatrician, working with parents as well as the child, there are patients with whom Dr Hsu will end up spending 30 minutes doing any number of things: reassuring a mother that the baby is OK, or reassuring a mother that her manner or demeanour or style of dealing with that baby, especially a newborn, is appropriate and desirable. He can't bill them; he wouldn't think of billing.

You know that for the last week and change I've been reading petitions during petition time in this Legislative Assembly, and the petitions are as follows:

"The OHIP schedule of benefits is often unclear about its definitions of good medical practice for many serious medical conditions: general checkups, rechecks, psychotherapy counselling and often major illness care by specialists;

"The Medical Review Committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons has been aggressively clawing back payments to hard-working, conscientious doctors on the basis of these flawed definitions and skewed statistical analyses.

"We, the undersigned, request the Minister of Health to suspend further reviews by the Medical Review Committee; return the monies with its penalties, pending a negotiated agreement of an unambiguous schedule of benefits with representatives of affected practising physicians."

I not only received a whack of these petitions signed by patients not from only Niagara, never mind just Welland, but now from across Toronto and other parts of Ontario. They're spitting out of my fax machine in my office. They're just churning out. This is a serious problem. OHIP should be working with those doctors, the way they and others are suggesting in this petition, to help make it easier to practise medicine, not more difficult. What's going on here?

I go to my dentist, Dr Thomas Pekar, down in St Catharines. He's a brilliant guy. He uses lasers for drilling cavities. They don't drill them; they use a laser thing. It's very expensive. He's a brilliant dentist. I don't begrudge this of Dr Pekar or other dentists, but somehow, when Dr Pekar is finished his work on me, his staff person just types out codes. They plug into the Great-West Life or whatever insurance company we have here, and it's over with.

What's going on here? Why isn't OHIP sitting down with doctors like Dr Hsu and negotiating, as the doctors are proposing, a way of doing—we understand that OHIP wants a meaningful reporting method. OHIP has any number of reasons, most of them good. They want to keep a handle on what's happening in medicine, what's happening in doctors' offices. I understand that. I presume the data is used to develop some statistical databases. I hope it is, because if it isn't, it makes it even more frustrating. But for Pete's sake, sit down with these doctors. They're ready to sit down and say what the problems are with the MRC and the standards that have been set with regard to reporting by doctors.

I want to tell you this: I know there are doctors out there making huge bucks—I presume they are—the Yorkville Avenue plastic surgeon types, the ones who advertise, but most doctors are working darn hard. You don't expect them to make peanuts, but they're working darn hard for salaries far less than the mythology would have you believe. If you ever took a look at the schedule of payments for services, you'd swallow your bubblegum if you saw how little doctors are paid for a significant number of the procedures they perform. All I know is, a long time ago I used to practise law and you might as well do a pro bono than charge what I know doctors are being paid for what I consider some pretty complex procedures, even some of the minor surgeries—never mind minor ones; some of the major ones. It's remarkable how little they are paid. Again, that's not to say that doctors aren't among the better income earners, but understand that doctors are now doing double and triple duty because of the doctor and physician shortage.

How does this help attract new doctors to Ontario when this government, with its OHIP program, maintains the MRC, as these horror stories begin to be spread throughout the province and beyond? I know if I were a non-Ontario doctor investigating Ontario as a place to practise medicine and I found out what happened to Dr Hsu, I'd say, "No way, pal. I'm out of here." So maybe Mr Clement had better start paying some close attention. This isn't a little item.

Dr Bob Frankford, a former colleague of ours—you know him well, Speaker—is a good person. He's a progressive, enlightened doctor who has a strong base in community-based medicine, a strong background and a good mind. He was a valuable member of this assembly. He came to me with petitions as well. This is not an isolated incident and it is going to snowball. I predict, however regrettably, that if this government doesn't get its act in gear, we're going to lose doctors over this MRC conduct alone.

When Dr Hsu shuts up his office, shuts down his practice and heads somewhere else, this government sent him packing because of its failure to act around this crisis, around the jackboot style of the MRC and its claw-back of monies paid to doctors. It is an outrageous and very urgent situation. I have written to the minister. I've been tabling petitions. I will work with these doctors in any way I can to highlight their concern and their plight. We'd better respond and this government had better get moving.

Another constituent of mine had an audience with the Minister of Community and Social Services, Ms Elliott. Across this province there's a whole community of invisible parents. These are grandparents who are doing parenting. You know what I mean: grandparents who, when their own children for any number of reasons can no longer parent the grandchildren, jump in as close members of those children's families and assume the role of parenting. There are far more of them than you expect or realize.

Michael, when you're back this way, would you bring me a glass of water, please? Not that one; somebody already drank out of that one. I don't know who drank out of it. It makes me nervous.

All over this province there are grandparents raising grandchildren as their children. I appreciate that's happened historically. I'm glad it hasn't stopped happening, but those grandparents now are understanding that they've been left out of the loop. They've been invisibilized by the failure of this Legislature and other Legislatures to acknowledge them and recognize them in that special, unique status they have.

Some of these grandparents—Sheila Volchert's one of them. Sheila and her husband are living in Pelham. They have their own grandchildren living with them. They treat them as their own. They're raising them. These people are retirees, and they're of fair but not extraordinary means. If those children were in foster care, the foster parents caring for those children would be entitled to an X number of dollars' allowance a month. The Volcherts have jumped in and assumed the role of more than mere fostering, yet receive none of the financial support they could dearly use.

Sheila Volchert and her husband know they're not the hardest done by. I've met with other grandparents raising their grandchildren as their own who are in incredibly dire straits, like the one brave woman from St Catharines who is legally blind and living on disability benefits who, notwithstanding and nonetheless, continues to raise her own grandchildren as her own. She won't surrender them up to an institutional authority because she knows those kids are better off with her—Grandma, family—and that the bond has already been set.

You'll recall that I've been reading petitions in this legislature during petition period on behalf of those grandparents who are parenting their grandchildren. The petition makes specific reference to the report prepared by social services in the regional municipality of Niagara. I give them great credit: Susan Reid and her staff. The report recommends a number of legislative changes, both provincially and otherwise, that could be effected to make it easier for these grandparents to raise their grandchildren as their children.

Sheila Volchert had a meeting with the minister on December 2. The minister—this is Ms Elliott—made it quite clear she didn't want Ms Volchert's MPP at that meeting with her. I understand. The problem is, Ms Volchert ain't no pushover. She's a bright, capable, intelligent woman. She was pleased with the chance to sit down with the minister and present the case of grandparents raising grandkids as their own. As a matter of fact, I know the member from Ottawa would be more than a little familiar with this phenomenon. I'm sure he has had direct involvement in the quest by grandparents, even the quest, for instance, of getting custody, never mind adopting. Some of these grandparents spend thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars on lawyers and court costs to even go through the custody process. Maybe they have a child who's the parent of the grandchildren who's got a serious drug problem or an alcohol problem or problems around mental health. The hoops these grandparents have to jump through to do the right thing are profound. This Legislature could begin to make life so much better for them, for their grandchildren, who are in effect their kids, and for the communities they live in and for this province.

Shouldn't we be building the kind of place that accommodates and supports grandparents doing these kinds of things instead of maintaining a climate and a culture that is more hostile than supportive?

I suppose what I'm talking about is that this environment is hostile to Cameron Walsh and other kids with autism. This environment is increasingly hostile to doctors like Dr Hsu. This environment is hostile—this province, this government—to Sheila Volchert and other grandparents like her.

This Legislature should be working to make Cameron Walsh's life better, to make the lives of Sheila Volchert and other grandparents raising grandchildren better, and to make doctors' lives better because it makes their patients' lives better and it will make for a better province.

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton): It's a particular privilege for me to rise in the House today, speaking on the same issue, the supply bill, that the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, Sean Conway, spoke on earlier. I'm not sure, but it might be his last speech in this House. He has announced his retirement. It's a great honour for me to share the floor with someone who has had such an illustrious record in this House and been known as such a great orator.

It was, I think, in November 1958 that I sat in the Speaker's gallery and listened to the last speech my grandfather gave. At that time, he was completing 40 years of serving in this House. He sat in the front desks at that time. It is a memory that is as fresh in my memory today as it was at the time it happened. So it is with some honour that I share the comments on this bill with the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke.

The Supply Act is an important bill that we debate in this House. It relates very much to the public confidence the people of Ontario have in their government.

This past Monday, the Legislature passed a bill, Bill 198, the Keeping the Promise for a Strong Economy Act, 2002. We will be implementing measures through that bill that will provide great protection to investors and consumers. It's that protection to investors and consumers that creates the confidence people have to invest in this province. We will be setting and enforcing those high standards to protect Ontario families and the integrity of our capital markets.

While Ontario has very sound fundamentals in place, there is a great deal of apprehension out there in our capital markets brought about by the events of September 11 last year. It's to be noted, I think, that the TSX has not had the experiences with Enron and the financial manipulations that we have seen in the United States. It's a credit to the Ontario Securities Commission and to the way in which we conduct our capital markets to ensure that people in Ontario have faith and confidence when they're investing their savings, when they're investing their money in other capital markets.

In order to have that strong economy that can produce growth and prosperity, we need those strong capital markets. Those capital markets need investors who have sound information, and timely information, so they can make the kinds of investment decisions that we need in this province to go forward. Investors put their trust in markets where there's an ethical corporate governance that is the rule, not the exception.

When you look south of the border you see things taking place. Martha Stewart of course is in the news a lot today. She has been reported to have had some insider trading that took place in the US; I think that insider trading is reported to have garnered her some $400,000 in profit. If that actually did take place, then so be it; she will be found guilty and should be punished. But for a public figure; which she is—$400,000, in the realm of insider trading, I'd suggest is not a lot of money. However, the people who have been perhaps taking advantage of these rules in the United States are not being chased, are not being prosecuted to the same degree that Martha Stewart is. She's being prosecuted simply because she's a public figure, and I think that's wrong. That is not taking place, I don't believe, in Ontario or Canada. I think our insider trading information, the times in which—

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): Michael Cowpland.

Mr Chudleigh: Mr Cowpland, I think, as the member points out, has paid the price for his insider trading. He is no longer in the position he enjoyed. He has paid his fines. The system we have in this country corrected that abuse of power.

The measures that address these issues have been enacted in Bill 198, which we passed earlier this week.

The Supply Act is one of the most important bills passed in the Legislature. Much like the Keeping the Promise for a Strong Economy Act, the Supply Act has far-reaching implications for the people of Ontario. The Supply Act would allow the Ontario government to continue running the daily business of the government, the business of programs and services that benefit the people of Ontario. It would allow the nursing homes, hospitals, doctors, municipalities and general welfare recipients to receive their cheques and to receive their payments, children's aid societies and the suppliers' accounts to function knowing that their staff are going to be paid.

Earlier today I was in my riding of Halton, in the town of Milton, where we had the pleasure of opening Halton Women's Place, a new shelter for women who are undergoing situations in their private lives when they simply have to get out of the house. This is a place for them to go, a place for them to be protected, a place for them to renew their lives. The facility we're opening there is a beautiful one, one in which this government and the taxpayers of Ontario have invested $1.5 million.

It's a very unique situation. Last February 20 I was there when we announced that this project would take place and those funds would be available. They had a very carefully drafted budget, and in that carefully drafted budget the amount of money they had for construction was X amount of money. When they went out to tender, they couldn't get anyone to construct this facility for the amount of money they had in their budget, and it looked like it was in jeopardy. They had to go back out in another fundraising episode. But then along came a local contractor, Mattamy Homes, a very large house-building operation building a lot of homes in the Milton area. They came to Halton Women's Place and offered to build this facility for the budgeted amount, and in doing so, any difference they had they took back as a tax receipt. A public-private partnership completed the project on budget, ahead of time, which was a marvellous thing for a large corporation to do, a construction company that truly has a heart, and their heart was exhibited broadly in Milton today.

We all know that the services provided by the members of the broader public sector are often provided under many very difficult circumstances. As responsible legislators, we must, in my view, enact this Supply Act for these very important programs. We want to ensure a high quality of life for our people now and also in the future. Our quality of life that we have gained here in Ontario is important. We are sitting at the pinnacle of the North American way of life, and I would suggest to you that that pinnacle is perhaps as high here as anywhere else in the world. It will be interesting to see whether the opposition and the third party find it within themselves to support this bill to ensure that all of these services can go forward in the future.

Just as the government is fiscally accountable, we are also responsible for sound economic fundamentals, in which the people of Ontario are the first consideration. In November, it was announced by this government that during our term of office the private sector has created more than one million new jobs. That's equivalent to almost 400 new jobs a day, each day, every day, since September of 1995.

I would like to give a brief history of that job creation situation in Ontario since 1995 and going back five years before that. In May of 1995, there were 89,000 fewer jobs, fewer people employed in Ontario than there were in January of 1990. That was the effect of the recession, many would say. I would say it was the effect of not only the recession but also regressive government policies at that time. Over that same period of time, from January of 1990 to September of 1995, the rest of Canada created 320,000 jobs. Those are new jobs created at the same time that Ontario was losing 89,000 jobs.

Numerous studies from around the world have found that tax rates are one of the most important factors in determining economic growth and productivity. Since 1995, Ontario's net exports have accounted for only 23% of our GDP. The main source of growth, the other 77% of the growth in our GDP has been stimulated by the domestic economy. Despite the downswing in the world economy, the economic outlook and the fiscal reviews show that Ontario will be leading the G7, the United States and other jurisdictions within North America in almost every category.

Private sector forecasts now anticipate that real growth in Ontario will be 3.5% this year, up from a consensus forecast of 3.2% in June. The recently released second quarter economic accounts show continued strong growth in real gross domestic product of 4.4% and exceptionally strong growth in our first quarter.

It is the kind of prudent fiscal management that this government has exhibited since 1995 that has led to the creation of this strong economy that we have in this province today. That strong economy that we have in this province today has allowed this government to reinvest in the things that Ontarians hold near and dear to their hearts. We have reinvested over $8 billion in health care, so it's now 45% of our expenditures. We have reinvested in education, $250 million yesterday and $340 million today. We have reinvested in community safety, in the environment, in all of those things that Ontarians hold near and dear to their hearts and that they expect their provincial government to protect and reinvest in for the future so that this province can continue to have the quality of life that we have come to expect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): The floor is open for further debate.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): In the very short period of time I am limited to this afternoon, I'm going to look at a few issues, some of them with a local component and some with a provincial component.

The first thing I want to talk about—I'm glad the Attorney General is in the House; and my friend from Niagara Falls, because he would be familiar with this—is the issue of the Maters Mortgages people who have been in a case against the government of Ontario. They have had a couple of case managers to move their case along.

I should tell you, Mr Speaker, and you may be familiar with this, being from Hamilton, that the people were involved with what was called Falloncrest, or Maters Mortgages. These are people who made certain investments. The Ontario government intervened, and ultimately the people were out of pocket for a lot of money. We're into millions of dollars.

Many of these people are elderly. Some have passed on because of their age and because of illness and infirmity. They have been looking for an opportunity to have their case heard in court. They have simply been asking for fairness. They are dealing with taxpayer-financed government lawyers and their case has been stretched out over a number of years now.

What they would best like, probably, is an out-of-court settlement, where the government would make a generous offer and they would be able to accept it. That would end the court case. But the very least they are asking for, and I think something the government could agree to, is a fair court case: let it go to court; let it go to trial; let a decision be rendered by an impartial judge.

They have had two case managers now. These are judges who were brought in to move the case along. They had an opportunity to meet with the former Attorney General, James Flaherty, in Niagara Falls, I believe it was, or Niagara-on-the-Lake. I think they felt a bit heartened at that time that the case would be expedited through the courts so that whatever happened, they would know they had a fair day in court. Well, that got held up somewhat.

Now they are in a situation where they thought perhaps mediation would work; that is, you bring in a mediator, you bring the lawyers for the two sides together and you try to find some common ground to see if the problem can be solved. I know they met with Gerry Phillips as well, as the critic for the Liberal Party in the field of finance and financial institutions.

I don't know how the mediation has gone. I believe they were in mediation today. What I hope would have happened is that there would have been a coming together of the two sides to agree on points to go forward with into a trial. In other words, within the early part of next year it would go to trial, the evidence would be presented by both sides—because this is a civil action—there would be a decision rendered and we wouldn't have an appeal of that decision.

I hope we don't have the government still in a position of playing hardball with these people, because they have accumulated a lot of costs out of their own pockets to defend this civil case. As I say, many people have lost their life savings as a result of this, or a large portion of their life savings. Some who perhaps had accumulated some wealth through a lot of savings find themselves today, I won't say destitute, although in some cases that might be the situation, but certainly with far less of an economic cushion than they would have had before. What I'm hoping is that the taxpayer-paid government lawyers are not playing hardball with these individuals, with this group, and that they're trying to find an accommodation which would be acceptable to both.

As I say, the one thing they would say to me and to anybody in this Legislature is that they should have a fair day in court. If the government wins, they would be very disappointed, obviously, and if they win, they would be delighted, obviously, but what they're looking for is a fair day in court where there are equals. I think they are hopeful that the mediation process might well produce an accommodation that would expedite the case and bring it to trial.

I hope that's the case. I have seen their hopes dashed on many occasions when they've been raised a bit by something that has happened—by a question I've asked in the House or perhaps a communication that has come back from the government—but from time to time they just seem to get one step forward and there are three steps back. I hope that isn't the case, and I hope the government hasn't forgotten them.

1710

There's another case I want to talk about, an individual in my riding. The member for Niagara Centre and I attended an event at West Park high school in St Catharines. West Park Secondary School has a wonderful group of students, teachers and other staff and a wonderful community they draw from, and the event was a fundraiser for this individual. His name is Andy Gindroz. I can tell you that Andy has great spirit, a wonderful personality. He was in the hallway along with his parents and many friends, schoolmates and others. They had a silent auction there, they had music, they had tickets being sold, all of this to receive some treatment outside the country.

I know a lot of people come to all of us and say they would like treatment outside the country. The rule that OHIP follows, for the most part—I think almost always—is that if the treatment is available in Ontario, they will not pay for the treatment outside Ontario. This is a situation where it appears that the treatment is not available in Ontario. The member for Niagara Centre and I have explained to the parents—and they're very cognizant of this, very knowledgeable—that the most important component is a letter from medical authorities indicating clearly that this operation or these medical procedures cannot be done in Ontario and must be done elsewhere, and they have actually turned to the United States.

I'm going to share a letter with you. I don't think the parents would object to me or the member for Niagara Centre raising this matter in this way, because they've been very public about it; there have been some articles in the St Catharines Standard about it. It reads as follows:

"I am writing this letter on behalf of my family, our 18-year-old son Andy, my husband Alain and myself. Our ... physician, Dr Christina Plaskos and my uncle the Honourable Mr Justice R.C. Rutherford"—have suggested that they come to me with this particular problem as the MPP for St Catharines. I know they've contacted Mr Kormos as the MPP representing the other part of the city of St Catharines. The high school Andy attends is in the riding of Mr Kormos.

"On September 25, 2001, Andy lost the vision in his right eye, and was diagnosed with an extremely serious and very complex brain tumour. He underwent extensive brain surgery on October 1, 2001, at the London Health Sciences Centre. This was performed in hopes of regaining his vision by decompressing the optic nerve. Unfortunately, Andy's vision could not be saved since the optic nerve had been damaged beyond repair.

"With Andy's very positive outlook and strong attitude he recovered from his craniotomy. However, he has not yet reached the end of this nightmare. The many specialists in London and Toronto who have examined and cared for Andy are unable to give this tumour a definitive name. Consequently, options for successful treatment for his condition are unknown.

"During his surgery at the London Health Sciences Centre small specimens of the lesion were biopsied in the hopes that the tumour could be identified and further treatment recommended. Because this lesion is displacing and encasing the internal carotid artery and is bony and very vascular, it becomes extremely difficult to biopsy any more than a minute amount of tissue. In fact, Andy had a second biopsy on February 27, 2002, with another surgeon at St Joseph's Hospital, also in London, with no better results. This specimen was sent to a pathologist in Pittsburgh for examination, only to be sent back confirming that the tumour is a bony vascular malformation and still unnamed. On June 3, 2002, at the Toronto General Hospital, a third endoscopic biopsy was performed. This surgery caused our family major grief and trauma! Andy severely hemorrhaged seven times and required a blood transfusion and hospitalization for 13 days. I'm sure, as you can well imagine, it has been a very frustrating and difficult time for all of us.

"As the tumour continues to grow, Andy's symptoms are rapidly increasing and becoming more of a concern as well as being a prime candidate for a stroke, we are therefore pursuing a lead in Iowa City at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics for a second opinion.

"On behalf of our family, I am writing this letter respectfully asking for your assistance in helping us to receive approval for financial support from OHIP for any possible treatment options in the United States. As a first step, Dr Plaskos has written to OHIP asking for such support as well. I have enclosed her letter for your viewing.

"As a testament to Andy's positive spirit, I'm enclosing an article that was published in the St Catharines Standard on April 13, 2002."

By the way, that article outlined exactly the problem and brought the community together recognizing what that problem was.

"The three of us would like to thank you in advance, for any assistance you may be able to provide us as our MPP for St Catharines."

They go on to wish me well, but I'm going to tell you, I think everybody in this House would wish them well. This is a case, clearly, where there is not a treatment in Ontario. Even some people in the United States can't identify the problem. There are many people who are going to bring this to our attention in our own communities, but this appears to be a very clear case where action must be taken quickly. We all know the costs of medical care in the United States. It's high. There are some very competent people there, just as we have some outstanding physicians, outstanding staff, outstanding facilities here in Canada.

On behalf of the family, I share with members of this Legislature my hope that the Minister of Health, through his committee that looks at these situations and determines whether or not OHIP coverage is possible, will provide OHIP coverage, not only for some diagnostic work that has to be done, but also for any treatment that must take place, because this is unique, it's different, it's an individual situation.

I certainly plead on their behalf for this individual. If you could have attended and seen the people at West Park high school in St Catharines who had gathered together to raise money to help send Andy to the United States to receive some diagnosis and some potential treatment—they've already made some contributions, but you can only ask the community to give so much. They have generously shared their bounty, their donations. They have given items to be auctioned off and things of that nature.

I wanted to use this time to share those two instances with members of this House. It's our job as members to do that. I certainly ask on behalf of the Mater's Mortgages people and on behalf of the Gindroz family that assistance be provided by this government.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I am very pleased to join in the debate with respect to the supply bill. I'm in favour of the Supply Act as proposed as it is the responsibility of an accountable government. We need to ensure that this important bill receives the authorization it needs from the Legislature so that the government can continue to spend responsibly. One of the reasons the Supply Act must be passed is to ensure that payments to the broader public sector can continue to be made. That encompasses payments for Ontario's vitally important health care sector, including nursing homes, hospitals, doctors and nurses. Health care, along with education and a clean, safe environment, is one of the priorities of this government.

Let me take a moment to talk about health care. As you know, the Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada released its final report, entitled Building on Values: The Future of Health Care in Canada but informally known as the Romanow report, on November 28, 2002.

Our government believes the Romanow report is a first step toward the federal government paying more of ts share of health care costs. However, it is not a final step. We appreciate the effort Mr Romanow has put into outlining the future direction of health care in this country. In many cases, he has recommended actions Ontario has already taken.

However, Ontario is concerned about the level and speed of additional funding Mr Romanow recommends. There is no extra money this year and very little next year. The health care funding needs across Canada are immediate. In Ontario, we have increased total health spending by $8 billion since 1994-95, including almost $2 billion this fiscal year alone.

Mr Romanow's recommendation of increased funding in future years does nothing to address the shortfall in federal funding since the years 1994-95, or even this year. Next year's recommendations would yield $3.5 billion more nationally, compared with the almost $2-billion health spending increase in Ontario this year alone. As Premier Eves has said, it is not enough and not soon enough. Ontario estimates it will spend $25.8 billion on health care in the year 2002-03, almost $2 billion more than it did last year. If Mr Romanow's proposal for a new Canada health transfer were implemented today, Ontario's allocation would be about $3.2 billion. Without any enrichment, that is only 12% of what Ontario will actually spend on health care this year alone.

If Mr Romanow's recommended enrichment of $3.5 billion for all provinces was delivered this year—not next, as proposed—Ontario's allocation would increase by roughly $1.3 billion to $4.5 billion. That's about 17.4% of actual, currently planned Ontario health spending.

Even if Mr Romanow's full enrichment of $6.5 billion nationally were made available to Ontario today, our total Canada health transfer allocation as proposed would only rise to $5.6 billion, which is only 22% of what Ontario actually spends on health care. Furthermore, to get the $6.5 billion in additional funding suggested in Mr Romanow's plan, health services would include home care and a catastrophic drug program. This expansion would place a tremendous burden on certain provinces, with even more pressure for higher health spending in the future. This situation is unacceptable to our government.

Having a universally accessible health care system that is available to all Ontarians where and when they need it is central to our quality of life and a key reason why people choose to live, work and raise a family in Ontario.

Health care remains a top priority for the people of Ontario and for this government. Our record on health care speaks for itself. In 1995-96, health care operating spending was $17.6 billion. This year it is $25.8 billion, which represents a 7.3% increase over last year alone.

Health base operating spending has increased faster than economic growth over the last two years. In 2000-01, health spending grew by 8.9% while the economy grew at 6%. Last year was even more dramatic. Health spending grew by 6.9%, at a time when the economy grew by only 2.4%. In 1995-96, health care base operating spending accounted for 38% of all government program spending. This number has grown to 47% in the years 2002-03.

Our government's increased investments have made a real difference by:

(1) Increasing the number of MRI machines in Ontario from 12 in 1995-96 to 43 this year. That also has benefited my riding of Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, where we have that equipment not only at Southlake Regional Health Centre but also at Barrie's Royal Victoria Hospital.

(2) Building 20,000 new long-term-care beds and renovating an additional 16,000 long-term-care beds. In my riding of Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford we've seen significant increases in long-term-care beds. To name a few, at Victoria Village, which is a state-of-the-art project for seniors, there were 128 long-term-care beds granted, and we also have seen that happen in Bradford, West Gwillimbury, and in Barrie at Grove Park Home. We've being seen beds that have gone in there and a number of other homes that I would also care to mention. But that's been a significant increase in the city of Barrie, and also in the riding of Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, with respect to the increase.

(3) Establishing the Trillium Gift of Life Network to double the rate of tissue and organ donation in Ontario by the year 2005.

(4) Expanding Ontario's Telehealth network province-wide, serving some 3,500 Ontarians every day.

(5) Introducing a province-wide flu vaccination program, administering some five million doses of the flu vaccine annually. I'm proud to say that I've received my flu vaccination.

(6) Finally, doubling the number of nurse practitioners in Ontario, particularly in underserved areas.

I'm also pleased, and I thank the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, that the North Innisfil Health Centre recently began operating again, being staffed with a doctor and a nurse practitioner to serve the residents of north Innisfil and the residents encompassing Sandy Cove Acres. It's a tremendous initiative.

Also, by supporting the passage of the Supply Act, we can ensure that Ontarians' health care needs for this fiscal year will be met.

In the year 2002-03, the commitment continues. We're improving cancer care by increasing funding of $50 million over three years to enhance the Ontario Cancer Research Network. An additional $40 million will be allocated for new treatments for individuals with cancer and $30 million to modernize and upgrade cancer radiation equipment.

I'm pleased to say that Royal Victoria Hospital is undergoing an expansion of their chemotherapy operation, increasing the square footage by around 10,000 square feet and working toward improving the service in the area with respect to cancer care treatment. They're also working with Cancer Care Ontario to receive support and approval with respect to a regional cancer care centre which would provide radiation treatment to the region. That's something they're doing a lot of fundraising for in the area. I commend all the individuals involved in that fundraising, and also the staff at Royal Victoria Hospital for the hard work they've done and the steps that are being taken at the hospital in the process of providing a functional program, which they are undergoing right now, to work with Cancer Care Ontario to move toward receiving support and approval from the Ministry of Health.

Support for hospitals will increase to $9.4 billion, allowing for the expansion of long-term priority programs such as cardiac services, dialysis and MRI scans. I was very pleased to see that in the city of Barrie, a kidney dialysis program was set up just off the old RVH hospital. It has been very successful. It has been used extensively. That kidney dialysis centre was something we brought forth a few years back. Also exciting news is the Southlake Regional Health Centre. Early next year they'll be looking at being the regional centre for cardiac care treatment, a tremendous initiative, along with the expansion of their hospital. That regional cardiac care service is going to be of tremendous benefit to my constituents in Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford, and we're looking forward to that opening.

There's also over $250 million in additional funding for diagnostic services and payments to physicians and other practitioners, and nearly $200 million to support residents in long-term-care facilities and to continue the expansion of long-term-care beds. I take the opportunity now to commend the hard work of the people at Victoria Village, the chairperson, Sam Cancelli, and all the other volunteers who work toward that program. They're coming very close to fruition with respect to bringing that project along. They are putting in place some tremendous initiatives: an adult daycare centre, a seniors' centre and also for the youth who will use that facility. It's also proceeding along nicely in terms of being of tremendous benefit to the entire community of Simcoe county.

On that note, I conclude my remarks. I thank the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care for his initiatives in the riding with respect to MRIs, kidney dialysis, the RVH hospital that was expanded and newly built a few years back, the chemotherapy expansion that's underway and their support with respect to bringing a regional cancer care centre to the area, and also the regional cardiac care treatment centre, which is going to be happening next year at Southlake Regional Health Centre. So there's a lot of work that's been done to bring health care services closer to home.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is open for further debate.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm pleased to join the debate on supply, which is essentially authorizing the government to be able to spend money. I think the public would be far more supportive if we hadn't seen over the last week three different reports. As I say to my business associates—no longer in business, but the ones I knew in business—the thought of the Conservatives as money managers, frankly, is a bit of an urban myth.

I'd just like to quote a few things from the Provincial Auditor's report. I think the people of Ontario appreciate that this is an independent body engaged by the Legislature to oversee and monitor government spending. The auditor issued their report just last week, and if it wasn't so serious, it would be funny, some of the gross abuse of taxpayers' money that we saw in the report. I'll just give the public a few examples. You might want to get a copy of this book.

A company called Accenture: the government put a cap on their spending on this project of $180 million; it can't spend any more. Well, Accenture was paid, according to the auditor, $246 million, $66 million more than the cap. It points out here that many of the managers said that the system Accenture brought in was a step back from what they previously had. So we spent hard-earned tax money, $66 million more than was authorized, on a system that apparently was worse than the one that was there before.

We find that over half of the corporations in the province of Ontario are not even filing their corporate income tax returns—half of them. That, I might add, is up from 1995, when I think it was about one out of six; it's now one out of two that are not even filing their corporate income tax. The people of Ontario have every right to say, "Wait a minute. I'm paying my taxes. I work hard. My income taxes are deducted right off my paycheque. How can it be that half the corporations in Ontario aren't even filing their income tax?"

And it goes on. In the use of consultants, here's one consultant who was paid $725 a day at April 2000, in May it went to $1,800 and in September it was $2,600 a day—a day. It points out that at the realty corporation here in the province of Ontario, there was a written agreement that a consultant would be paid $210,000; they were paid over $1 million, five times what the written agreement was. It says here that there were 40 employees laid off from the law-and-order ministry, and they came back within days as consultants, paid twice and three times what they were earning before. It points out that one consultant submitted a bid, the government mis-added the numbers and the person got the contract because the numbers were added up wrong.

So I say to the public, get a copy of this report if you want to dispel what I call this urban myth about these people being able to manage your money. It was the very next day that we got this report here, which is the Economic and Fiscal Outlook. Again, I'd urge the public to take a look at it. The debt of the province of Ontario now, according to this document, is $112 billion. On March 31, 1995, which was a few months before the government took over, it was $90 billion. It has gone up over $21 billion, almost 25%. We've been through a period of solid economic growth, but the debt of the province is up almost $22 billion, almost 25%. If you look at how much interest we're paying on the debt now, it's actually $700 illion more than it was when these people came into office. What we find in the fiscal outlook is that the—

Mr Phillips: There goes Mr Guzzo. He loves to heckle, but he doesn't like to debate these issues. I'd say that the only way this government is going to balance its books this year is by selling off $2 billion worth of some of the best assets in the province and they're going to use exactly the same format they used for the 407.

Let me just say to the people of Ontario: we got ripped off. The taxpayers, you hard-working people, got ripped off. Eves sold the 407 on May 5, 1999. I remember that because hours later the election was called. The 407 was purchased by the private sector. They put $700 million of equity investment into it on May 5, 1999. Thirty months later, less than three years later, that $700 million was worth $3 billion. It is the most lucrative toll road in the world. Why? Because contrary to what was promised to the people of Ontario, there are no controls on the tolls. They can take the tolls up whatever they want.

I've heard people in Ajax say, "I kind of like the 407 coming out my way because I'm going to be able to use it." I say, "Have you any idea that it's going to cost you $3,000 to $4,000 a year to use that toll road?" That's a great favour to you. The toll road is coming out, but $3,000 to $4,000. If you want to drive from Ajax over into the centre of Toronto, it's going to cost you $3,000 to $4,000 a year. So I say, why did this happen? It was because the government needed a pile of cash the day the election was called and they sold the 407 users down the road.

We in the opposition are still fighting in court to get the details of that agreement, but the thing we do know is that the people who bought it have gotten rich beyond their wildest dreams. Can you imagine investing $700 million and 30 months later it's worth $3 billion? That's not a hypothetical number, because one of the owners sold off a quarter of their interest and recovered every single penny they had in it. They still own three quarters of their original equity in it and they've got all their money out.

I've said this before. For the life of me, when we talk about conflict of interest, I cannot understand why the government allows this. Mr Leach is a respected individual, a competent individual, but he sits on the board of SNC-Lavalin and the 407 corporation. SNC-Lavalin obviously loves him. He's paid $25,000 a year as the director and $100,000 a year as a retainer, and more power to him. He's doing very well. But Mr Eves then went and appointed him vice-chair of GO Transit. Every single decision GO Transit makes has a financial implication to the 407. SNC-Lavalin is redeveloping Union Station. Who is the biggest tenant in Union Station? GO. If this is not a conflict of interest in your mind, I don't know what is.

I checked the minutes. Mr Leach at one time declared a conflict on one issue; the same issue came back for debate several months later and he didn't declare a conflict. I just say to the government, I'm not blaming

Mr Leach, because the government appointed him. But I don't for the life of me understand how the government can accept that this is not a conflict of interest. I gather SNC-Lavalin is also bidding on the sale of Hydro One. Fine. But I cannot for the life of me understand how he can sit as the vice-chair of GO Transit when every decision GO makes will have financial implications of millions of dollars to the 407.

We're being asked to approve billions of dollars of spending tonight. I would feel negligent if I didn't point out to the public: don't assume these people know how to manage your finances; it's frankly, simply an urban myth.

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I'd like to say a few words in favour of the proposed Supply Act, which I believe is one of the most important bills passed in the Legislature. Passage of the Supply Act constitutes the statutory authorization by the Legislature of the government's spending program for the fiscal year. As such, it has far-reaching implications for the people of this province. Without spending authority, most payments to the broader public sector could not be made. I find it very interesting that the member opposite is arguing against this supply bill when it's close to Christmas and these individuals want to get paid; they want to buy Christmas gifts, and I don't understand why he would want to block this bill.

Interjection.

Mr McDonald: Mr Phillips, it is Christmastime. I think these employees need to get paid.

Without spending authority, most payments to the broader public sector cannot be made. That includes nursing homes, hospitals, doctors, municipalities, general welfare recipients, children's aid societies and supplier accounts. The Supply Act provides the Legislature with authority for spending from the estimates and supplementary estimates that have been put before this House and that have received concurrence of the House. We want to ensure that programs and services on which Ontarians depend, and which are run by members of the broader public service, are available when required.

We need to ensure that this important bill receives the authorization it needs from the Legislature so the government can continue to spend responsibly. However, part of being a fiscally responsible government means we must be accountable to the people of Ontario. We are responsible for ensuring that Ontario remains competitive and continues to grow and prosper.

As my colleague the honourable Minister of Finance recently announced in the 2002 Economic Outlook and Fiscal Review, Ontario's economy is in much better shape than many would have predicted at this time last year. What's more, there remain grounds for cautious optimism for the next 12 months, and we have reason for believing that economic growth, although it might be modest in the year to come, will continue to make Ontario an even better place to work, live, invest and raise a family.

Our government's record of reducing taxes and red tape has contributed to an environment in which businesses have invested, spurring economic growth and job creation. When it comes to jobs, we are particularly proud of this record. In July 2000, the government met the Common Sense Revolution's five-year goal of creating 725,000 new jobs. The government's Blueprint promise would help fuel the creation of 825,000 more new jobs over five years. Well, this government is keeping its promises. Employment rose by 32,300 in September. October saw the creation of another 20,300 net new jobs. In November, 12,800 additional new jobs were created. Since reaching the first target in July 2000, Ontario has created another 295,800 net new jobs. More significantly, in November we were very proud to announce that job creation in Ontario since 1995 has topped the one million mark. That is an amazing milestone.

Since our government's first throne speech in September 1995, our province has surpassed the one million mark, with 1,020,800 net new jobs. Ontario employment has grown by 19.9% during that time period, compared with 14.4% for the rest of Canada and 7.3% for the United States. More than 80% of the one million net new jobs are full-time positions. More than half the employment gains in November were full-time positions, which rose by 7,400.

Job growth has been the fastest for natural and applied science occupations, which have risen by 58%, or 171,000 new jobs. Likewise, jobs in businesses, finance and administrative occupations have grown by more than 12%, which translates into a little more than 127,000 new jobs. That's good news.

The best news is that new jobs have not been limited to one or two sectors. Over the past seven years, job creation has been spread across most industries in Ontario. Employment in the construction industry has increased by some 37%. Employment in the manufacturing sector has increased by about 30%. Jobs in the professional, scientific, and management service industries have grown by more than 40%. That's pretty impressive.

The demographics of job growth are equally impressive. Since 1995, women have gained 508,000 new jobs, or 51.4% of all job gains; men gained 479,700 new jobs, or 48.6%.

Ontario's spectacular record of job growth since September 1995 includes 147,000 net new jobs for young people aged 15-24, which make up 14% of all jobs created in Ontario. Youth employment gains in Ontario since 1995 have accounted for an impressive 44% of youth job growth in Canada. This is very significant, considering that Ontario counts for a 38% share of Canada's youth population. I'd like to proudly point out that youth job growth over the course of the past several years has been unbelievable. During 1998 to 2001, Ontario's youth gained 115,000 net new jobs. That is more than in any other four-year period on record. What's more, the job creation trend is continuing. In November, Ontario's youth gained 2,700 jobs, the fifth consecutive month of youth job gains. In addition, the unemployment rate for youth edged downward to 13.6% in November from 13.7% in October. These numbers translate into great news for Ontario's youth, but our government is not content to rest. We want to make a great situation even better.

Since 1995, our government has almost doubled the number of young people involved in youth labour market programs under Youth Opportunities Ontario. I understand I'm running out of time, but I can tell you this is great news for Ontario and I'm very proud to stand up for the youth of our province.

The Acting Speaker: The time for debate has now expired.

Mr Stockwell has moved second reading of Bill 229, An Act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for the public service for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 2003.

COLLISION REPAIR STANDARDS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LES NORMES DE RÉPARATION EN CAS DE COLLISION

Resuming the debate adjourned on December 11, 2002, on the motion for third reading of Bill 186, An Act to further highway safety and establish consumer protection through the regulation of the collision repair industry, and to make a complementary amendment to the Insurance Act / Projet de loi 186, Loi visant à améliorer la sécurité sur les voies publiques et à protéger les consommateurs en réglementant le secteur de la réparation en cas de collision et à apporter une modification complémentaire à la Loi sur les assurances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): The floor is now open for debate.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I've had the occasion to look at this bill and to participate somewhat in committee in regard to the bill. I want to say at the outset that we generally support where this bill is going. We think it brings some long-due consumer protection to consumers across Ontario when it comes to collision repairs. We know there have been some issues, that consumers have felt they have been wronged by. What this bill purports to do is to give consumers a little bit of added protection when it comes to their vehicles that are involved—

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: I'm coming in a minute.

As I said, the bill gives an opportunity for the consumer to get some protection under when it comes to an accident. Basically, it will give the opportunity for the consumer, when there is an accident, first of all, to make sure that those who are in the business are certified, registered etc, and at the same time give the consumer the ability to choose their own certified repair person to work on their car.

Before we go any further, I want to make sure we have the complete attention of the House. I'd like to move adjournment of the House at this point.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nays."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members; this will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1852 to 1922.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour of Mr Bisson's motion will please rise and remain standing. Thank you.

Those opposed to the motion will please rise and remain standing.

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The nays are 63; the ayes are 0.

The Acting Speaker: I with some confidence declare the motion lost.

Mr Bisson: That was a very close vote indeed. I'm heartened by the support I got against that motion.

I had the opportunity to go through this entire bill and I just want to put on the record a couple of things. First of all, as I said originally, we're going to support this bill. We think it provides a certain degree of consumer protection to people who come into contact with the auto repair industry. We do believe, however, there are some changes that could have been made to strengthen the bill. But at this late stage of the game you can't have everything that you want when it comes to a bill. I certainly support the direction it goes in, but I just want to speak very quickly to a couple of issues.

One of them is that the standards and requirements will help prevent operators with a licence who fail to pay their taxes and refuse to pay their workers' compensation premiums from operating. As New Democrats, we think that's important because we believe that, first of all, every operator should be respectful of the laws of Ontario when it comes to workers' compensation and health and safety, and of course everybody should pay their taxes. If you have somebody who's not doing that, that would be a violation of the act and it would basically put the operator in a position of having lost their licence.

The second part is that this particular bill will protect consumers from the high-pressure tactics that are often played by insurance companies when it comes to being forced to go to a particular shop, and we call that the preferred garage list or the preferred auto repair list. That is quite frustrating, because people often know—sometimes you'll be in a community where you've been dealing with a particular auto shop for some time and, for whatever reason, the insurance company decides that particular shop you've been dealing with is not on the list and you're barred as the insured person from being able to go to the shop of your choice. We think it's important that consumers do have choice when it comes to selecting their shop, and this is one part of the bill we agree with and think is not a bad idea.

Where I have a bit of concern is in the enforcement of the bill, and that's why I think it's important we have to have this debate tonight, because who knows, anything can happen in the Legislature. We could agree by way of unanimous consent at one point to put a few amendments to give the bill a few more teeth, because one of the concerns that I have is that we're going to be creating a board that basically is going to have the ability to hear complaints from consumers if they feel that they've not been done right by by the auto repair shop they've gone to. That consumer is going to be able to go to the board to raise that complaint, but what happens once the board has ruled I think is where the weakness is. We think there should be a little bit more toughness when it comes to the power that is given to the boards themselves.

I also think it's important that people understand why we're having this debate tonight.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Why?

Mr Bisson: That's what I'm saying: I think it's important because we find ourselves here tonight debating a bill that, although we have some difficulty with it, at the end we're going to pass. We think debate is important in order to provide for an opportunity to hopefully get the government to accept a few late amendments by way of unanimous consent, but we find ourselves here because last night we had an opportunity as New Democrats, with the support of the Liberals, to put some pressure on the government, by way of tactics that we sometimes use in this House, to have a number of private members' bills passed. It's quite unfortunate, because I think, as I think most members do, private members' bills are an important component of what we do here in the Legislature. There are members of the Liberal caucus who have private members' bills, like Mr Colle, who has the puppy mill, and other members who have bills in this House in the Liberal caucus. I have a private member's bill, my good friend Marilyn Churley has the adoption bill, and a bunch of Conservative members have private bills as well.

As the opposition, being led by New Democrats, we were finally in a position to say, "We can exert some pressure on the government to try to force them into some kind of deal to allow some of the other private members' bills to pass." Unfortunately, because both the whip and the House leader of the Liberal Party decided to feather their own nests by making their own deals, we found ourselves in a position of having lost the floor last night when it came to the possibility of holding it up.

I think one of the unfortunate victims in this is Mr Colle, because Mr Colle has a bill that deals with puppy mills. I quite frankly would have been a lot happier to support Mr Colle's bill, because I think his bill went a lot further than the bill that we voted on here earlier this afternoon, and that's the reason I voted against the bill. I think it's rather unfortunate for Mr Colle to be put in that position. Because Mr Bartolucci, as the whip for the Liberals, decided to cook a deal to be able to pass his own private member's bill, he left Mr Colle to hang, who I think had a bill that was strong and that most members of the House would have supported. Certainly I have to believe that if we supported Mrs Munro's bill on the issue of puppy mills, we would have gotten support for Mr Colle's bill, which was even stronger, because this House has pronounced itself by a majority in supporting the concept of dealing with the issue of puppy mills. So it's rather unfortunate that the Liberal whip cooked a side deal and left his own caucus members out to dry when it comes to being able to deal with bills, and I think that's pretty terrible.

The other thing I find a little bit awful is that we found ourselves in a position where, when this whole deal was coming down and pressure was being put on by the Conservative House leader to have the Liberals vote a certain way by not allowing the bells to be rung, the Liberals basically caved. I know in the process we had yesterday—and Mr Bradley was the go-between, I imagine, between the Liberal leader's office and what was happening in the House when Mr Caplan had the floor—there was a message sent back that they should succumb to the pressures that were put forward by the Conservative Party. It's unfortunate, because I distinctly heard in this House yesterday, Mr Speaker, as you well know, that the government House leader threatened to slash the Liberal caucus budget if they rang bells in order to prolong debate last night, and I think that's rather unfortunate.

Mr Ted Chudleigh (Halton): You're disgusting.

Mr Bisson: I think what's disgusting is what your House leader did last night, but that's another story.

I think it's rather unfortunate, because bills like Bill 186 are important. Mr Sampson—and Mr Klees first—brought forward this particular bill, which I think is a good service to the consumers of Ontario. I respect Mr Sampson and Mr Klees for having brought forward this private member's bill. I think we should be passing more of these bills. I know Mr Klees is an honourable member. I have a lot of respect for him. I've worked with him on a number of things. I've worked with Mr Sampson. I think it's important that members have an ability to pass these bills.

Unfortunately, we find ourselves in a position sometimes, as we have far too often, where the government says, "Because we don't accept the adoption bill of Ms Churley, we're not going to make a deal with the New Democrats." Of course, we can't agree because we're in a Catch-22: if we don't get something as our caucus, how can we allow other bills to go?

What was rather unfortunate last night was that we were finally in a position—and this is the part that really made me mad last night and why, quite frankly, I went over the top. As I said last night, I apologize for that, because it was quite unbecoming as far as my decorum in the House. I got really mad last night because here we were finally in a position to exert pressure on the government, with both the Liberal caucus and the New Democratic caucus finally coming together to block what was happening in the House so that we could get a deal, so we could pass a private member's bill like Mr Colle's puppy mill bill and other private members' bills like Ms Churley's adoption bill. Because there was a deal cooked by the Liberal whip with the Conservative House leader, all the Liberal backbenchers who had bills got lost in that deal, all the Conservative backbenchers who had private members' bills got lost, and so did we as New Democrats. I had a bill, Mr Martin had a bill, Mr Prue had a bill—no, his was defeated; it was on rent control, that's right—and Ms Marilyn Churley of course lost her adoption bill. So it's rather unfortunate that we get into these situations.

I just wanted to put on the record tonight, because it's the only opportunity I have, that I think bills like Bill 186 are a true testament to what this House can do properly. I believe private members' bills are very important. I think they're one of the ways we can do legislation in this House that is a great service to the people of Ontario.

I want to personally thank Mr Klees and Mr Sampson for having brought this bill forward, because I think they're doing not only their constituents but my constituents a favour.

Mr Kormos: A very progressive bill.

Mr Bisson: It's a very progressive move—

Mr Kormos: Left wing.

Mr Bisson: I was going to get to that. It's a very progressive move on the part of this government, because this government originally came in—

Mr Kormos: This government? It was individuals.

Mr Bisson: Individuals, yes, to be fair. The mantra of the government has been, "We don't believe in regulation," and these two members agree that the proper thing is that sometimes we need to regulate industry in order to protect consumers. At least those two members, Mr Klees and Mr Sampson, figured out that it's important to pass some form of regulation to protect small business, to protect the consumer and to make sure you have a regime that is fair for both the business operators and the consumers. I really want to thank Mr Klees and Mr Sampson for having brought that forward because I think our society works better when we're able to do those kinds of things. It's a bit of a departure from where the government is going, because we know the government doesn't believe in regulation, but at least there are a few independent members there who feel it's important enough to do something.

I say again, it was rather unfortunate last night that both the Liberal House leader and the Liberal whip had to cook a deal that killed any possibility of passing any of the other Liberal private members' bills, any of the Tory backbenchers' bills and any of our bills. I think that's rather unfortunate. It's a little bit like the old saying—what do they say?—like somebody trying to feather their own nest. I look in the House and I say, oh, where is the Liberal whip tonight?

Mr Kormos: He's sleeping in his feathered nest.

Mr Bisson: Well, maybe the nest is comfortable tonight. I think that's rather unfortunate, because he got what he wanted last night, and he's gone. His colleagues I think would be upset. I know I was certainly upset. That's why I went over the top last night. I was livid on two points. I was livid on the point that it was an injustice to all members that the Liberal whip cooked a side deal to get his own bill, and froze out his Liberal colleagues and his counterparts in other parties. I was really mad about it. I think it's important that we allow bills like that to go forward. That's why I think it's important that the government finally come to its senses in this debate and say, "Listen, we should allow some of the other bills to go forward," rather than just using the government majority to do what they're doing here tonight.

But I want to get back to Bill 186 because there are a few points that need to be put on the record. I want to make sure that Mr Klees, at least, and Mr Sampson and other members who believe in this bill, as I and my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus believe, as I said in the beginning, that it is a step in the right direction, progressive, a real left-wing thing to do. I appreciate that, but I think that maybe we didn't go far enough when it came to the enforcement provisions of this bill. I would much rather have had a provision that said if a consumer feels they've been wronged, because either the insurance company fails to comply with this legislation or the auto repair shop for whatever reason didn't do work to the satisfaction of the consumer, or feels the price is a little bit more than they should be paying—I would have liked to see something in this legislation with a few more teeth when it comes to being able to make sure that there is a deterrent for both the insurance company and the auto repair shop from doing wrong to the consumer.

I want to put on the record that most of the industry is very respectable. Quite frankly, most of the industry probably wouldn't even need this bill. I look at auto repair shops like Timmins Collision and Bouchard Collision and Dan's and others, and they do really good work. They're reputable business people. They care deeply about what they do. They're professionals about their jobs. They want to make sure that they give the best possible work to the consumer for the best possible price. Those people, I know, will do a good job. But every now and then, unfortunately, there are some unscrupulous people, or sometimes it could just be a question of incompetence. I think this bill would be much strengthened if the government would allow it to go into committee—at this point it would be difficult to get to committee of the whole, because we are in third reading, but if the government would allow a unanimous consent motion to be able to deal with trying to make a few amendments at the last moment. I'm going to be calling on the government to see if they're—we're going to give them another 30-minute opportunity by way of bells. I want you to understand that my calling later for adjournment of debate is not to be deleterious. I want you, Speaker, to understand that. It's to give the government a 30-minute opportunity to reflect on some of the suggestions I'm making in this debate tonight. Good bill, but let's put a few teeth in it when it comes to the enforcement provisions, when it comes to dealing with what might be an unscrupulous practice on the part of both the auto insurance industry and the auto repair industry.

The other thing is the collision repair advisory board. As far as its makeup, I would have been a little bit happier if we could have found a different way of structuring how that board is to be made up. I'm not going to condemn entirely the way you structured it in the bill. I think, again, it's better than nothing. I want to give Mr Klees and Mr Sampson the credit they deserve, because I know they worked hard on this. If Mr Klees still would have been not in cabinet, he would have advocated a committee. Thank God, he has a good colleague like Mr Sampson, who's prepared to carry this bill, because Mr Sampson has a lot of, I believe, experience in this kind of work. I think you could have picked no one better to help you put this bill forward than Mr Sampson. So I just say again that one of the prosions I would like to see is, when it comes to the makeup of this board, that we'd have a little bit of a discussion, as we're having this 30-minute bell, to be able to deal with how to make sure that board is a little more representative. We can talk about that privately because we don't have enough time in debate.

I just want to say again, for the record, that it's rather unfortunate that we find ourselves in a position where the Liberal whip cooked himself a deal, basically froze out all his Liberal counterparts, when it came to being able to get a private member's bill. He feathered his own nest and he got his bill. We gave unanimous consent to that bill. This is the thing that has to be said. We were four members in this House and we agreed that Mr Bartolucci's bill should have passed. But then for him to turn on the New Democrats, who were here, fighting in order to make sure other members got their bills I think was rather unfortunate, because we thought Mr Bartolucci's bill was good. Our party gave unanimous consent. I thought we showed to the Liberal caucus that we were fair in our approach to trying to work out a strategy to exert some pressure on the government, and unfortunately, because Mr Bartolucci and Mr Duncan cooked a deal with the Conservative House leader, all the Liberal members got themselves frozen out when—

Mr Bisson: Oh, I was here last night. I think that's unfortunate.

So that we have proper time to have a little bit of discussion while we're still in this debate, I'm going to call for adjournment of the debate so that I'm able to talk to some of the other members about possible amendments to this bill.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member has moved the adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1941 to 2011.

The Speaker: Mr Bisson has moved adjournment of the debate.

All those in favour will please rise and remain standing.

All those opposed will please rise and remain standing.

Clerk of the House: The ayes are 0; the nays are 46.

The Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The member for Timmins-James Bay had the floor.

Mr Bisson: We seem to have lost 15, but that's all right. I just want to indicate to the House that I've had an opportunity to speak to both Mr Klees and Mr Sampson. I have some indication that they're prepared to give us some leeway on regulation in order to address some of the concerns we have with the bill. Again, I want to say that the bill is certainly a step in the right direction. It is going to provide for some consumer protection, and we as New Democrats believe that is an important component of what we need to do here in representing our constituencies. I want to believe that Mr Klees and Mr Sampson are both honourable members and that they will accept the recommendations we're making when we go to regulation. Because of that spirit of co-operation, I would move unanimous consent—

Mr Kormos: Seek.

Mr Bisson: I know what I'm doing—move unanimous consent for third reading on this bill.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: With your permission, because I did intend to speak, could I get unanimous consent to just make a remark on this bill?

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed. Minister?

Hon Mr Klees: First of all, I want to thank the members of the opposition for agreeing to that unanimous consent, and I want to thank my colleagues who didn't for the privilege.

The reason I wanted to say a couple of things is that this has been a six-year project on the part of many people. First of all, I want to thank my colleague Mr Rob Sampson, the member from Mississauga Centre, for agreeing to step in at a time when I was unable to carry the bill forward due to circumstances. I want to also acknowledge that when I first moved introduction of this bill, I did so at that time in honour of Mr Heinz Fuhrman, who is deceased but who was a stalwart and an advocate for the collision repair industry. At that time his wife, Kris, was in the audience here and she took great pride in the groundwork that her husband laid in preparation for a piece of legislation like this, because he advocated for many years to bring this kind of direction to this industry.

I want to thank all of the other people within the industry who worked with us over the last number of years to bring this legislation to this point, and I want to thank members of this House for supporting us today.

Mr Bob Wood (London West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: With this spirit of unanimity breaking out, I seek unanimous consent for immediate second and third reading without debate of Bill 193, An Act to proclaim a day and a month to celebrate Hellenic heritage in Ontario, and for immediate third reading of Bill 113, An Act to honour firefighters who have died in the line of duty.

The Speaker: The member has asked for unanimous consent regarding Bills 193 and 113. Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

Mr Kormos: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent for second reading of Bill 222, An Act to proclaim Genocide Memorial Week in Ontario.

The Speaker: Mr Kormos has asked for unanimous consent on second reading of Bill 222. Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent for second reading and third reading of Bill 35. This is an act to proclaim Irish Heritage Day in Ontario.

The Speaker: Mr O'Toole has asked for unanimous consent for second and third reading of Bill 35. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mr Bisson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would seek unanimous consent for two minutes in order to conclude the debate on the bill that we just passed. I asked for unanimous consent and I got it, but I would like to have a few minutes to put a couple of things on the record in regard to the bill.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm asking for unanimous consent once again for third reading and a final vote on Bill 77, An Act—

Interjections.

The Speaker: You can read the title. Sorry.

Ms Churley: Sorry, Mr Speaker; I got distracted. The Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act.

The Speaker: I thank the member. The member has asked for unanimous consent for third reading of Bill 77. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mr Kormos: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent for third reading without debate of Bill 113, An Act to honour firefighters who have died in the line of duty.

The Speaker: We just did that, I'm afraid.

Interjection: There are two of them.

The Speaker: OK. He's asking for third reading of Bill 113. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I move third reading of Bill 117, Congenital Heart Defects Awareness Day Act.

The Speaker: You've asked for consent to move third reading of Bill 117. Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like unanimous consent to move third reading of Bill 140, An Act to proclaim Nikkei Heritage Day.

The Speaker: Mr Wettlaufer has asked for unanimous consent for reading of Bill 140. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

2020

M. Bisson: Appel au règlement, monsieur le Président: Je demanderais le consentement unanime pour passer la Loi 145, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les services en français pour prévoir que certains rapports sont disponibles simultanément en français et en anglais.

The Speaker: Mr Bisson has requested unanimous consent regarding Bill 145. Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

Mr O'Toole: With your indulgence, Mr Speaker, I seek unanimous consent to move second and third reading of Bill 62, An Act proclaiming Physical Fitness Day.

The Speaker: Mr O'Toole has asked for unanimous consent for second and third reading of Bill 62. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, I seek unanimous consent for every bill that is on the order paper right now.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

The member for Perth-Middlesex.

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): I want to take this opportunity to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move third reading without debate of Bill 116, An Act to proclaim Archives Awareness Week.

The Speaker: The member has asked for unanimous consent for third reading of Bill 116. Is there unanimous consent? I heard some noes.

The government House leader.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I believe I have consent to move Bill Pr9 for second and third reading.

The Speaker: The minister has asked for consent for Bill Pr9. Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

ELLIOTT ACT, 2002

Mr Arnott moved second reading of the following bill: Bill Pr9, An Act respecting The Elliott.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Mr Arnott moved third reading of the following bill: Bill Pr9, An Act respecting The Elliott.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I believe I have consent to move second and third reading of Bill Pr11.

The Speaker: Mr Stockwell has requested unanimous consent for second and third reading of Bill Pr11. Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

TOWN OF ERIN ACT, 2002

Mr Arnott moved second reading of the following bill: Bill Pr11, An Act respecting The Town of Erin.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Mr Arnott moved third reading of the following bill: Bill Pr11, An Act respecting The Town of Erin.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, I would like to wish everyone a merry Christmas, a happy new year and happy holidays.

I move adjournment of the House.

The Speaker: Mr Stockwell has moved adjournment of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

This House stands adjourned until Monday, March 17, 2003, at 1:30 of the clock.

The House adjourned at 2024.
